"'This is a very curious coincidence. I had horse racing in my mind when I came in here, and, lo, you have been reading about it. At my hotel this morning I overheard one man say to another that a horse named Buttercup in the New Orleans races, which are to be run today, would be sure to come in ahead of anything, and yet she would be a 100 to 1 shot in the betting. Why shouldn't we make a little money for the heathen, Mr. Bowser? For has not Providence flung this thing in our faces that we might aid a downtrodden race to lift themselves up? We invest a dollar, and we get $100 in return. Nobody is at all injured, and hundreds of the heathens are benefited.'

"Think of it, Mrs. Bowser—100 to 1 and we are dead sure of it. By John, but luck is surely knocking at the door!"

"You let that man talk you over, did you?" demanded Mrs. Bowser.

"Why, we talked and talked, and the more we talked the more I was obliged to view matters from his standpoint. He convinced me that horse racing was not criminal and that I must have lost thousands of dollars by not placing bets. He also convinced me that the heathen were good fellows, but were misunderstood by the public, and in ten minutes he had satisfied me that I could not do too much for them."

"Bosh!" exclaimed Mrs. Bowser.

"Keep your voice down, dear. I told you this was an awful secret which must not be betrayed. The result of all our talk was that each of us should bet a hundred dollars on Buttercup and punish the bookmakers and benefit the heathen at one and the same time. We invest a hundred dollars apiece, and we draw down $10,000 each. He returns to Africa with every cent of his money to supply the wants of the heathens, and I give you a thousand dollars of my winnings to buy yourself silk stockings. I use the other $9,000 to buy us a country home and an auto. Where have you got the hundred dollars, Mrs. Bowser?"

"Mr. Bowser," she said after a look at him, "you are being made a tool of—a chump—a come-on, as they call it. It is a regular put up job, and you will lose every dollar you risk."

"Woman, don't you credit me with having any brains?" he almost shouted "I am not an idiot for a designing villain to toy with. Our winnings are just as sure to come as tomorrow's sun is to rise. If you do anything to obstruct our scheme I shall never forgive you. A hundred to one, and as sure as shooting. Think of it, Mrs. Bowser—think of it!"

Before Mrs. Bowser could answer Maggie, the cook, who had been dutifully listening at the foot of the basement stairs, came running up to exclaim, "Oh, Mr. Bowser, make some money for me!"

"Maggie!" chided Mrs. Bowser.

"But, ma'am, you wouldn't stand in the way of a poor girl making $1,000?" was wailed by the cook. "Think of how hard I have to work for my money, and think of my going home to my poor widowed mother and dropping $1,000 in her lap and telling her to buy a whole department store. Mr. Bowser, I want you to put up $10 for me. I have got that much in my trunk upstairs."

"I will do it, Maggie," answered Mr. Bowser. "You are also a game sport and shall be given a fair show. Get your money here and, Mrs. Bowser, you hand me over the hundred for the missionary is waiting for me up on the corner."

Mrs. Bowser opened her mouth to make further protests, but the odds were 2 to 1, and she said no more. Maggie ran upstairs and got her money, and the hundred dollars was taken from the machine drawer and with all the wealth safe in his pocket Mr. Bowser hurried away from the house. The missionary was leaning against an iron fence on the corner, and his solemn face lighted up as Mr. Bowser came up with a smile.

"You got it?" he asked.

"Sure," was the reply.

"Then we will go along. I am anxious to see my work among the heathen advance as soon as possible. While you were absent at your house I went over the thing in my mind and I could not see where plucking the bookmakers for the benefit of our dark skinned fellow men could possibly be construed as wrong."

"It can't be," replied Mr. Bowser—"it can't be. It is a wonder to me that I ever held the ideas that I did, and I shall never return to them. I may even take one day a week off and go up and see the races. I may even wager a few dollars on a horse that's not more than a 10 to 1 shot. Let us go to what they call a pool room and place our money and make a start on the road to wealth. Let me also think of the African heathen."

Mr. Bowser had heard of pool rooms, but he had never entered one. In fact, he had never gazed at the outer side of one. He therefore allowed the missionary to take the lead, and the said missionary seemed to have the utmost confidence in his abilities as a guide.

In due time a pool room was discovered and their money placed on Buttercup at the odds mentioned. When this had been accomplished Mr. Bowser and his friend took seats to wait for news from the racetrack. While they waited they nudged each other. They also made a clucking noise with their tongues. They likewise bestowed beaming smiles on each other. Buttercup was in the first race, and they had not long to wait for the voice of the caller making his announcement as to the progress of the contest. Buttercup was announced in various positions from first to third, but, strange to relate, did not finish first, second or third She may have stopped somewhere to look at the landscape, or she may have fallen and broken her neck. Such trifles are seldom mentioned in a well organized pool room. Mr. Bowser and his missionary friend chuckled and smiled as the race progressed and then sat in a daze, and it was one of the pool room men who had to jog them back into life again by saying:

"Come, now, you ducks, get out of here. The race has been lost by your horse, and there is nothing more to be said about it. What induced you to put your money on an old skate like her?"

Mr. Bowser and the missionary parted at the door. There were no farewell words between them. Where the missionary went to is of no account, but Mr. Bowser took a car for his home Mrs. Bowser and the cook were waiting for him when he entered the house.

"Gimme my thousand dollars, Mr. Bowser!" exclaimed the cook.

"And give me mine," added Mrs Bowser.

Mr. Bowser drew himself up like a man who had determined to fight desperately for his life, but from his half open lips no words issued. He gasped once or twice and then fell at full length on the floor and rolled his eyes and shuddered. It was only then that the women knew that the 100 to 1 shot had pierced his noble heart.

HOW

To Plan the Vegetable Garden and Plant It

CAREFUL planning while the frost is still in the ground is a test of the successful gardener. The garden planned a month or more in advance of first real spring days is the one from which the best results are usually obtained. In fact, many of the most desirable products of the garden are those which demand a week or two gentle nursing indoors or under the glass of the hotbed. Then, too, the man with a limited amount of garden space will find it well worth his while to lay his plans well in advance.

By consulting the garden manuals and giving attention to seasons of maturity he will be able to lay out his garden so as to be able to utilize every inch of space during almost the entire season. If he does not draw up his plans before he begins to cultivate he will undoubtedly find that much valuable space has been lost through lack of forethought.

Certain vegetables grow best during the spring and early summer, while from others the best results are gained by late plantings. In many cases the soil used for the early vegetables can be resown later in the season with later, or warm weather, vegetables. The gardener should acquaint himself with these conditions.

Beans and corn, for example, will flourish during almost the entire spring and summer. The first planting of these vegetables should be made about the beginning of May. Peas may be planted in April. From then until the 1st of August plantings should be made about every two or three weeks. This will insure the gardener a seasonable supply of these vegetables throughout the season.

A SPRING TIP.

How to Plan and Win Success In Your Gardening.

There are few things more fascinating than the development of a well planned garden. True, it will mean many hours' manual labor to prevent the weeds and insects from ruining your early spring labors, and the watering can or the garden hose will have to be called into use frequently, but labor will pay large dividends in benefits to the gardener, to say nothing of the reduction in the weekly budget of the household.

The tomato vines will need to be tied up and watched for cut worms, the corn will have to be hoed and so will the beans; the lettuce will have to be transplanted and the beets thinned out, and there will be a hundred and one other precautions that will have to be taken to insure the proper results, but each operation will have its special benefits and lessons that will more than repay for the trouble.

And during the development of his garden the wise gardener will note his successes and defeats and store that information away for use the following year. Every failure will be an experience to be avoided the following year and every success an experience to be enlarged upon. He will learn things for himself, and every bit of knowledge gained in that way will be worth a whole chapter written for his benefit by some one else.

HOW TO PROTECT YOUR PIANO.—Half the pianos of this country catch colds exactly as we do. They get hoarse or have a cough or a stiff note or some similar complaint, which cannot be cured by home remedies, but which requires tedious and expensive doctoring. In order to prevent these avoidable ailments a piano should be kept in a moderately warm room, where the temperature is even, say 60 or 70 degrees, the year round, not cold one day and hot the next. The instrument should not, however, be too near the source of heat. It should be kept closed and covered with a felt cloth when not in use, particularly in frosty weather. Always place the piano close to but not against an inside wall.

How to Fix Tears in Bronze Kid Shoes When the Children Stub Them.

Often when bronze kid shoes are almost new a small piece of the kid will get torn off or turn up and still remain hanging to the shoe. Straighten out the wrinkles, moisten the glue side of a postage stamp or envelope flap, apply quickly to both raw sides of the kid, press into place and hold firmly for a few minutes. The glue of the stamp or envelope flap is so evenly spread that there is no surplus amount to run on to the outside of the kid, making it sticky. This can also be used to mend most any kind of soft kid shoes.

How to Treat a Bad Headache That Comes From Nerves.

In cases of violent headaches it frequently acts as a great relief to bathe the forehead with a sponge wrung out of very hot water. Repeat this as often as the sponge cools. When the head feels rested dash on cold water, wipe dry and lie down for awhile, keeping the eyes closed. Next sit up and turn the head around from side to side slowly until tired. This will have a wonderfully beneficial effect on the circulation and will ward off headache if persisted in.

THE DRESSY FROCK.

How Fussiness May Be Subdued to Good Silhouette After All.

Fashioned of white net ruffles and a scant piece of figured crepe de chine cornflower blue and white, this pretty spring gown may be easily copied. The seven ruffles are edged with narrow lace, and the peplum of the waist folds into an elongated drape forming a front panel. A bertha collar finishes the surplice, which takes a crushed girdle of cornflower blue taffeta.

A Point to Consider.

"Dad," said the prodigal son, "now that I'm home again and have had my fling, I'm going to do something to make you proud of me."

"All right, son," answered the cautious father. "That's the way for you to talk, but I will reserve my congratulations until you make one point clear."

"Well, dad?"

A WATTEAU MODEL.

A Pretty Spring Bonnet Reminiscent of Other Days.

This milan straw is strapped with wide blue velvet ribbon, a flat shape with a bunch of little pink flowers massed in the back. The effect is charming for youth and a grateful variation from the banked, high designs.

Millinery Jottings.

Buttons have entered the realm of millinery and are used on sports hats, and by this are meant real buttons; buttons used for fastening purposes.

Hatpins, too, in either pearl, brass or nickel add an ornamental touch to many a hat for spring.

Ostrich novelties effectively change an ordinary hat into one of unusual effectiveness. Wing shaped are some of these ostrich novelties, which may be bent into any desired shape, for the quill is easily persuaded to assume any shape or position.

Many straw ornaments are used on the Paris creations, and most of them are formed of the modish shiny straw.

Appliques of fruit are most popular, and all the small berries are to be had as well as the larger fruits. Quite as unusual are the flowers that are seen in profusion, and after a period when flowers were not considered smart we find that the designers have turned out more beautiful and original models than have ever been seen before.

Mint Sauce.

Pick all the leaves from a large mint stalk and mince as fine as possible. Place in a large bowl with six tablespoonfuls of sugar, three-fourths of a pint of vinegar, one-half pint of cold water and one tablespoonful of salt.

Mix thoroughly with a wooden spoon; then place in a large bottle, cover tightly; shake the bottle always before using.

Instead of the ordinary plebeian "apple sauce" the addition of mint turns it into a highly tempting dessert.

FOR SPRING WEDDINGS.

One Attractive Way to Give the Bride a Shower.

With spring already upon us, the thought of spring weddings is now in the air. This is the ripe season for linen showers and other showers of household necessaries given to the bride by all her friends. The girl who is to be married in April will be the recipient of many an entertainment before she is safely wedded, but she will enjoy nothing more than a shower if her friends have any novel ideas on the subject.

The chief point in a shower must always be its surprise; otherwise it would not be a shower. If you are thinking of giving such an affair for some friend who is soon to be married be sure that every detail is kept a secret from her. That is half the fun.

A novel idea for a linen shower can be executed in the following way: Invite the bride to be to spend an evening at your home with a few old friends. See that she arrives the first and is comfortably seated and chatting when the other guests begin to arrive. Of course the latter are in the secret or else there would be no shower.

Each guest must come in carrying an umbrella. The bride may not notice the first one, but she will certainly remark before long that every one who enters carries an umbrella. She will probably ask before the last one arrives if it is raining, in which case the guest questioned should answer, "No, but it looks like a shower."

When all the guests have arrived each one must gain possession of her own umbrella in case it has been laid aside on her entrance. At a given signal, which should be some such remark from the hostess as "Did you say it looked like a shower?" the guests should all open their umbrellas with the answer, "It certainly does."

From the steel ribs of each umbrella should be suspended by a string the parcel holding the piece of linen which the guest intends to give the bride. Any big bundles, like a tablecloth, will make the umbrella a bit bulky when closed, but in such case the guest will have to smuggle her umbrella in unnoticed. But most linen pieces can be done up in such small parcels that they can easily be concealed in a closed umbrella.

At the signal to open the parcels will all hang down by their strings. The guests must then hold their umbrellas over the bride-to-be's head. The hostess provides her with scissors to cut down her various bundles, and the point of the shower is made apparent.

A Hygiene Note.

When a child begins with a cold isolate it from the other children in the house and do not let it attend school until it is better. Not only is a cold contagious in itself, but in children a cold is often the beginning of a contagious disease, and it is not fair to other children to let them come in contact with a cold until it is proved to be nothing serious.

There is no better gargle or nose douche for a beginning inflammation than salt and water. Of course the solution must be weaker for the nose. Nose douches should be taken only on a doctor's advice, as the membrane of the nose is very delicate and the treatment must necessarily vary with the child. Never let the child go out of doors after spraying nose and throat.

Roxbury Cakes.

One-fourth cupful of butter, one-half cupful sour milk, one teaspoonful cinnamon, two eggs, one-half cupful of raisins, one-half cupful brown sugar, one-half cupful corn sirup, one and one-half cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful of soda, one-half cupful English walnuts.

Cream butter, add sugar and beaten egg yolks. Mix and sift dry ingredients and add to first mixture alternately with the corn sirup and the sour milk. Add egg whites beaten dry, chopped raisins and nuts. Bake in small pans. This will make eighteen to twenty little cakes.

Quite the Smartest Thing In Waists.

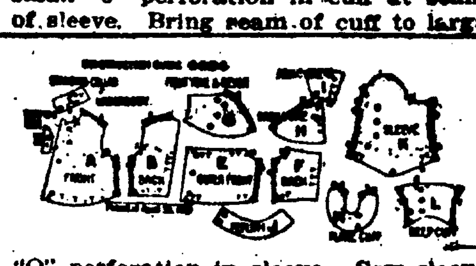
Soft silk crepe de Chine lends itself admirably to the development of this separate waist, which features a deep yoke and revers cut in one.

The new separate waist designs for spring exploit nothing more unique than this waist with its deep yoke and revers cut in one with the yoke. Silk crepe de Chine is used for its development, 2½ yards, 36 inches wide, being required. The design is built upon a sleeveless foundation, which requires 1 yard 36-inch material.

The home dressmaker should make a careful study of the construction guide before attempting to put the waist together. It is an easy matter to close the under-arm and shoulder seams of the lining, and then turn the hem. Next place the little vest into position. This may be made of lace or silk gauze.

Next, close the under-arm seam of the outer waist and hem the front, the center of which is indicated by large "O" perforations. Gather upper and lower edges of front, and lower edge of back between double "TT" perforations. Arrange on underbody, center-fronts, center-backs and under-arm seams even; stitch lower edges together. Stitch upper edge along cross-line of small "o" perforations in underbody, leaving the outer front free over the trimming piece.

Now, taking up the sleeve, first close seam as notched and gather lower edge. Close seam of deep cuff and sew to gathered edge of sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve. Bring seam of cuff to large



"O" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at seam, easing in any fulness.

For the yoke, first close shoulder seam as notched. Face front from front edge to 1 inch beyond small "o" perforations; roll on small "o" perforations to form rever. Sew collar to neck edge as notched, and underneath front yoke section large "O" perforations even. Finish the lower edge of yoke with a straight gathered ruffle. Arrange on underbody, center-fronts and center-backs even; stitch lower edge over upper edge of outer front and back, leaving the yoke free over the sleeve.

If outlined with a narrow frill of lace or self-material the yoke will have shoulder cape effect.

TABLE LINEN.

Hints About the Keeping of Your Favorite Fad.

"Table linen must be properly handled in the laundry if you would have it retain its freshness," says Marie Strong bleaches must never be used on fine table linens. Of course the linen is often badly spotted and needs to be cleaned in some way, but boiling water removes coffee spots, cold water removes cocoa stains and sunshine removes many more spots. When stronger agents must be used they should be applied and removed by intelligent hands.

They should be allowed to remain on the spots just long enough to eradicate them and then rinsed thoroughly out with clear water, for if they remain on too long they remove not only spots, but pieces of the linen.

For fruit stains pour boiling water through them while the stains are damp, if possible. If they dry on rub them with lard and put through the usual washing process. Some old fashioned housewives have their table linen dipped in buttermilk to whiten it. The linen is allowed to remain in the buttermilk for a day or two, if necessary, and is then thoroughly rinsed in cool, clear water and later in warm water.

Always dry linen out of doors in the sunshine. If possible have a little bleaching green of grass. Table linen must be quite damp when it is ironed, and it must be ironed until it is perfectly dry. Napkins should be ironed on both sides, and a tablecloth, too, to give it the best appearance.

Physical Fitness Woman's Big Asset.

No woman nowadays can afford not to be well.

Ill health—even mere "delicacy," with no positive manifestation of disease—costs too much. There is the obvious, direct expense of doctors' bills and medicines. But indirectly you pay a much higher price for not being well. If you are a wage earner your lost time and energy, due to a lack of physical strength, must also be computed in lost dollars.

Poor health will interfere constantly with your social good times. It will mar whatever beauty you may possess sooner than any other cause. If you are a wife and mother illness and weakness will interfere with your duties and the comfort of those dear to you. Whatever your station in life you will find that the role of invalid and weakling is no longer fashionable or popular. For awhile you will have the sympathy of your friends, but the best of them will be bored with you sooner or later. They can't help it. A worship of physical fitness is in the air, and instead of whining and pitying yourself you must bend all your energies to the task of becoming well.

Cinnamon Rolls.

When it is desired to mold bread for baking take one loaf on a molding board, roll out to nearly a quarter of an inch thick, spread quickly with butter, brown sugar, white sugar and cinnamon. Roll up and cut off one and a half inch pieces. Have considerable melted fat in a dripping pan and dip the top of each piece into the fat. Allow them to rise until after the rest of the bread is baked, so that the rolls may be very light. They should be baked from twenty minutes to half an hour.

ABOUT GARNISHING

Some of the Sprigs That Make Food Attractive.

THEY APPEAL TO THE EYE.

There Are Two Sorts of Trimming, One For Flavor and One For Decoration—Garnishing Often Turns a Despised Dish Into a Favorite.

With spring spleeniness upon us, it is well for housewives to bait appetites. Very often a dish may be delicious to taste, but unattractive to the eye, and the eye judges it before the palate does. So make it attractive to the eye if you would have it a successful dish.

There are two sorts of garnishes—those that add flavor as well as decoration and those that are only decorative and do not add flavor. Mushrooms, for instance, served with a ragout of meat, add to both appearance and taste. A bright green leaf under half a muskmelon adds only to appearance. This second class of garnishes need not be served when they are used on the serving dish.

Parsley is perhaps the most useful garnish. In sprigs with cold meat, minced with soup and vegetables and salads, it is always fresh in color and tempting in taste.

Mushrooms are useful because, canned, they always can be kept on hand. And so can peas. A mound of canned peas served in the middle of an Irish stew makes it far daintier than a mound of plain boiled potatoes. Potatoes, however, can be used for garnishing. Scoop raw potatoes with a round scoop and boil them. Serve them with melted butter and parsley for a garnish, or force soft, mashed potatoes through a stiff paper cone and brown in the oven, or fry brown small rounds of potatoes, or use French fried potatoes, and potato garnish is suitable with cold meat.

Green and red peppers, too, can be used to garnish vegetables, meats and salads. An egg salad is much improved if it is dotted with bits of red pepper. Minced green pepper or shredded green pepper adds both taste and looks to potato and cabbage salad.

Beets and carrots can be cut in rings or stars, cooked tender very carefully and then used to garnish substantial meat dishes.

Barberries are one of the purely ornamental garnishes. Holly, too, can be used in season, and bits of evergreen can often be called on to help make a simple dish attractive.

Remember that the garnishing of a dish will often change it from something not liked to a favorite with the family.

BEDROOM SLIPPERS.

Various Nether Comforts That May Also Be Good Looking.

It is possible to have attractive bedroom slippers which match your negligee, or at least are in accord with it. There are endless varieties of "mules" in gay colored silk or satin, edged with silk cord and decorated with tiny rosebuds. This is the kind of work that the expert needlewoman enjoys, but besides such dainty trifles more sensible everyday ones can be bought which do not clash with one's beauty loving ideas.

Kid slippers, with low, comfortable heels, may be bought in pinks, blues and browns. Very similar to them are the felt styles, whose instep is decorated with a cut out design of the felt over a contrasting color.

White kid well covered with a Japanese embossed design are shown. Most luxurious are the slippers of bright quilted satin, whose ribbon rosettes hold a tiny rhinestone.

Made with only a toe covering, but minus the heels attached to "mules," are other models, some covered with white flannel, decorated with a satin bow; others, to be used en route to the bath, are made of checked toweling, the edges bound with corduroy and the sole being very woolly.

GETTING AFTER OAT DISEASE

Farm Bureau to Hold County-Wide Demonstrations. Druggists Cooperating.

The losses from oat smut have been increasing from year to year all over the State until at the present time it is one of the most serious diseases that the general farmers have to contend with. Last year in Oswego county it was found that the average loss per acre taken from a large number of fields was 17 per cent of the crop or about 7 bushels per acre. $60,000 is a conservative estimate of the loss in Oswego county alone based on the 20,000 acres of oats grown and allowing for the small acreage, the seed for which was treated.

It has been computed that the loss to the farmers of the entire state amounted to at least three million dollars last year, a loss which could easily have been prevented.

The Disease

The appearance of this diseace is very familiar to most farmers. The disease is not apparent until the head appears when it shows as a black mass that soon becomes dusty when exposed to the air. An examination shows that the kernel, hull, and chaff have been destroyed and transformed into this dusty black powder that is blown off with every breeze.

The cause of this diseased condition is a fungus parasite and the block dusty mass consists of its spores or reproductive bodies. These after being blown about fall into the open flowers and when, the hull closes about the kernel, are imprisoned with in. There they remain in a dormat condition until the seed is sown when the spores germinate and infect the young seedling before it appears above ground. The fungus grows within the stalk and when the flowering parts are formed it penetrates them and replaces them with it own spore mass.

There is a State-wide campaign being made this spring in anendeavor to stamp out this disease. The work in counties having farm bureaus is being done under the direction of the manager. In other counties Professor M. F. Barrus of the State College is leading in the work.

A majority of the druggists in this county are cooperating with the Farm Bureau and will make a window display featuring the oat smut treatment and will have a supply of circulars on hand giving the treatment in full.

A series of 63 demonstrations will be carried on during the week of April 3d, 10th, 18th, and 25 th covering all points of the county. An actual treatment of oats wil be made at this time that will give every farmer a chance to witness the operation.

A large poster giving the treatment in full will be sent to every grange in the county.

We can't afford to sustain the great losses from oat smut another year. Join with us in a county-wide campaign against this Disease.

CARRANZA REFUSES USE OF RAILROADS

El Paso—General Carranza has refused to grant the request of the United States government that American troops sent into Mexico in pursuit of Francisco Villa be permitted to use the Mexico Northwestern railway for the transportation of supplies.

The First Chief has also notified General Gavira, at Juarez, that he must not permit the passage over this line of any shipment of food, ammunition or equipment for the American troops. Carranza has further barred the United States authorities and General Pershing from using the Mexican telegraph lines to and from Juarez.

Buffalo—With several miles of the city in the Kensington and South Buffalo sections partially submerged with the flood waters of the Cazenovia and Buffalo creeks, this city is threatened with one of the most disastrous floods in its history. Continued mild weather today, causing the rapid condensation of huge masses of snow, aggravated the situation, which was hourly becoming more serious. Cellars in hundreds of homes were floodad and entire streets were closed to traffic. Trolley car service was abandoned on several lines and three schools were dismissed.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

The Fulton Spring Fashion Display was announced this morning by the blowing of the whistles at the different manufacturing plants.

The window displays by the different merchants throughout the City is certainly wonderful and shows that the spirit prevails in Fulton.

Don't forget to display the National Colors on April the 3rd.

Don't forget to make plans and reservation for the Banquet, Monday evening, April 3rd, 1916.

The largest and greatest affair Fulton has ever had will be held at the Masonic Lodge Rooms, on April 3rd, 1916.

Let's all make an extra effort and clean our sidewalks. It would be so nice if you would go just a little farther and clean off a portion of the cross walks. This we know is up to the City, but it would help a little if the individuals would help just a trifle.

What a difference flowers do make. Yes, and they would look so nice if everyone would plant flowers and have them blooming later on.

The Chamber of Commerce takes this opportunity to congratulate the different merchants in the city on the very pretty windows as well as the interior of their stores. It is simply marvelous what you can do by putting forth a little effort—and CO-OPERATION. Just keep your eye on the fellow who won't cooperate and you will see what becomes of him and his business after a while.

Don't forget to use the Employment Bureau when in need of workmen. We can supply your needs.

Reservations for the Banquet must be in the office of the Chamber of Commerce not later than Friday evening at 6 o'clock.

We take this opportunity to thank the different Manufacturers in the City for cooperating with the Chamber by blowing their whistles this morning at 9 o'clock, announcing the opening of the Fulton Fashion Display.

FRENCH BREAK UP NEW DRIVE

Paris—The Germans today renewed their infantry drive on the Verdun Paris railway, while the ritish at St. Eloi, south of Ypres, extended their attacks, and a great battle is believed to be developing in that section.

The German attack at Haucourt-Malancourt in the atteapting to cut the railroad on which the fortress depends for supplies was made after three days of bombardment.

It began early yesterday and was carried on until dusk. Wave after wave of German troops swept up the Malancourt heights northwest of Verdun. All according to the late French official report, were swept by with heavy losses by barrier fire andn bayonet fighting.

Despite the heavy losses in today's fighting, military critics here expect a general resumption of the German offensive on the whole of the front north of Verdun. The hand of the Crown Prince has been forced, it is believed, by the development of a strong counter-movement on the British froint at St. Eloi.

The official statement received here today from Berlin admits that the battle therre has extended to the adjacent lines and that a general action of some proportions is being fought.

It is believed in military circles that the British attacks south of Ypres are the first fruit of the allied conference in Paris, which is believed to have decided upon an immediate and simultaneous offensive of all the allies on all fronts.

Baseball Displaces Basketball in Hearts of H. S. Athletes

While busily engaged with the snow shovel during the past few weeks and continuing his activities with the basketball team, "Jack" Reynolds nevertheless did not permit the future to go unheeded and today "Jack", who is manager of the high school baseball team announces the schedule for the season.

The list of games, the first of which is to be played at home on April 29th with Skaneateles High, is pleasing to the athletic board as well as the members of last year's nine, most of whom are expected to play this season. Pullen and H. O'Brien are the only men of last year's squad missing and no difficulty is expected in filling the berths left vacant by the absence of these men. Chief among the prospects is "Shadow" Martin, the elusive and brilliant forward of the basketball team.

Don O'Brien, captain of this year's nine has issued a summons for all candidates to report for the first get-together meeting next Monday. The schedule of games is as follows:

PERSHING'S SUPPLIES SHUT OFF BY GAVRIA, CARRANZA CHIEFTAIN

El Paso—For more than a week gasoline and other necessities, without which the American punitive expedition in Mexico can do little or nothing, have been shipped from Juarez to Casas Grandes over the Mexican Northwestern Railway. In every case consignments have been billed to either Mormon or Mexican merchants so as not to arouse Mexican resentment, which might manifest itself if it were known that they were for the American troops.

This subterfuge wasp racticed with the full knowledge of General Gavira, Carranza commander at Juarez, and Adreas Garcia, the Carranza Consul here. American officers and soldiers at the front have been allowed to use the Mexican telegraph lines to transmit messages to their relatives and friends, and not a few official despatches have gone over the wires from here South.

The Mexican officials last night brought this situation to an abrupt end. General Gavira issued an order that no more supplies could go south even if billed through to merchants at Colonia Dublan or Casas Grandes, asserting that the shipments were growing steadily in quantity and that it would soon be known by the Mexican people what was going on.

At the same time he issued an order forbidding the use of the telegraph wires in either direction by Americans, and I am informed that he warned telegraph operators that they would be held personably responsible for any messages sent or received.

Under present military law in Mexico that amounts to serving notice on operators that they will be shot if they disobey the order.

This is the extent to which the Carranga government is co-operating with the United States in the pursuit of Villa. Such supplies as have been slipped through to General Pershing by trickery have

Pathfinder Refuses to Accept Portion of Good Roads Contract

For some reason yet to become known here, the Pathfinder Construction Company will not participate in a good roads contract at Daytona, Florida; not because Mr. W. J. Hartnett, who is represented the company was not low man in the bidding, for it is learned that he was three per cent lower than the next lowest competitor on a $400,000 contract. Mr. Hartnett is still in the south and will return home this week, when he is expected to make known his reasons for refusing to accept a portion of the good roads work in Volusia county.

Daytona is the center of a group of villages and towns which are to be connected by good roads at the expense of the county, the Pathfinder Company being low bidders on the entire job. That much is known by Mrs. Hartnett, who is in receipt of telegrams which convey but a brief synopsis of conditions as Mr. Hartnett has found them. In one of the messages Mr. Hartnett expressed a belief that his firm would receive the contract intact, which would have been the largest one ever handled by a Fulton contractor.

CENTRAL EUROPE TO BE SURROUNDED BY WALL OF MONEY, MEN AND ARMS

Paris—Unity of military action, unity of economic action, unity of diplomatic action!

By co-ordinating all the work of the entente governments and erecting a solid wall of money, men and munitions about the Central Empires, the Allies are confident they will win an early and decisive victory for the cause of mankind.

In a remarkable manifesto fraught with greater significance than any similar document in history the allied car conference announced its aims and purposes last night and closed its two day session. This manifesto, adopted in the form of resolutions just prior to adjournment, reads:—

"The representatives of the allied governments in conference at Paris, March 27 and 28, 1916, affirm the complete community of views and solidarity of the Allies. They confirm all the measures taken to realize unity of action on unity of front.

"They understand by that, at the same time unity of military action, assured by the entente concluded between the general staffs, unity of economic action, the organization of which the present conference has regulated, and unity of diplomatic action, which is guaranteed by their unshaken will to continue the struggle to victory for the common cause. Permanent Committee for Diplomatic Work.

"The allied governments decide to put into practice in the economic domain their solidarity of views and interests. They charge the economic conference which is to be held shortly at Paris to propose for them appropriate measures for the realizations of this solidarity.

"With a view to strengthen, co-ordinate and unify the diplomatic action to be exercised to prevent the revictualling of the enemy the conference has decided to establish at Paris a permanent committee in which all the Allies will be represented.

"The conference has decided:—First, to continue theo rganization already begun at London of an international central bureau of freights; second, to proceed in common and with the briefest delay to seek practical means to employ and apportion equitably between the allied nations the charges for maritime transportation and check the rise in freight rates."

WATERTOWN BURIES ONE VERY OLD RESIDENT

Watertown—Between 8,000 and 10,000 people turned out Monday night to attend the obsequies of the late lamented O. D. Nocker. Under the auspices of the Rotary Club the ceremonial was conducted, but the funeral cortege included hundreds of unattached citizens as well as a group of Naval Militiamen and Trinity Boy Scouts. The old Court street bridge was crowded to capacity with the chief mourners and small boys who managed to creep past Chief of Police Singleton. Dectective Captain Wood, Licutenant Gilligan and the patrolmen stationed at the bridge entrance. At ag iven signal the gigantic hammer which, to borrow the expression of Chiem Marshal Lansing, was "symbolic of the late lamented," dropped over the west rail of the bridge and into the river.

SEE EUGENIC PERIL IN FEEBLE MINDED

New York— The placing of the feeble minded of the State in institution in order that they may not have opportunities of reproducing their kind was advocated ... by Homer Folks, one-time Commissioner of Charities, before the Charities Investigation Commission in the Bar Association Building, No. 42 West Forty-fourth street.

Mr. Folks declared there are 20 000 feeble minded persons at large in New York State and that the dangers of procreation and violence from those were rapidly causing the State to lose its rank as a commonwealth where ordinary precautions are taken to maintain the mental health of citizens.

"They do not need much educational training," explained Mr. Folks, "but it is necessary that the normal people of the State be protected from them."

Mayor Mitchell yesterday wrote a letter to Edward H. Thompson, of Richmond Hill, L. I. in answer to a letter from him complaining of the investigation which is headed by Charles H. Strong, and alleging religious partisanship.

"You are misinformed if you believe that an attack is being made on Catholic institutions," wrote the Mayor. "Those who are clamoring against the investigation are ... before it is completed and without knowing what the decision of the Commissioner will be."

FULTON'S REAL THINGS

When an individual laughs at flowers, ignores good music and disdains real literature, the resultant is a barren life. When a community ignores, laughs at or disdains the finer qualities that make for real growth, empty houses sometimes tell the tale. Self absorption, that octopus of the business world today, fastens its hold upon individuals and communities alike. The lure of the dollar ensnares its countless multitudes and then leaves them with the dross in their hands. Life is bigger than the making of a living, and the true business man, is now finding it possible to combine a full business life with large, unselfish, service in impersonal work.

In the March number of The Craftsman Eloise Roorbach says: "All is certainly right with this world when ponderous municipal powers meet in dignified council and solemnly vote to set a few hundred cozy little bird homes swinging in the trees of city parks."

Is this not one of the finer qualities in humanity finding expression? So long as man lifts his eyes from the gleam of the dollar in his neighbor's palm; so long as he leaves personal, material gain out of some, if not all, of his efforts there is proof that all is well with the world.

For the men, women and children of this city to join in the great impersonal work of beautifying Fulton would be a notable beginning. Fancy the satisfaction of a little home army which thru its cooperative work in one instance were to behold the banks of the Oswego river, cleaned of refuse and instead vibrant with masses of poppies and shrubbery. Would it be possible for groups of people to work together for such a purpose and not attain something of more value to the city than the collection of a few dollars. On the other hand, would it be possible for homes in the vicinity of such a beauty spot to remain unchanged in value?

In the dawn of the creating of a civic spirit, whether it be in Fulton or Hong Kong, great men and the poor laborer will be found working happily side by side in a common cause, dominated by a Principle. Then it will be that problems of "trade at home," and "doing your neighbor" will be eliminated.

Let Fulton go a-gardening, and the children, our citizens of tomorrow, set bird houses a-swinging among the branches of our trees, Fulton in the future will care for herself, for every hand shall not be raised against his neighbor.

"A man of absolute integrity recognizes honesty when he sees it, because he has it. To every honorable deed for which the synic can account only on selfish grounds, he attributes the same motive that would have prompted him to its performance."— Frank Thompson.

THIS MAY HELP YOU TO A CLEARER UNDERSTANDING

We think the average citizen must find himself in a confused state of mind when he reads the war dispatches of the past few weeks. Probably so much fiction has never been turned out in the same length of time since the Father of Lies began business.

It may help some to state briefly the real military situation as it exists today—excluding guesses and predictions as to what may happen tomorrow or next week.

Around Verdun the fighting has resulted in the advance of the German assault and the pushing in of the Verdun salient until the curve of the salient has been reduced from twenty-five miles in length to less than ten.

The mark at which the German offensive aims is not the fortress of Verdun, but the raidroad behind it. If this can be seized Verdun would necessarily be abandoned or surrendered without assault. The capture of the hill of Haucourt brings the Germans within less than three miles of the all-important railroad. Ten or fifteen days will settle the question of whether the assault will carry the German arms to the all-important railroad. Ten or fifteen days will settle the question of whether the assault will carry the German arms to the railroad and decide the greatest battle the world has ever seen. So far the German offensive has very slowly, but very steadily, gone forward.

On the part of the French line held by the British there has been no activity. The British explanation is that it is too muddy for their troops to move, the mud being over the men's shoe-tops.

In the East the allied troops at Saloniki are "dug in," while the

ENTERPRISE OVERCOMES DIFFICULTIES

The enterprise of the Augusta Chronicle, which had its new plant burned down the other day, in publishing its newspaper on the presses of the Macon News; more than one hundred and ten miles away, shows again that journalism is undaunted by unexpected disasters. The Chronicle has all its Augusta news and advertising transmitted to Macon by telephone; part of the staff is temporarily in Macon and part remains on the scene in Augusta, but the paper is coming out every day, reaching its readers on time, and is living up to the best traditions of the American press.—N. ## SUBMARINE WAR USELESS

A little of that love of exact definitions which is characteristic of the German mind would stand it in good stead at this time; but unfortunately in the clash of arms other things besides the laws are silent. When one of the leaders in the Prussian Landtag yesterday, speaking in behalf of submarine "frightfulness," declared that "a most energetic conduct of military operations may be the most humane," he might have been told that the very essence of the question is whether the killing of non-combatants on merchant ships is a "military operation" at all. Most of the savageries which have brought obloquy upon the German name in this war are not instances of "energetic conduct of military operations," even in the widest acceptation of the term but attempts to accomplish by pure terrorism what other civilized nations seek to attain by legitimate warfare. And not only has this resulted in immeasurable moral loss, but the material gain has been utterly insignificant. This fact has received fresh emphasis in the extreme meagreness of the results thus far attained in the new submarine campaign instituted more than two weeks ago. Something more substantial may be recorded before long; but, in view of the complete futility of all these many months of loudly heralded barbarism in the air and on the sea, it is safe to say that nothing that the submarines may find it possible to do to British shipping will affect in the slightest degree the issue of the war.—N. Y. Mail.

Publisher Hearst Scores Prize Fights As Relics of Barbarism

The Evening Times is in receipt of the following telegram which presents in a true light the scenes attending the prize fight in Madison Square Garden last Saturday evening. The message is as follows:

EDITOR TIMES, PERSONAL
Fulton, N. Y.

Some time ago one man beat another to death in the prize ring in California. This shocking performance stirred the conscience of the state. Aroused the citizens to their moral obligation and definitely ended prize fighting in California. Last Saturday night a gigantic prize fight was presented to the public of New York in Madison Square Garden. The sanquinary survivor of the death battle in California met another professional pugilist in a brutal and bloody encounter. It is a falsehood to say that this encounter was merely a boxing exhibition. It was a prize fight. There were both the prize and the fight. Each contestant expressed publicly before hand his determination to knock out the other, and each during thefi ght did his utmost to inflict the severest body injury upon the other for the delectation of an eager and excited crowd. Faces were bleeding, hands were broken in this brutal struggle. Some thousands of people of all classes witnessed this degarding and demoralizing exhibition and among the spectators were hundreds of women. It is sufficient menace to public morality and decency when men are allowed to attend these brutal and brutalizing performances. The menace is aggravited and intensified when women are allowed to be demoralized by such exhibitions. I ask you as a brother editor whether you do not think that a stain has been put upon the good name of this great city and this great state, which we all love so well by these shameful prize fights. By the governmental authorization of them and governmental participation in their infamous profits. Politicians of this city have often complained of the dominal influence of the remainder of the state, but it seems to me that in moral matters at least this may be a beneficial situation. If New York city cannot save itself from such debauching acts and consequences as these prize fights provide, then the state should save the city from itself and preserve the good morals and good repute of the city and of the state. Do you not think that the press of New York city and New York state should unite in an effort to maintain the moral standards of the communities which thye serve, to end this disgraceful and demoralizing prize fighting as nearly every other state in the union has done to repudiate this partnership between the state and the criminal and to repeal the law which authorizes it? If you believe there should be a united effort to these ends, I shall be very much complimented and very much encouraged in my endeavor. If you will give some expression to your sentiments through the columns of your newspapers. I shall also be under obligations if you will be so kind as to send me—to my personal address—any editorials or articles which appear in your influential paper on this subject. I hope that if we think alike on these matters we may work together and accomplish this desired and, I believe, much needed reform.

Bulgars are entrenched across the Greek frontier. Watchful waiting is the programme there.

In Persia the Russian expeditionary forces are overrunning that neutral country and seizing feebly defended cities. These movements have no military importance, but will give Russia an "occupation claim" to Persia after the war.

In the Caucasus Russian troops have found the mountains impassable, and are now attacking and advancing on the southern shore of the Black Sea in Asiatic Turkey. The objective of this expedition is the Bagdad railway. It is still a long way from that line.

In Mesopotamia the beleaguered force at Kut-el-Amara is still held trapped by the Turks, and the British relief expedition has been severely defeated and forced to retire several miles down the Tigris.

The Russians have been fighting severe offensive battles on the northern front. Petrograd dispatches claim gains. Berlin dispatches assert that the assaults were beaten off with enormous losses to the Russians. It is no more than proper to say that Petrograd dispatches during the whole course of the war have not been remarkable for accuracy, so preference must be given to the brief German statements in weighing probabilities in the Dvinsk region.

Summed up, the situation is a slowly progressing and extraordinarily violent German offensive against the Verdun salient; a violent and apparently unsuccessful Russian offensive on the Dvinsk front; successful Russian advances in the Caucasus and Asiatic Turkey and Persia; a successful Turkish seige operation against the British relief force in Mesopotamia, and watchful waiting in the Balkans, in Egypt and the northern sectors of the line in France.

That is the military situation as it actually is today. Each reader is entitled, of course, to draw his own conclusions as to which side is winning or losing, and each will probably promptly proceed to decide according to his wishes, with small regard to the cold facts. —N. Y. American.

WITH DONKEY AND DOG WALKS 3,400 MILES

Price Wins a Wager by a Long Tramp.

Victoria, B. C.—Edward P. Price does not wear medals in recognition of a world's record tramp, neither is he the author of any "Travels by Foot" tales —not yet—but he has made something of a record for stamina and is now hopelessly a victim to a relentless desire to walk every highway which may be casually named in his presence. He has walked from Chicago to San Francisco in a roundabout way, a distance of 3,400 miles. He does not claim that there is anything remarkable about that fact alone, but the circumstances of the trip make a good story.

The first consideration is the fact that Mr. Price at the beginning of his tramp was a tenderfoot.

The Price party, for he did not travel alone, was essentially a tenderfoot group. Perhaps the most experienced member was Bunny, a donkey whose eight years had at least taught him caution. Another member was a collie dog named Prince, which is now much more than mere dog to Mr. Price, and another thing which does not appear in the log of the journey, but upon which he admits the successful conclusion of the undertaking largely depended, was the taunts of Price's friends in Chicago.

Price left Chicago in midsummer, 1914, traveling westward along the Lincoln highway. The tramp was the result of a wager and was to be made entirely on foot with the consideration that the conditions would not be fulfilled unless the journey was finished with both of his four footed companions. He insists without a blush that every inch of the journey was on foot. The certified statements of the mayors of the various cities along the route form the credentials.

Starting without money, the commissariat was provided entirely by a gun and fishing tackle and the proceeds from singing at the show houses along the way. The camp equipment, including provisions, amounted to 100 pounds, and this was Bunny's burden.

Hid Over $7,000 in Hut.

Cedar Falls, Ia.—More than $7,000 was found hidden in the hut of George Pound, eight miles north of here, when the administrator of his estate made an investigation. Pound died suddenly and was supposed to have left little money. Twenty years ago he lost more than $5,000 in a bank failure and thereafter never trusted banks.

Gets a Civil War Letter.

Bangor, Cal.—L. E. Cole of this town received a letter recently written to him by his brother on Dec. 2, 1864. At that time the writer was a soldier in the Union army, and he tells of the chase into Mississippi after General Price's command. Where the letter has been for the past half century is a mystery.

$50 FOR SEVEN WINKS.

Following a Custom of Greece Looked Like Mashing Out in Missouri.

Kansas City, Mo.—George Stamatois, twenty-six years old, 510 Main street, has not forgotten the customs of his native Greece. There it seems to be the fashion to wink at any woman you want to become acquainted with. The Greek custom brought Stamatois to grief in staid Kansas City.

Stamatois entered a department store the other afternoon. He winked at six pretty girls to no avail. He winked at a seventh, who promptly seized him by the arm, showed him a store detective's star and escorted him to a crossing patrolman.

Stamatois answered a charge of "mashing" before Justice Charles Clark, acting judge, in the north side court here soon after.

"That winking trick's a favorite over in Greece, judge," Stamatois said. "That's the way we meet all our nice women. I thought it was all right here too. I've got to show my appreciation of the girls some way."

"That's a poor way," Judge Clark answered. "The wink is not favored in Kansas City. You're fined $50."

The SAFETY POINT

By Dr. Frank Crane

The railroad needs money not only to pay the expenses of hauling passengers and freight.

It costs millions more to keep the right of way and rolling stock in condition.

It takes tens of millions in addition to supply steel cars, new safety appliances and other modern facilities and comforts demanded by the public.

Keep the earnings down below a certain point and the railroads will be unable to meet this constant demand.

The New York Central Lines need and invite your thoughtful consideration and co-operation on matters affecting our mutual interest.

11 CANDIDATES GIVEN 1 DEGREE

Which Proved Pleasing to 200 Members in Attendance Upon K. of C. Ceremonies Last Night.

Last night's meeting of St. Joseph's Council, K. of C., was an event of more than usual interest, resulting from the degree work conferred upon a class of eleyen candidates. No less than 200 local members of the Council were in attendance and in addition about forty Oswego Knights came to witness the ceremonies, Grand Knight Otis being among the number. He made an address in which he invited the members of St. Joseph's Council to attend the Goldstein lecture, to be given in the Richardson theatre, Oswego, Friday evening. Many of the local Knights signified their intention of accepting the invitation. Mr. Otis commended the activity of St. Joseph's Council in strong terms.

Upon concluding the business session of the Council a spaghetti supper was served with all the condiments necessary to make the food pleasing to the palates of the Americans. Mr. Frank (Chef) Massaro was responsible for this portion of the program, and as usual he acquitted himself in the work.

The musical features of the evening were furnished by members of the Council as follows:

"When I Dream of Old Erin," by Lawrence Ranger; "Where the River Shannon Flows," by Edward Welsh; "America, I Love You," by Frank Massaro. Prof. David Carroll presided at the piano, leaving a word of praise superfluous.

THE QUIRK TODAY

In "The Dragon," the next release on the Equitable Program, which is at the Quirk theatre today, there is a wonderful presentation of the idea that youth and innocence can not only conquer the dragon, which it has been said lies in wait for those who may fall into its clutches in the city's streets, but can, in doing so, unwittingly bring wreck, disaster and even death to those who have been guilty of wrong doing in connection with her family. The story is worked out in masterly fashion, and there are thrills in plenty, especially when the heroine and long lost and just found mother narrowly escape destruction as a building is blown up and destroyed by fire, and the man who has wronged them loses his life. Margarita Fischer is the star of the production, and reveals a dramatic power which convincingly portrays the perils that beset the path of innocence, but from which that very innocence provides an escape. Four universal reels are also shown, nine reels in all.

All the money in excess of $40 that the animals bring will be given to the boys who have cared for them. The bank figures that this will also have a good effect on the grade of milk cows in that neighborhood.

Oat Bread.

Make a sponge of four cupfuls rolled oats (dry), one-half cupful molasses two cupfuls boiling water, scant tablespoonful of lard, one teaspoonful salt one-half yeast cake dissolved in a little lukewarm water. Add only part of the flour, then let rise overnight. Now add about four cupfuls flour and knead about fifteen minutes. Let rise until twice its size, form into loaves, let rise until its bulk is doubled, then bake about forty-five minutes. This makes two large loaves.

This remedy can always be depended upon and is pleasant and safe to take.

Most Dangerous of Minor Ills

Well informed physicians regard a common cold as by far the most dangerous of the minor ills. The danger is not in the cold itself, but the serious diseases it so often leads to. That a cold can be cured easily and quickly has been abundantly proven. Mrs. S. K. Van Denburgh, Middleville, N. Y., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for years and always found it a positive cure for colds and coughs." For sale by all dealers.

YOU MUST FILE TAX REPORTS

Internal Revenue Department Getting After Delinquents, Who Will Get Second Notice.

At the office of Collector of Internal Revenue, Neal Brewster, Syracuse, N. Y., all persons available are busily engaged in checking up the files for the purpose of determining the individuals and corporations who have not filed reports for the calendar year ending December 31, 1915.

Within a few days notices will be served on the delinquents that unless full and complete returns are made within ten days after date of notice, the Collector will be compelled to summon all delinquents to his office, with such books and records as may be necessary, for the purpose of preparing return required under the law. Such summons has the effect of a court order and failure to obey will subject delinquent to punishment in same manner as contempt of United States Court. When such summons is issued the burden of expense is upon the delinquent person or corporation and the Collector is vested with authority to compel attendance of such individuals or officers of corporations until such time as a true and correct statement of the income can be prepared.

Revenue officers state that the individuals most commonly delinquent are those who believe that return is not necessary if the net income is less than $4.000 for married persons. This understanding is in error inasmuch as return is required if the net income is $3.000 or more regardless of whether person is married or single.

Recent instruction received from the Department at Washington furnishes the information that more severe penalties will be imposed upon those who are delinquent this year than have been imposed heretofore. Individuals delinquent in prior years have avoided suit in United States Court by making a nominal offer in compromise. Corporations have been accorded the same privilege, but under the new rule the rate of settlement will probably be not less than $20 to $30 each, these amounts being several times the amounts heretofore acceptable. The increased basis of settlement is undoubtedly due to the belief that after three years' operations of the law, individuals and corporations should be sufficiently familiar with the requirements.

It is also believed that there are some delinquents under the provision of the law which requires report to be made by all persons, firms, corporations, etc. who have paid income in the form of salaries, wages, rents, interest or other fixed income to one or more individuals in excess of $3.000 during 1915. This feature of the law, known as withholding at the source, is mandatory and is applicable regardless of the manner in which the individual recipients treat the income in their personal returns.

Taxpayers are advised to make inquiry at Collector's office regarding points not clear to them.

JURY DISAGREED IN DAMAGE CASE

Mr. John T. Donohue who sued the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Co. for $10,000 damages, alleging he sustained injuries when a scaffold fell at the company's plant, lost his case so far as the jury in the March term of Supreme Court is concerned. An all-night session of the jury resulted in a disagreement.

The plaintiff alleges that he fell from a scaffold and suffered an injury to his ankle. A motion for a non-suit was denied. Justice Devendorf held that he would let the jury have the case in order to determine whether the plaintiff supposed, as he claimed, that he was in the employ of the defendant company. He had worked for the company under Foreman Taft, but had gone to work, it is claimed, for one of the contractors on the building of the power house. He also alleged that Mr. Taft said that scaffold was all right as he had inspected it.

An action to recover $10.000 damages for injuries alleged to have been received when a motorcycle on which he was riding collided with a truck owned by George Buskey, brought by William H. Simmons against Mr. Buskey, is on trial today. The plaintiff alleges that Mr. Buskey's driver was negligent, while the defendant charges the plaintiff with negligence. John M. Farrell is attorney for the plaintiff, with Judge C. N. Bulger as counsel. Elisha B. Powell appears for the defendant.

The case of John MacDonald vs. Columbia Mills, Inc., to recover $10,000 damages for thel oss of an eye while in the employ of the defendant company, was put over the term on motion of the defendant. They claimed not to be ready for trial.

The term came to a close yesterday afternoon when it was reported to Justice Devendorf that a settlement out of court had been effected in the Simmons-Buskey negligence action. The jurors were paid off and the court adjourned.

CONSCRIPTION FEARED, CANADIANS FLEEING

Bridgeburg, Ont. — Fearing that conscription is coming, skirkers, it is claimed, are deserting in the Hamilton district, accordingto T. L. Brown, board of trade secretary of that city, and as a result an application was yesterday forwarded by the Hamilton recruiting league to the Dominion government, asking it to close the border to prevent young men from getting away.]

The application has caused a big surprise throughout this district, as the Hamilton association is the only one which ever made such a charge. It is not expected that the government would pass such a measure, but the application for it shows the serious war spirit of Canada at the stage of the fight.

SOMETHING MAY HAPPEN, THE TIP

The Word Comes From Maccabee's Seat of War, Indicating Primitiveness of Opponents' Work.

Silence reigns in the Maccabee camp regarding the outcome of the series of three games to be playeed between the lodge and High school fives, the first of which takes place tomorrow night at Church's Hall. The lodge boys are practicing each night to be prepared to give the high school boys "a run for their money."

The school quintet has not engaged in practice sessions this week as the court at the City Hall is closed for the season. The players welcome the rest, feeling they will accomplish more on this account than if they were to continue the order of practice sessions of the entire season. Coach Merril's proteges are in excellent condition and they anticipate no difficulty in proving that their team excels their rivals.

It cannot be seen that the school boys have any advantage on the lodge five, especially as the latter will be strengthened by the return of Captain Ives and the addition of Keeler, one of the fastest forwards in the city. This combination should keep the school boys guessing, and may also result in the Maccabees being able to score, which has been the one weakness of the team throughout the season.

It is felt in the Maccabee camp that the opponents throughout the season have been of a calibre to dishearten the average quintet. The officers of the order have, however, already made arrangements for contining the pastime next season with the assistance of a coach for the team. The High school has played games with other school teams who are not conceeded to be in a class with the lodge team opponents. Another factor which will have some bearing on the outcome of the games and may prove of advantage to one of the teams is the fact that the style of play of the two quintets is very well known.

The Maccabee quintet will use the following players: Ives, Keeler, Rohrball, Crockett, Merrill and Snow, while the high school will be represented by Reynolds, Martin, Wallace, Johnson and Frawley.

7 SUPERVISORS ARE INDICTED

Syracuse—Seven men were indicted on more than 200 specific charges of misconduct in connection with the construction of the Onondaga Sanatorium at Hoppers Glen in the report of the January Grand Jury presented to Supreme Court Justice William S. Andrews at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The men under indictment are;

Elmer E. Palmer, engineer and architect on the construction and equipment of the power house, is charged with conspiracy, a misdemeanor.

Jeremiah A. Leamy, surviving member of the firm of Clynes & Leamy, general contractors on the power house, is charged with bribery, grand larceny, presentation of false vouchers and conspiracy. There are 100 indictments against him.

Arthur B. Halsey, who held a subcontract under Clynes & LLeamy to erect the steel structure of the power house and who also sold to the county the steel used in the subway construction, is charged in six indictments with presenting false vouchers, bribery and conspiracy.

George L. Bauer, who held the contract for digging the water main trench from Englewood avenue to the sanatorium, is charged in four indictments with presenting false vouchers and with forgery.

Michael F. Cullen, listed as a timekeeper at the sanatorium, is charged with forgery in one indictment and with the presentation of false vouchers in five other bills.

William C. Rinehart, chief inspector for the county on all contracts held by Clynes & Leamy, was indicted on twenty-two bills for grand larceny, conspiracy and presentation of false vouchers.

Charles F. Mott, chairman of the Building Committee, is indicted jointly with all of the foregoing except Bauer on various charges, including conspiracy, bribery, grand larceny and presentation of false vouchers.

With the exception of Mott and Rinehart all the defendants were in court with their attorneys when Foreman Edward N. Trump handed to the bailiffs the enormous sheath of papers which represented the results of the investigation, which has progressed with few interruptions since February 6.

When the Grand Jury had been discharged after receiving the warm thanks of Justice Andrews and Deputy Attorney General Alfred L. Becker the court proceeded at once to the arraignment of the defendants who were in court.

Plead Not Guilty

Pleas of not guilty to all the charges presented were made by Leamy, Palmer, Cullen, Bauer and Haley.

With respect to William C. Rinehart, it was announced and placed in the record of the court that he had been given immunity from persecution on the indictments present against him in consideration of his agreement to tell the entire truth as to all the transactions in which he was involved whenever he shall be called upon to do so.

A written agreement of immunity was entered into between Rinehart and Deputy Attorney General Becker which was filed yesterday in the office of the County Clerk. By virtue of that agreement Rinehart will not be called upon at any time to plead to the twenty-two indictments which the Grand Jury found against him.

May Change Plans

Although pleas of not guilty were entered by the various defendants, more than ordinary emphasis was placed by the attorneys upon their applications for time in which to make any motions they wished, file demurrers to the indictments or change their pleas. It may be stated authoritatively that attorneys for several of the defendents have consulted with Mr. Becker as top robable pleas of guilty.

Justice Andrews announced that he would receive all such motions and changes of pleas at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. Several attorneys indicate that they wished more time in which to prepare their motions or to decide upon a course of action, but Justice Andrews held that his original appointment must stand.

All men under arrest were immediately admitted to bail, although Justice Andrews deemed it expedient to increase the bail in some instances. Palmer's bail was fixed at $2,5000, furnished by asurety company, and Cullen's bail was fixed at the same sum.

Mr. Becker announced that he was willing to accept $2.500 bail in the case of Bauer, but Justice Andrews ruled that the charges were too serious and insisted upon $5,000. It was supplied by John Bour, Maurice Jacobson and C. L. Mardin. Haley's bail bond was fixed at $5,000 and his mother, Mrs. Nellie M. Haley, was his surety. David Murphy went on Leamy's bond of $5,000.

FUTURE OF THE AEROPLANE.

How the Lessons Learned Now Will Be Applied After the War.

When the war is over the wings of the wind will have been harnessed so effectively that a splendid profit will be written on the balance sheet of peace. The air dreadnaughts of the day are the prototypes of the aeroplane de luxe of the morrow; the winged wains that carry a ton of explosives will be commandeered by commerce, and the safety devices that stand the gaff of shot and shell will find no very great test in the trade winds of the world.

The highways of the sky know no barriers and no frontiers. Besides being lord of its own element, the new aeroplane, driving through space at a hundred miles an hour, will outdistance the fastest ship and leave in a dilatory smudge of the horizon the smoke of the speediest railway train.

The sky is a universal roadbed that never needs repair. Spanning continents and bridging seas, hurdling cities, forests and the waste spaces of the world, the aeroplane, made safe, sound and speedy at the demands of war, will be trained to the minute for the greater service of peace and humanity.—Merle Crowell in American Magazine.

A Long Time Preaching.

The Rev. Ezra Campbell is said to be the oldest minister of the gospel in the United States, if not in the world. Recently he celebrated his one hundred and ninth birthday in Kentucky. He was born in what is now Wise county, Va., and lived there until he was past fifty years of age. He then moved to Kentucky. He is a member of the Baptist church and is now the pastor of three churches. He has been preaching for seventy-nine years.

The Latest Princess Combination.

Combining in one chemise, drawers and petticoat, this newest bit of lingerie is sure to find great favor. It is trimmed with hand embroidery.

Because it dispenses with the separate use of chemise, drawers and petticoat, since it is all three in one, this princess combination is of great value to a woman who does not like wearing many clothes. The petticoat and drawers section, cut in one, is finished with a side pleated frill, though a straight ruffle may be substituted.

Embroidery trims the front of the combination, the simple design being worked in solid satin stitch and eyelet work. In medium size the combination requires 2¾ yards 36-inch lawn.

The combination is cut from an open width of material, though the lawn may be laid double on the cutting table so that the sections may be cut in duplicate. The sections marked by line of large "O" perforations are placed on a lengthwise thread.

Quite as simple as the cutting is the construction of the model. The underarm and shoulder seams are first closed, and after these, the back seam. Close front seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge. Sew a straight strip of material 1¼ inches wide (when finished) to front edge of left front for an underlap and finish for a closing.

For the petticoat and drawers section close the center-front seam indicated by single small "o" perforation and close center-back seam indicated by single large "O" perforation; join the front and back edges, notches even, forming an opening for the leg.

The pleated frill is unique among the season's trimmings, and if the hem is hemstitched added individuality is imparted to the combination.

Pictorial Review Combination No. 6645. Sizes 32, 36, 40 and 44 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

Embroidery Design No. 12182. Transfer pattern, 15 cents.

The Strange Case of MARY PAGE

The Great McClure Mystery Story, Written by FREDERICK LEWIS In Collaboration With JOHN T. M'INTYRE, Author of the Ashton Kirk Detective Stories. Read the Story and See the Essanay Moving Pictures

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Publication

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Page, actress, is accused of the murder of James Pollock and is defended by her lover, Philip Langdon. Pollock was intoxicated. At Mary's trial she admits she had the revolver. Her maid testifies that Mary threatened Pollock with it previously, and Mary's leading man implicates Langdon. How Mary disappeared from the scene of the crime is a mystery. Brandon tells of a strange hand print he saw on Mary's shoulder. Further evidence shows that horror of drink produces temporary insanity in Mary. The defense is "repressed psychosis." Witnesses described Mary's flight from her intoxicated father and her father's suicide.

THE NURSE'S STORY

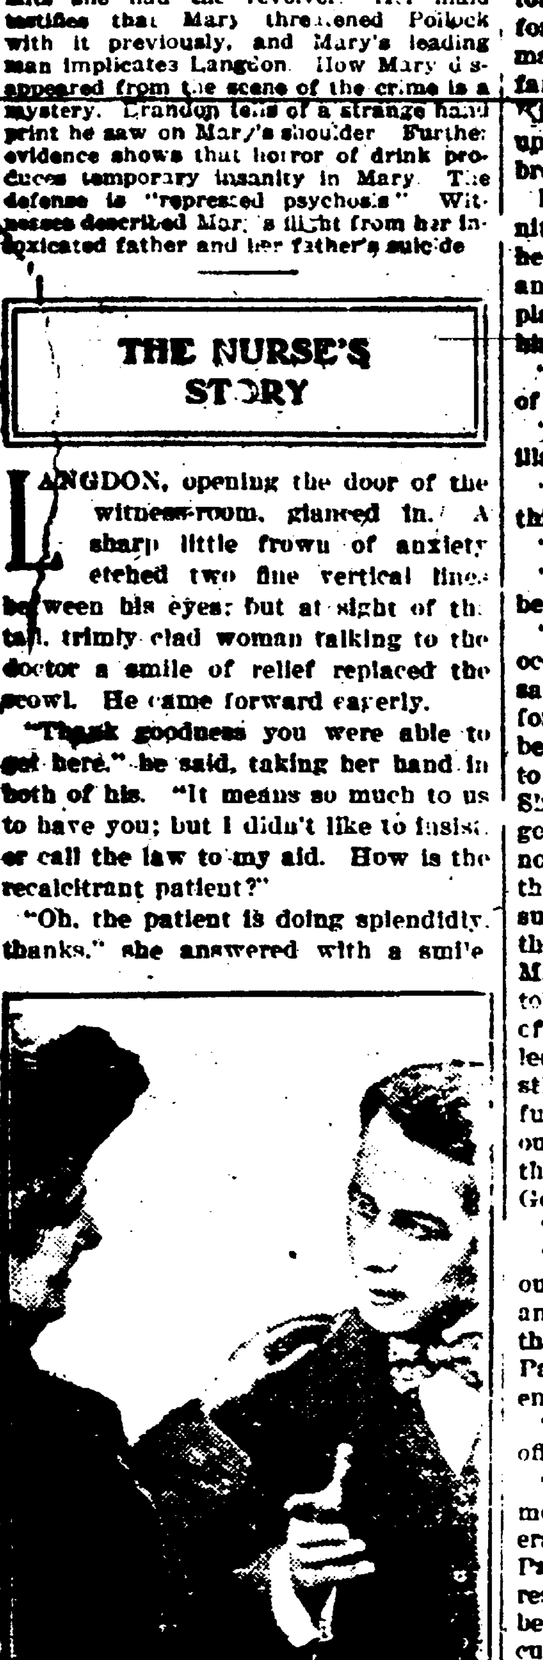
LANGDON, opening the door of the witness-room, glanced in. A sharp little frown of anxiety etched two fine vertical lines between his eyes; but at sight of the tall, trimly clad woman talking to the doctor a smile of relief replaced the scowl. He came forward eagerly.

"Thank goodness you were able to get here," he said, taking her hand in both of his. "It means so much to us to have you; but I didn't like to insist or call the law to my aid. How is the recalcitrant patient?"

"Oh, the patient is doing splendidly, thanks," she answered with a smile



"The patient is doing splendidly."

"but I should have come anyway, duty or no duty. How is Miss Page bearing up?"

"Very bravely, all things considered," said Langdon; but now his tone was grave with a hint of wistfulness.

Another day of the trial was begun. As on the day before, so fraught with terrible revelations, it was Mrs. Page who was the first witness.

"I have only a few questions, Mrs. Page," said Langdon gently. "How long after your husband's death was it that you learned the whereabouts of your daughter?"

"It may have been an hour—or perhaps less. A letter came from Philip and said, 'Don't worry. Mary is safe in Dr. Jamison's home. For obvious reasons I advise you not to come here till later. Will then explain all.' I went and got my hat and cloak to go to her, but James Pollock drove up in his automobile just as I was going down the path to the gate. He said he hated to disturb me at such a time, but that I must remember that Mary was his fiancee, and he was getting tired of Mr. Langdon's attitude. 'I am the one who should have taken care of her last night,' he said, 'and I demand that you immediately stop Langdon's interference.' I told him that my poor child had suffered enough; that I would not in any way interfere in the future. In fact, I—I blamed him for the awful tragedy of the night before. It seemed to me that but for him my daughter would be safe and well and my husband living, and I told him so. He said that if I would not deal with Langdon, he would, and that he would expect Mary to keep her word to him. Then he left. At the gate he met a boy coming in with a note, and after some talk, he gave the boy some money and took the note himself. He tore it open and read it; then, crumpling it in his hand as if angry, he flung it aside and got into his motor. As soon as he was out of sight I ran out and picked up the note. It—it was addressed to me, and it said: 'I am taking Mary to Dr. Foster's sanatorium outside the city. She bears up bravely under the news of her father's death. Will call later. Philip.' The next I remember is lying on the bed in my own room and hearing our doctor say, 'It's all too much for her. I wish to God she had some relatives or someone to help her.'"

"That is all, Mrs. Page, unless the State has some questions to ask." His voice rose interrogatively, but the prosecutor shook his head.

"Dr. Angus Foster!"

Only the fear of the dire threat of the judge to "clear the room if there was any disturbance" held the spectators silent at the sound of that name, for Dr. Foster had played his role in many another court-room, while his fame was a byword all over the world. Kings of Wall Street owed their grip upon affairs to his care when mental breakdowns seemed inevitable.

He was not a tall man, but the dignity of his carriage, and the way he held his shoulders, lent him an appearance of great height as he took his place in the witness-box and held up his right hand to take the oath.

"Dr. Foster, you specialize in diseases of the brain, do you not?"

"I do. In both mental and nervous ills."

"Have you a sanatorium just outside this city?"

"I have."

"Have you ever seen the defendant before?"

"I have seen Miss Page on several occasions. The first time was when I saw Mr. Langdon, whom I had known for some years, drive up with a girl beside him in the motor. She seemed to be asleep or only partially conscious. She opened her eyes as I came up, and got unsteadily to her feet, and then I noticed that her heavy veil hid the face, that her face was livid from some great suffering. After we had given her into the charge of Nurse Walton I took Mr. Langdon into my office, where he told me briefly of Miss Page's attack of madness, and the incidents that had led up to it. While Mr. Langdon was still talking I saw an automobile drive furiously up to my gate and a man leap out. My exclamation drew Langdon to the window and he cried sharply, 'My God! that's James Pollock!'"

"Did you already know who he was?"

"Yes, I had heard of him from various men who had been my patients, and Mr. Langdon had already told me that Mr. Pollock was engaged to Miss Page, and also something of how that engagement had been brought about."

"Was Mr. Pollock brought to your office?"

"No. I went out into the hall to meet him and took him into the general reception-room. I told him Miss Page's condition necessitated absolute rest for at least twenty-four hours. He became insulting and abusive and accused me of keeping Miss Page a prisoner, so I decided the best thing to do was to let the young lady herself decide whether or not she wanted to see him."

"Did you go at once to Miss Page?"

"No, I left Mr. Pollock in the reception-room and returned to my office, where I apprised Mr. Langdon of the situation. Together we went to the room assigned to Miss Page. She was in bed, and seemed comfortable and calm. While I was talking to her, however, finding out a little of her nervous condition, Mr. Langdon, who had been sitting near the door, gave a sharp exclamation and darted out into the hall. Miss Walton the nurse went to the door after him, but before she reached it we could all hear the sounds of a loud altercation. When I reached the scene myself, I found Mr. Langdon barring the way and Mr. Pollock attempting to force himself past to get to Miss Page's room. He declared it to be his right to be with her and said that Mr. Langdon was an interloper, a kidnapper, and a great many other things."

"Did you interfere?"

"I did. It took me some time to quiet Mr. Pollock, but he returned to the reception-room eventually, and Mr. Langdon and I hurried back to Miss Page who was very much excited and was crying out that she did not want to see 'James'—or anyone except her mother and Mr. Langdon. She quieted down when we came in, especially after she had been reassured that no one would disturb her."

"Did you give any orders to that effect?"

"I did. I told Miss Walton to sit where she could watch the door, and that if James Pollock made any attempt to come down the hall she was at once to ring for help and bar him out."

"Did Miss Walton seem to consider the order unusual?"

"Well, not exactly that. She seemed agitated and upset by the name, but evaded my question as to whether she knew him. However, as I had always found her trustworthy and a splendid nurse, I paid but little attention to her excitement."

"You say you paid but little attention to her excitement. Did you have any inkling as to what might have caused that agitation?"

"Not at the time, but later when Miss Walton told me what had happened, admitting—"

"May it please the court," interrupted the Prosecutor, leaping to his feet. "Dr. Foster is retailing hearsay, and I object to the question of my learned colleague." There was a tinge of satisfaction in his voice at being able to interrupt the famous alienist who was said to know as much of law as of medicine, and the doctor flushed with annoyance. But Langdon showed no discomfiture; there was, in fact, a smile of satisfaction curling the corners of his lips as the judge leaned forward and said slowly:

"Strike out the question beginning, 'You say you paid but little attention to her excitement,' and its answer. Continue, Mr. Langdon."

"That is all, Dr. Foster," said Langdon promptly, and the District Attorney had only one question:

"When Mary Page was brought to your sanatorium, was she not perfectly sane?"

"Temporarily so, but her nervous condition was such that extreme mental suffering was very evident. We doctors have many definitions of that word 'sane,' sir."

"That is all." And as the doctor stepped down from the witness-box with a covert smile, the name of the next witness was called by the bailiff.

This was a new player in the vast drama whose every act was seemingly a fresh tragedy, and the reporters whispered the name among themselves as they bent over their copy, striving to place her among the scores who had been drawn into the net flung by the police and Langdon after the strange murder of James Pollock. Her name slipped from lip to lip through the spectators as well and more than one man in the back of the room stood up to stare when the tall brisk woman came confidently from the witness room and took her place on the stand.

"Miss Gertrude Walton!"

She gave her name with gravity, her age with a smile, and her occupation with pride, as trained nurse.

"Miss Walton," said Langdon, "you specialize in nervous cases, do you not?"

"I do."

"How long have you been doing that sort of nursing?"

"For twelve years. I began it by—by—nursing my sister through a terrible illness when she seemed likely to lose her reason. I have never forgotten her suffering, and I have specialized in nervous cases ever since."

"Are you attached to the staff at Dr. Foster's sanatorium?"

"I am."

"You have been there a good many years, have you not?"

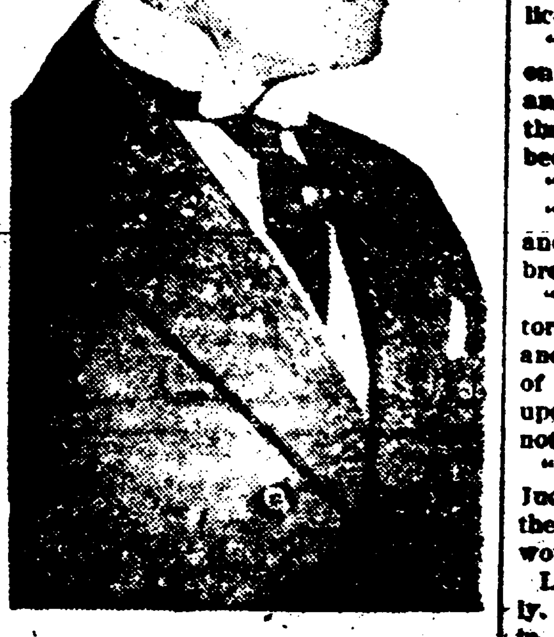
"Yes."

"When was the first time that you saw the defendant, Mary Page?"

"On the morning when she was brought to the sanatorium for treatment."

"Miss Walton, did you know James Pollock?"

For the first time her quiet confidence forsook her, and a red spot crept into each cheek, and there was a visible hesitation before she answered slowly:



"Mr. Pollock asked me if I was Miss Page's nurse."

"I had never MET Mr. Pollock, but I had heard a great deal about him. His name was very familiar to me."

"Then the first time you saw him was when he came to the sanatorium asking for Miss Page?"

Again there was a hesitation before the answer:

"Yes."

"Will you tell the court, please, what happened after Dr. Foster ordered you to keep James Pollock out of the room of your new patient—Miss Page?"

"I—I felt that I ought to know what he looked like that I might make no mistake, so I went down the hall towards the reception-room. As I reached the door, however, it was opened and Mr. Pollock stepped out. At sight of me he paused, then asked me if I was Miss Page's nurse. I said I was, and when we were in the reception-room, Mr. Pollock told me that he was the fiancee of Miss Page, and that Mr. Langdon was taking advantage of Miss Page's nervous condition to influence her against him. He told me that—that—he would make it well worth my while to help him remove her to another sanatorium which had been selected by her mother, and pointed out the fact that Mrs. Page had not come with her daughter as indicating her dissatisfaction with Dr. Foster's hospital."

"Did you agree to help him?"

A hot flush dyed her cheeks, and her fingers nervously fumbled her gloves as she answered softly:

"Yes."

"What instructions did he give you?"

"He—he told me to give Miss Page a sleeping draught that night, and said that when the hospital was quiet at eleven he would have his automobile outside and if I would let him in, he would carry Miss Page to it, and take her to the other sanatorium. He also asked me if I would take the case, as a private nurse, and when I said yes, he wrote the name down on a piece of paper for me."

"Do you mean," interrupted the Judge, "that you were ready to throw up your position with Dr. Foster, and allow one of his patients to be stolen from his sanatorium without investigating the truth of the man's statements?"

"You mean about Mr. Langdon?" she stammered. "Oh—I—I knew that was not true. I—I agreed because of—of a certain plan I had in mind. Then—he—led me to expect that he would pay me well and left."

"Miss Walton, do you recall the name of the sanatorium to which Mr. Pollock wished to take Miss Page?"

"Yes. It was Professor Zellar's sanatorium at Ortonville."

"Did you carry out your plans for that night?"

"No. The plan I had formed miscarried, because of the watchfulness of Mr. Langdon, who unwittingly hindered me."

"I gave Miss Page a sleeping-draught at ten o'clock and then put on my own hat and laid my cloak ready. At eleven I went down to the reception-room and unlocked one of the French windows which was almost immediately opened by Mr. Pollock. He followed me back to the bedroom, and picking up Miss Page whom I had carefully wrapped in blankets he carried her out to his automobile. As soon as he was on the veranda I closed the window and started to run to the front of the house, but I was stopped by Mr. Langdon, who was spending the night at the sanatorium and had already discovered Miss Page's absence. He—he caught me by the arm and demanded to know where she was. I tried to get away—because—because moments were precious just then, but he wouldn't let go and finally I told him that Mr. Pollock had just carried Miss Page off. At that he rushed out of the house and down the drive, and sprang onto the running board of Mr Pollock's motor, which was just starting up. Mr. Pollock struck at him, but he hung on, and kept on fighting till the motor swung around the curve and into the main road, and then the force of the turn flung Mr. Langdon off. By that time the detectives were in the road and fired after the car but it didn't stop—"

"Detectives! What detectives?" Langdon's question snapped like a whip lash.

"Why—why—" she stammered, confused by the sudden interruption. "The ones I sent for. I wanted Mr. Pollock caught in the act of kidnapping Miss Page, but Mr. Langdon held me back too long and prevented my giving the signal agreed upon."

A wave of sound that was the composite exclamation of those in the room swept like a breath of wind through the court and faded to silence, and Langdon asked:

"You had a special reason for wanting David Pollock caught by the police, had you not, Miss Walton?"

"Yes!" she cried, and her voice took on a sudden fierce note of suffering and anger. "I wanted him punished, and I thanked God for the chance that had been put into my hands!"

"Why?"

"Because he ruined my little sister, and left her to die of shame and heartbreak!"

"Your Honor!" It was the prosecutor's voice. "I object to that question and answer. It defames the character of a dead man, and has no bearing upon this case. What is more, it can not be proved!"

"You are perfectly right," said the Judge sternly. "Let the evidence of the witness be stricken out from the words 'signal agreed upon.'"

Langdon bowed his head submissively, but there was a gleam of triumph in his eyes, for he knew that though the words might be stricken out of the record, they could not so easily be erased from the minds of those who had heard them.

They had, in fact, laid bare another tragedy, and the words of Miss Walton earlier in the day, "I began by nursing my sister through a terrible illness when she seemed likely to lose her reason," gained a poignant meaning, that made more than one juryman move restlessly, and brought a whisper of sympathy from the spectators.

The court clerk monotonously read the corrected evidence and then Langdon, after a moment's thought, said:

"Miss Walton, when your plan miscarried and Mr. Pollock succeeded in carrying off Miss Page, what did you do?"

"I ran back to the hospital veranda where Dr. Foster was standing, having been drawn out by the sound of shots, and told him as quickly as I could what had happened, and where they had taken Miss Page."

"Did he make any comment upon the address you gave him?"

"Yes. He gave a sharp exclamation when I handed it to him and said, 'Great heavens! I've heard of that place—and what I've heard was anything but good.' At that one of the detectives took it and when he had read it he whistled and said, 'Zellar's! My God, we'd better follow pretty quick, if you want to rescue the girl. We've had our eye on that joint for some time.' At that Dr. Foster said, 'We will follow quickly, for my car can be here in a minute.'"

"Will you tell the court, please, exactly what happened when you reached the sanatorium?"

"Dr. Foster stopped the automobile at some distance down the road and put out the lights. Then we all slipped into the grounds as quietly as possible and the four men hid in the bushes while I went boldly up to the door and rang the bell. I asked to see either Dr. Zellar or Mr. Pollock, and was taken into an office where both men were sitting. Mr. Pollock seemed relieved to see me, as he said Miss Page was very much excited and had been sobbing and screaming, but he was obviously suspicious of me. I—I—told him, however, that I had had a fierce battle with Langdon to hold him back from pursuing them, and that it was he who had fired the shots; so at last he seemed convinced and took me up to Miss Page's room. She was hysterical and feverish and clung to me desperately. She was sitting on the edge of her bed, in a narrow room whose windows were heavily barred, while the door had not only a lock but two bolts as well."

"I'll get her out of here, if I have to kill you."

"Was Miss Page locked in when you got to her room?"

"Yes, and Mr. Pollock would have locked us both in, had it not been that I protested, saying that if Miss Page grew violent in the night I must be free to get out and call for help. But even though he left the door unlocked he lingered just outside for a long time, and I was unable either to soothe Miss Page or give the signal, for fear of arousing his suspicions. At last I heard him go downstairs, and I told Miss Page that Dr. Foster and Mr. Langdon were outside, and when she had sunk back crying with relief I carried the lamp to the window and gave the signal. Then I started down stairs to let the men in."

"Were the halls deserted?"

"Yes—both deserted and dark. But just as I was slipping back the bolts of the front door, the door to the office was opened by an attendant and in the light that streamed out he could see me plainly. I tried to slip the last bolt before he could reach me, but it was stiff and I couldn't move it. With an oath he grabbed me by the arm and dragged me into the office. Both Dr. Zellar and Mr. Pollock were there, and he told them what I had been doing. At that Mr. Pollock grabbed me and shook me and demanded to know what I was up to. He hurt me and frightened me so, I couldn't think of anything to say and I just screamed, thinking that those outside would hear me and break in. They did hear me, for they began to hammer on the door and demand entrance, and I screamed again. But at that Mr. Pollock clapped his hand over my mouth and Dr. Zellar caught my wrists, and between them they dragged me into a little room beyond the office and flung me into a chair. Then I saw that Dr. Zellar had a revolver in his hand and he thrust it into my face, promising to 'do for me' if I made any noise. They went out and locked the door, but as soon as they were gone I ran to it and listened, and I heard the doctor tell his assistant (the one who had caught me at the door) to go upstairs and watch 'the girl'. Then he and Mr. Pollock had a conference and decided to let Dr. Foster and Mr. Langdon in, but to deny that Miss Page was there. 'I'll go upstairs and wait till you get rid of them,' said Mr. Pollock. Then I heard a door close and everything was quiet.

"Soon I heard Dr. Foster's voice saying, 'Miss Page has been forcibly dragged from my sanatorium and brought here. I demand her instant release, and I have my car outside to take her back to the hospital.' At that Dr. Zellar laughed sneeringly and said, 'Is it your usual method of getting patients to run about at night and kidnap them from rival sanatoriums?' I could hear Dr. Foster give a little muttered oath of anger, but Mr. Langdon broke in sharply saying, 'This is no time for listening to any tomfool insults from you, Zellar—what we want is Miss Page, and by heaven, I'll get her out of here, if I have to kill you and break down every door in the place.' 'Even that wouldn't get her,' said Dr. Zellar, 'for this Miss Page, as you call her, is not here.' 'You lie!' shouted Langdon, 'we know she is. The nurse has already signalled us to that effect.' 'I'm afraid your friend has been drinking a little too much,' sneered Zellar, speaking apparently to Dr. Foster, for it was the latter who answered: 'I suppose,' he said drily, 'that you will deny also that a woman screamed to us for help a few minutes ago.' 'One of the patients had a nightmare,' said Zellar, but he spoke uneasily.

"Suddenly Mr. Langdon shouted, 'Nurse Walton! Nurse Walton!' And in answer I beat upon the door and cried, 'In here! In here!' Almost instantly it seemed I heard the sound of running feet, and the door was unlocked and I stumbled out almost into Mr. Langdon's arms. But before we could either of us move away from the spot Zellar said grimly, 'Stand where you are, all three of you!' And we saw that he was covering us with his revolver. Then there came a most terrible cry from upstairs—the long scream of a woman either half crazed or in deadly fear. Even Zellar was horrified by it, and his arm wavered a little as he turned his head. At that Mr. Langdon sprang upon him, and bore him back against the table. They fought desperately, both Dr. Foster and I trying to help, and at length Mr. Langdon succeeded in twisting the arm of Dr. Zellar so that his fingers went limp and the revolver fell to the floor. Dr. Foster snatched it up and Mr. Langdon cried, 'Keep that beast covered till I get Mary!' and went running out of the room and up the stairs. It was then that I remembered the two detectives and realized that we had help outside, so I hurried to the door and flung it open. They were right there, half crazy with anxiety, and when I shouted, 'Up stairs,' they went up two at a time with me close behind."

"Will you tell us, please, what you saw when you reached the upper landing?"

"We saw Mr. Langdon and Mr. Pollock on the floor engaged in a furious struggle, while from the door of Miss Page's room came the sound of little hands beating against the wood, and almost continuous screams or bursts of hysteric laughter, interspersed with oaths in a man's voice! The detectives went at once to Mr. Langdon's aid, and when they had seized Mr. Pollock one of them covered him with his revolver while the other ran with Mr. Langdon and myself to the door of Miss Page's room. It was locked, and our cries to Mary to let us in only brought more terrible screams from her, so the detective, warning us back, fired his revolver downward through the keyhole, shattering the lock, and we burst into the room.

"Miss Page was standing at the window sobbing and laughing and tearing at the iron bars with hands already cut and bleeding from her efforts. Half crouched by the bed, was the ugly attendant Dr. Zellar had sent to watch her, and lying shattered on the floor beside him was a whiskey bottle. He was obviously brutally drunk, but either Miss Page's madness or our entrance terrified him into a momentary sobriety, and as we ran towards Miss Page he darted out of the room."

"How long was it before Miss Page quieted down?"

"It was some hours. When we found that neither Mr. Langdon nor I was recognized by Miss Page I ran downstairs for Dr. Foster. As I came out in the hall the detective who was guarding Mr. Pollock turned towards me and the latter instantly leapt over the banisters and rushed into the office. The detective and I were close behind him, and as we reached the door we saw Mr. Pollock leap upon Dr. Foster and strike the revolver from his hand. Then he switched out the light and called to Zellar to 'come quick.' Before we could stop them, both men ran out through one of the long windows."

"Miss Page was sobbing and laughing."

"Did you see either of them again?"

"No. We at once locked all the doors and windows and then Dr. Foster hurried upstairs to Miss Page. It was some hours before he could quiet her even with strong sedatives, and when at last she was asleep it was so near dawn that it seemed best for us to stay right there until morning."

"Did you hear Dr. Foster give an opinion as to this second attack of madness on the part of Miss Page?"

"Yes. I asked him what could have caused it, and he pointed to the broken whiskey bottle, saying that the brutal attendant was undoubtedly drunk even before he had entered the room, and had probably continued drinking in Miss Page's presence. 'This,' he said, 'proves conclusively to me that Miss Page is suffering from what we term "repressed psychosis," superinduced by the sight of intoxication.'" been only a fraction of what he needs, but they have been invaluable and especially theg asoline.

The troops are now dependent entirely on the motor truck supply out of Columbus. Men returning here from Casas Grandes today assert that the trucks are having a hard time of it and that many of them are stalled along the trail. There are now more than a hundred of the trucks in constant operation, but it is the opinion of the military that a thousand will have to be obtained if the project to secure the use of the railway is abandoned.

General Gavira wast eminded today that it was by the use of American railways that Carranza was able to deliver the blow which broke the backbone of the Villa power in the north. He was reminded that thousands of Mexican soldiers were shipped from Eagle Pass and Presidio to Agua Prieta, a distance of eight hundred miles, under thep rotection of American troops through American territory. It made no impression on him whatever. He merely shrugged his shoulders and asserted that the roads could not be used without the consent of the First Chief.

STRIKE PROMOTORS TO BE TRIED FOR TREASON

London—Dr. Christogher Addison, Parliamentary Under Secretary for Munitions, revealed to the House of Commons today a grave condition of strike promotion and what he described as ad eliberate organized policy of holding up munitions of war, which, in the opinion of Sir Edward Carson, who followed him in the debate, might justify the men involved beeing charged with high treason for assisting the King's enemies.

Mr. James Henry Thomas, labor member of Parliament for Derby, and assistant general secretary of the Amalgamated Society of ailway Service, also spoke, demanding, as a responsible trades union leader, that men should be put on trial.

The announcement by Dr. Addison which brought out these opinions was that six leaders of a body calling itself the Clyde Workers' Committee, which has been attempting to foment strikes among munitions workers on the Clyde, had been removed from the district by the military authorities. In making the announcement Dr. Addison added that the committee had in particular attempted to stop work in the factories where large guns were being made and in five cases had succeeded. The strikes have no relation to industrial conditions, he said, and were denounced by trades union leaders.

The object of the committee ,he explained, was to compel theg overnment tot repeal the Munitions of War and Military Service acts and to withdraw all limitations upon increases of pay, strikes and freedom of action without government control.

GERMAN DESTROYER LOST IN NORTH SEA BATTLE

London—Further details are given of the naval battle in the North Sea off the islend of Sylt in an official announcement issued last night confirming the report that a British light cruiser rammed and sank a German destroyer and that the Medusa was lost. The announcement follows:—

"All the ships employed in the operations off the German coast have now returned to their ports evcept the Medusa, which ship, as was feared, was sunk, after all her crew had been taken off in very bad weather by the destroyer Lassoc without any casulty—a fine piece of seamanship.

"Our destroyers, while dealing with enemy patrol vessels, were themselves attacked by enemy aircraft. They received no damage of any kind.

"The following prisoners were rescued from the enemy patrol trawlers which were previously reported sunk by our ships, viz., four from the trawler Otto Rudolf, sixteen from the trawler Braunschweig.

"On Saturday night a diyision of German destroyers was encountered by our fight cruisers. One of these destroyers was rammed and sunk by H. M. S. Cleopatra. None of her crew was saved."

SOCIALIST EX-MAYOR EXPELLED FROM PARTY

Schenectady— Mayor George R. Lunn, the only socialist Mayor in New York State ,was ousted from the socialist party last night by the New York State Socialist Committee. The action followed a bitter fight waged for a long time between Mayor Lunn and the socialist organization.

In order to accomplish the expulsion the State socialist organization threw out the entire Schenectady socialist local, but took steps immediately to reorganize it. Mayor Lunn will not be permitted to rejoin the local.

Mayor Lunn was elected to office five years ago, serving for one term of two years. He met defeat when he ran again, but went into office at the election again last year. He has refused to consult the socialist organization about making appointments, instead filling the city posts with members of other parties when he thought the men more efficient.

30 KILLED; 40 HURT IN WRECK

Cleveland, O.—At least thirty persons were killed—the exact total may not be known until nightfall— and more than ofrty injured in the wreck early today of three of the New York Central's crack passenger trains a mile west of Amherst. Twenty-five bodies had been taken out at noon and five more were known to be in the debris.

WAITE SAYS HE KILLED MRS. PECK

New York— Dr. Arthur Warren Watie confessed yesterday afternoon to the murder of his millionaire father-in-law, John E. Peck, and of the mother-in-law, Mrs. Hannah Maria Peck.

The tall athletic young dentist, turned on his prison pallet at Bellevue Hospital and said to Detective Raymond C. Schindler and the attends:

"I killed them both! I killed Mrs. Peck by giving her germs all mixed together. Oh, there were a lot of them. When itw as time for her to die I gave her ab ig shot of morphine.

"I tried germs on Mr. Peck. The action of the germs was too slow. He would not die. So I gave him arsenic. That killed him."

To Schindler and later to District Attorney Edward Swann the prisoner said he was under the influence of his "alter ego," whom he described as the "man from Egypt."

Waite did not repeat his confession last night to Distrit Attorney Swann, who had gone to the hospital for that purpose. The interview between Judge Swann and thep risoner was cut short by the dentist's newly retained counsel, Walter R. Deuel.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

Quite a remarkable movement has been started by the Art Department of the Fulton High school. This movement is of very great significance, because it will set an example to many people and because it is such a great effort, we are very glad indeed to recommend it to everybody in the city of Fulton.

An April 5th, 1916, there will be given in the Quirk theatre a Moving Picture Benefit for SCHOOL GARDENING.

The teacher in charge is going to use the money received from the benefit for the planting of flowers, shrubbery and trees around the school buildings in this city of FULTON. Not only will this materially help to make the city look better in the spring and summer time, but it will also prove what a few cents spent for seeds and shrubbery and trees will mean in the beautifying of our good city. For this benefit the regular admittance will be charged (ten cents) and we urge the people of FULTON to visit the Quirk theatre on that day, so that the Art Department will have a neat little sum to do business with.

We have been taking a few pictures of the very fine window displays in the city of FULTON and they will be soon on exhibit in our windows and in some of the windows of the store in the city.

We wonder, if you have looked at the displays of the FULTON merchants with attention. It will prove to you that VERY FINE GOODS can be had here in the city for a VERY REASONABLE PRICE and we sinterely hope that you will all decide to TRADE AT HOME.

The merchandise shown by FULTON merchants is of HIGH QUALITY and compares most favorably with the goods sold elsewhere. We challenge any one herewith to show us better goods for LOWER prices in cities the size of FULTON. You can't do it.

We are very grateful for the cooperation shown by the manufacturers in the city for blowing the whistles yesterday as a sign of opening of the first Spring Display under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. The American Woolen Mills company has the honor of blowing the whistle FIRST. Let the good work of combination and cooperation go on and the city will benefit greatly.

Mr. George Coffing Warner Refutes Charges of Unfair Attitude Toward Battle Island Interests

Mr. George Caffing Warner is out with a reply to the charges contained in a letter written by Mr. N. L. Whitaker for publication in Monday's newspaper. The following letter, it is presumed, is the one which brought from Mr. Whitaker certain caustic remarks:

Nelson L. Whitaker, Esq.,

My Dear Sir:—

I understand that the Battle Island Paper company plant has installed in it the following motors:

2—150 H. P. motors 2200 V. 60 cycle, A. C.
1—100 H. P. motors 2200 V. 60 cycle, A. C.
2—30 H. P. motors 220 V. 60 cycle, A. C.
4—10 H. P. motors 220 V. 60 cycle, A. C.
11—15 H. P. motor 220 V. 60 cycle, A. C.
1—5 H. P. motors 220 V. 60 cycle, A. C.

You will note that all of these motors are 60 cycle.

The Fulton Light, Heat & Power company would like very much to supply the Battle Island Paper company with any electrical current it may need. The Fulton company has for its service its Hydro-Steam electric plant on Fulton lower dam; its new turbine plant (which we consider the most economical and efficient steam plant in the Oswego valley) and it also has first claim on the Hydro-steam electric plant of Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper company on Fulton upper dam. All of these plants are within or near the City of Fulton; they have a total capacity of about 11,500 h. p., and I think that the Fulton's company maximum peak load at present is only about 1400 h. p., so you will see there is a very big surplus of capacity in Fulton company for taking on new business.

The Fulton company has a [illegible] line recently built which connects all of its hydro-steam electric plants immediately with the Battle Island company's plant. Over two miles of this line was especially built at the request of the Battle Island Paper company to take care of its business. The Fulton company's electrical equipment is all 60 cycle and the same is true of the equipment of the Battle Island Paper company. I hear some talk of your considering installing 25 cycle apparatus at the Battle Island Paper company plant. If you do this it will mean quite a loss for you in disposing of the 60 cycle apparatus. I think any electrical man will tell you that over 90 per cent of all new installation now being in the U. S. are 60 cycles; it is unquestionably the standard and best practice; that you can get earlier and more regular deliveries on 60 cycles apparatus both for your original orders and all repair parts, and that if you use 25 cycle apparatus, as it is apparatus that has to be specially made on special order you are subject to considerable delay particularly on repair parts, which are likely to be very annoying.

I am told by one of the engineers that he heard a representative of one of the big electric companies, either the Westinghouse or General Electric, say last week that he thought it was only a question of time before the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power company would be obliged to convert all of its apparatus used for lighting and power purposes (except street railway use) to 60 cycle. Furthermore I understand that the product of the Battle Island Paper company ordinaryily sold at $35 to $40 a ton and that it is now selling at $60 to $70 per ton. If this is true, why not buy your electricity of the Fulton LIight, Heat & Power company which can give you immediate service, using the apparatus you already have installed at the Battle Island Paper company. If you decide to use 25 cycle apparatus, it means long delays for construction, for getting franchises approved by the Public Service Commission and perhaps by the Courts; then the stringing of the copper and possibliy the construction of a new line. And when you get all through you have 25 cycle apparatus, which is not as good for your purpose (Battle Island Paper company) as 60 cycle apparatus. On the other hand, if you go ahead with the 60 cycle apparatus, you will be making sure of a very handsome profit on the business which you can now take on.

You, of course, know that 60 cycle current, is much better for lighting purposes because of the constant intermittent flickering when lamps are operated on 25 cycle current. Furthermore, the 60 cycle apparatus you already have installed at attle Island Paper Company plant, is connected to your machines for motors running as a 60 cycle apparatus. The speed of 25 cycle apparatus is different from that of 60 cycle apparatus an d therefore if you change to 25

The Girls Couldn't Resist Displays

Two young women who gave their names as Mary Misswa and Helen Kurasz, claiming to live in Oswego, were arrested this afternoon at three o'clock by Chief of Police Dyer as they were waiting at the Empire United aRilways terminal.

The arrest followed the complaint of W. H. Patterson, of 115 Oneida st., who visited thep olice station shortly before the women were arrested and stated that some articles had been stolen from his store.

A skirt and coat identified by Mr. Patterson as stock from his store werew orn by the women. They had slipped the articles over their regular clothing. Stuffed within the waist of one woman was a blue shirt waist. This discovery was madeb efore the arrival of a woman to complete the search. This article of wear belongs to the New York Shop. At this place one woman acted as a decoy in getting a saleswoman to look from a window while her companion proceeded to slip the apparel over her street clothes.

It is believed by the police that the women were making a tour of the stores for the express purpose of securing plunder.

Abandoned Canal Lands Must be Sold

The Land Board at Albany yesterday granted the application of the Hart Coal Corporation, the Massaro Macaroni company and S. Waldhorn, directing that the property applied for on the abandoned canal site shall be sold. The application made by the Hunters was alid on the table. Protests were offered, in effect that the appraisal of the aGge property was excessive. This claim was also laid on the table and a re-appraisal directed. The property to be sold to the Hart and Massaro interests will be subject to the rights of the city of Fulton whose desire it is to secure the use of Wall street.

On behalf of the city, Attorney Hillick, who was present in Albany yesterday, together with Mayor Lewis, made application to the board to release to the City of Fulton, free of charge, any right or title that the State may have so as to preserve Wall street at a uniform width of 24 feetfl The officials claimed that the State had acquired thep roperty for canal purposes without compensation. This request, the commissioners refused to grant, it being stated that many cities had applied for canal lands; that to grant Fulton's request would result in establishing an undesirable precedent.

The refusal made by the Commissioners in the land office is deemed unjust by the city attorney, who says it is evident that the State has taken over a very large portion, if not all, of this street and occupied it without paying to any person any compensation for the easement. Mr. Hillick says the intention of the Legislature, as expressed in Section 51 of the Public Lands Law, is that where the State takes property for canal purposes without compensation and has now abandoned it, it should be restored to the former owners; and that the local authorities having permitted the use of a portion of this highway for canal purposes (the canal having been abandoned) the highway should be restored.

JOLTING UNCLE SAM

Ex-President Taft has taken his place among contemporary prophets and predicts that this nation is in grave danger of receiving "a jolt." Does Mr. Taft imply that the United States has not become accustomed to jolts during the past three years. Uncle Sam's list of jolters for that period is of great length and international in its scope.

A few of the more prominent names upon the roll of our disturbers of the peace are Huerta, Villa von Tirpitz, Bryan, Gore, Dumba and von Papen. There has been a picturesque variety in the kind of jolts given to us by these gentlemen, but if Mr. Taft's prophecy is fulfilled the shock he foresees will find the people of the United States quite hardened to jolts and jolters.—N. Y. Sun.

RECKONING IN IRELAND

When he was in Galway some time ago Mr. Redmond warned his fellow countrymen that the work of 40 years was now at stake and that if they would they might prove themselves "a nation of reckless, irresponsible, unthinking men, utterly unworthy of self-government" There are some men in Ireland today who seem determined to undo what has been done by their friends and to deliver themselves over into the enemy's hands. It is not a large party, but it is noisy and very active, and in every possible way it is comforting and encouraging those who profess to base their opposition to every measure of Irish independence on the belief that the people of Ireland are unfit to govern themselves. There is little reason to question the recent revelations in the Morning Post of London, nor can it be doubted that there is a well organized conspiracy against recruiting in the South and West. In a sense this is good news for the Unionists, and they will, of course, make the most of it. It is true that the conditions may be attributed chiefly to the slackness of those in authority and to the extraordinary liberties allowed to the mischievous Sinn Fein element, but it will not be possible for the better sort of Irishmen to excuse themselves on that score when the day of reckoning comes.—New York Tribune.

SWAT THE FRAWLEY BILL

Numerous comments were received by this newspaper, last evening, upon the telegram which was given prominence on this page over the name of Mr. William Randolph Hearst of New York City, all of them commendatory of the courageous stand taken by the one publisher of a great daily newspaper in behalf of the purity of the life of the Commonwealth.

Boxing as an exercise is a healthy and clean sport, but the spectacle which occurred in Madison Square Garden last Saturday evening was nothing less than a brutal exhibition of brute force. It was an outrage upon the morals and decency of the people of this Commonwealth. It contributed nothing to the welfare of the stars of the occasion, except in the matter of dollars and cents. It dragged into the dust of the squared ring what should be kept as a clean, manly sport, selling as so much merchandise human lives, and, debasing each and every spectator.

It is indeed time that a New York paper came out on the side of law and order and decency, to proclaim against the Frawley law, which is a fraud and should be removed from the pages of history. More than that, the time was never more opportune for the people north of the Harlem to follow the lead given to them by Mr. Hearst's newspaper in an effort to swat the politicians who squint at the tenets of a law which legalizes debauchery of human beings.

Mr. Hearst's cry for unanimity on the part of the press and organizations whose purpose it is to work for the uplift of a community, coming as it does from the wilderness of a great city, calls for immediate discussion and action. Any movement that will cause to be repealed a law which does nothing for clean sport, but which panders to the taste of degeneracy by encouraging brute endurance becomes one of the pressing opportunities of societies whose purpose it is to espouse the cause of good citizenship. It is their duty to rally to the support of Mr. Hearst, laying every other consideration aside until the battle is won.

A STATEMENT NOT CONVINCING

Speaking of the prize fight held in Madison Square Garden, Miss Florence Guernsey says, in last Sunday's American:

"I think that when women become citizens of the State all these debasing and brutal things will be abolished."

Miss Guernsey's forecast would be more convincing if it were not for the fact that so many women attended this very prize fight.

The attendance of so many women of all classes at this prize fight makes it a serious question whether women are going to behave, not like good men, but merely like evil men; whether suffrage is going to improve moral and political conditions or whether it is going to aggravate what is already bad in those conditions.

We wish that we could be convinced by Miss Guernsey's statement. But we must repeat that the attendance of so many women at this prize fight decidedly lessens conviction.—N. Y. American.

A VILLAGE FOREST

The Boonville Herald prints a photograph of a 15-year-old white pine forest which was planted on sandy soil worthless for any other purpose than for growing trees. The paper points out that the village of Boonville has a great deal of and just like it extending from the village outward and that it would be a most excellent investment for the village to plant a reasonable number of acres for the income which would accrue later.

The planting of a forest of trees by a village is so uncommon in America that it is probably the best advertising scheme that Boonville could undertake. This would be a value not often figured when a town decides to raise trees.

Tree planting by cities and villages is new only in America, and here it is so new only it has scarcely been started. In Europe it is common enough. A Syracuse professor tells of his amazement at finding in Germany tenant owners of farms razing the buildings and planting Norway spruce. Frankfort has an 8,000-acre forest, from which it makes a net profit of around $5 an acre per year. Attention is also called to a 35-acre woodlot in New York which produced in 22 years hardwood that sold for $106 per acre at the end of the period. That was at the rate of $4.82 per acre per year.

A municipality has some advantage over a person when it comes to growing and managing a forest. The village goes on forever, but the individual doesn't live long enough to reap many crops of trees. The best that the individual can do is to cut the crop in his old age, or sell out at the accrued value of the forest before it is time to cut.

The village, too, can get its trees from the Conservation Commission at a cheaper price. It can also swing the financial end to greater advantage than most individuals.

Necessity hasn't compelled the planting of trees in this country, as it has in Europe, but that time is rapidly approaching. There isn't any doubt that the individual or town that plants a number of acres now will be in a position to step in and secure handsome profits at a time when most people will be beginning to see the absolute necessity of tree planting.—Utica Observer.

CENSORING FILMS

A bill has been introduced in the legislature to create a new commission of three members at $4,000 each, with authority to employ a secretary and such clerks and agents as they deem necessary and fix their compensation, to censor movie films. There seems behind it more of a purpose to create positions and salaries and add to the already back-breaking burdens of the state than any moral purpose. There is already a national board of censors, but the public self is the best censor and as has been shown both on the legitimate stage and in the movie films will support the best and reject the worst. Giving three persons the power to say what is moral and proper for some ten million other people is hardly necessary. The ten million will decide for themselves and at less expense to the state. It is true that immoral pictures are shown, but they don't last long; the public rejects them. The proprietors of movie shows take what comes to them from the central agency and probably would rather have moral pictures than bad ones, but put on what they have. When they find, as they very quickly do, that the pictures are not acceptable to the public they take them off in a hurry and try not to get any more of that kind. Besides that no two people look at pictures the same way and what is shocking to one does not shock another and and it is a pretty fine point where morality ceases and immorality begins. The public has a sense of it, however, and defines it pretty accurately and proprietors of movies have found that in the long run sensational pictures of crime and immorality do not pay. As on the stage the clean play has the longest run, so on the screen the clean picture gives the most pleasure and is the most popular. This public censorship has improved the movie films very strikingly: they are of a far better class and cleaner and better than the first ones which were shown, made purely for sensational purposes, and they grow better all the time.—Watertown Times.

CASTORIA

The little information which comes through the news from China is consistent in that it indicates a grave political crisis in the affairs of the Celestial Kingdom. Japan has never ceased to prosecute her ambition. A year ago she demanded more in the way of concessions than the Chinese would grant. Recently she reasserted her claims. Japan could but view with anxiety the change in the form of government in China, and it is alleged that the Japanese people are so incensed over the change to a monarchy that the government at Tokyo is afraid. The United States has committed itself in the Chinese business to an extent only paralleled by its action in the matter of Cuba and Mexico. The Chinese people have come to look upon the United States as a friend, powerful and disinterested. Perhaps there is being written now in Chinese affairs a chapter upon which this country will be in honor bound to turn the searchlight before it is closed.

The government has already provided a small but nevertheless important nucleus of the personnel of defense in the newly established coast guard. This body comprises about 300 commissioned officers and nearly 4,000 men, organized as a revenue cutter service and a life saving service. In wartime the guard is under orders of the navy department and also in peace times if the president so directs. The enlisted men are trained to seamanship and the officers thoroughly trained for their duties. Being well distributed geographically, the coast guard is admirably adapted to assist the work of coast defense and to organize and direct volunteer forces in time of need.

In the constitution of the United States, article 8, congress is empowered by section 15—

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions;

And by section 16—

To provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively the appointment of officers and the authority of training the militia under the discipline prescribed by congress.

Taken together these two sections seem to indicate that the United States constitution limits national control of the state troops to the time of insurrections and threatened invasions.

New York state has been setting a good example for nearly a year past in developing a reserve to her national guard. It will comprise retired or discharged members of the national guard who voluntarily enroll for drill. Uniforms and equipment will be provided, and a call to arms may find the active ranks increased by 50 per cent or more of the normal strength. The reserve companies and battalions will be attached to the regiments in which their members formerly served, and in this way the war strength may eventually be doubled by additions that fit in to the existing machine.

Competent and highly paid experts and inventors liberally supported by the great nations at war are developing the airship to the highest point of efficiency. The machines are doing feats and carrying burdens not dreamed of even six months ago. With the "airy navies" foretold by Tennyson actually grappling in the central blue peace should naturally bring to realization his dream of the "heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails," and so on.

If night schools can make good citizens out of raw aliens who labor all day, night drills should be equal to making passable soldier recruits out of husky young men whose day work consists of pushing a lead pencil or handling a yardstick.

The estimate for increase of population in the United States for 1915 is 1,817,000. But for the war immigration would have made the figures 2,300,000 without doubt.

China is buying our clocks. If the Celestials will take to moving by American time they may yet make Japanese pretensions to tutorship a by word.

Hughes proved himself a past master at investigating, and why not serve such a good sized chunk of that sort of talent on the supreme court bench?

If the navies of Europe smash one another up as the armies are doing America will easily be first without adding another ship.

Grownups will have to take to bibs unless some genius comes to the rescue with squirtless grapefruit, oranges and lemons.

Unsightly billboards are to be abolished in Manila. So being an outlying possession of Uncle Sam is not all to the bad.

TALKS ON THRIFT

THRIFT CAMPAIGN SERIES

No. 7.—THROWING MONEY AT SOMETHING YOU CAN'T HIT

Thrift is that feeling which comes over you when you know you've been stung. Did you ever notice the man at a summer resort who steps boldly up to the counter, lays down a nickel, picks up three balls and throws them wildly at a negro's head, a row of grinning dolls or some other contraption devised to lure him away from his nickel, hit nothing and walk away with a dejected look?

Did you ever go on an outing, or on a night's pleasure bent, and be a "good fellow," a "good spender," and go home with that what-did-I-get-out-out-of-it feeling?

Did you ever attend an auction, lose your head and buy something you didn't need and couldn't use, at a price twice as much as it was worth and have the same sensation?

That was your conscience entering a protest against waste—your thrifty self struggling against your thriftless self, trying to show you that you waste money only to regret it, and, even though you forget it, you won't alter the situation.

Every summer resort is built upon the proposition that most everybody wastes a certain amount of money, gets foolish at times, takes a throw or two at something they know they can't hit, just to see how it feels. Coney Island and the "movie" do not despise the nickels—all they want is enough of them. Did you ever stop to consider that nothing at amusement resorts costs over ten cents except food? Summer resorts know that human nature is frivolous in summer time, bound to spend a part of the week's wage in being foolish, generating thrills, that even though innocent are costly, and only thrills after all. And if the crop of foolish folk were not a bumper one every year, and if the stings of conscience were heeded, there would be many an empty booth at the beaches this year.

You can spend money foolishly so long that your conscience will not trouble you, just as you can cultivate a bad habit so long that you cease to think it wrong. Even the best of us, with the most careful management, are bound to waste a certain amount of money. Somehow it gets away from us, try as we will to prevent it. But the man who deliberately throws his money at something he can't hit, whether it be a negro's head or a business proposition, must not complain if the ball goes wide of the mark.

You can have a day at the beach for a dollar. Fifty cents for your swim, ten cents for car fare and forty cents for lunch. And that will put red blood in your veins and key up your appetite wholesomely. Three balls for a nickel never does that.

The crowd would rather look on while you throw your money away than to throw their own; but what compensation have you? When your money is gone they will buy no shoes for your babies, nor pay your rent when you're sick, nor subscribe to your pension when you're down and out. Many a catastrophe in life is caused by throwing money at something you can't hit, whether in business, in society, or at the beach but listen to that still, small voice—that sting of conscience, and do what it tells you, for it stings to a profitable purpose. It is waving a red flag of danger to keep you safe. Heed it.—American Bankers Association.

A LARGE BANK ACCOUNT REQUIRED

The American government paid Russia $7,200,000 for the territory of Alaska. At that rate, more than six Alaskas could be bought for a check which went through the Clearing House today. The little slip of paper called for $43,538,131.11 and was in payment, not for a principality, but for some other slips of paper representing loans to a steel company. The check was drawn by Lee Higginson & Co. on the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, to the order of the Guarantee Trust Company, in payment for Midvale Steel 5 per cent. convertible bonds sold by a syndicate composed of Lee, Higginson & Co., and the National City Bank. So far as is known, the only checks ever drawn "in the same class" with the one just mentioned were one for $62,075,000 and another for $49,080,000 in connection with Pennsylvania bond issues; one drawn by the United States government for $40,000,000 in payment to the French syndicate for Panama Canal rights, and another for $40,000,000 to pay for Mexican bonds bought here.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Waiting.

The first little cat said, "Meow-ow-ow!"
The next little cat said, "Spit-t!"
The third little cat looked very wise,
And the fourth one near had a fit.

The first little cat reached out a paw,
The next little cat sang a note,
The third little cat twitched its whiskers,
And the fourth one stroked down its coat.

The first little cat said, "Oh, hurry!"
The next little cat said, "Oh, wait!"
The third little cat said not a word,
And the fourth one cried, "Don't be late!"

Then four little kittycats scurried
Way off to an old apple tree,
Where four little birds, safe in their nest,
Were cozy and sweet as could be.

And the four little cats, they waited,
And four little birds waited, too,
Until, with song and flurry of wings,
Mother came—and waiting was through.

Then four little cats scampered homeward,
And four little birds in the tree
Just warbled and chirruped and twittered
As happy as small birds could be.

GOLDBERG CARTOONS

GOLDBERG ANIMATED CARTOONS SOMETHING NEW IN PHOTOPLAYS —FAMOUS ARTIST OF THE "MAIL" WILL DRAW FOR THE SCREEN.

The announcement that R. L. Goldberg, the famous artist-humorist of the N. Y. Evening Mail, is producing animated cartoon comedies for the motion picture screen which will be released through Pathe, recalls a romance of success that is almost unparalelled.

Mr. Goldberg for some years has enjoyed a position on the very top round of the newspaper ladder, and his cartoons have achieved such popularity that they have been syndicated and are being published in one newspaper in every large city of the country.

To be only thirty-three and yet draw a salary of $56,000 yearly, with percentages bringing it up to some $100,000, is to be in a class by yourself, and that is true of R. L. Goldberg. He was born in San Francisco, and at an early age made up his mind to be a newspaper artist. His father, a substantial business man, strenuously objected to the boy's ambition, saying that there was no money in the newspapor business. Mr. Goldberg, senior, prefers to forget his early objections now.

As a student in the University of California, studying to be an engineer, he was drawing continually for the mere fun of it. His pictures were published in the college paper and his fellow students learned to look for them. There was something different in the young man's outlook on life, something different in the creations of his pencil, and something different in the captions,—in the imaginary conversations of his brain people. He graduated from the University in 1904 with the degree of Bachelor of Science and soon got a job at planning sewers in the San Francisco City Engineer's office at $100 per month. However, it strains one's sense of humor considerably to see humor in sewers, so he threw up his job to take one with a San Francisco paper at $8 a week. He was hired to draw daily cartoons for the sport page, but the paper didn't publish his cartoons and he wanted to see them in print. So he quit this job also, and went to another paper that agreed to publish his pictures. The salary was even less at the new job than at his other one, but that didn't bother him, for he found it better fun. A few months of this and he decided that New York was the better field, and so went East. He talked to three or four editors, all of whom he failed to interest until he went to the Evening Mail. There he was offered the chance to make pictures daily for the sporting page. That was nine years ago, and he is still with the Mail. He started in at $50 per week. Three months later it became $65 a week; six months later $75 a week, and at the end of a year he got a two years' contract at $100 a week. At this time, too, his cartoons were first sold to other newspapers throughout the country. Today his pictures are being seen by more than 2,300,000 persons daily. At the close of his third year he signed a three years' contract at $300 a week, followed by another at $450 a week. His new contract now gives him a salary of $50,000 per year and royalties—surely a pretty respectable jump from $8 per week.

Mr. Goldberg works hard for his big salary. Early and late he is at it, going over his pictures again and again until he has produced what he wanted to obtain. His pictures are intensely human and his characters unlike anything that was ever conceived before.

Mr. Goldberg is the most companionable of persons. His success has not spoiled him, and he is as modest as though he were still earning his $8 a week. His animated cartoons represent a year's patient work and experimentation, and they will strike a new note of originality and cleverness on the screen.

There is little doubt but what the Pathe people have done a good stroke of business in acquiring these films.

"NEW YORK" CONTAINS SOME FINE NIGHT PHOTOGRAPHY SCENES

Pathe—A. H. Woods Picture, Shows Broadway by Night.

Some very interesting and unusual scenes of Broadway by night, are shown in Pathe's "New York," adapted from A. H. Woods' play of the same name. The cameraman was stationed on the roof of an office building and was able to film a long stretch of the "great white way." The remarkable changing electric signs which make the street unlike any other in the world are clearly shown, and the processions of trolley cars and automobile headlights make endless lines of light which shoot up and down like the tail of a comet. No better examples of night photography in motion pictures have ever been made.

PATHE PRODUCER RUNS UP AGAINST THE BLUE LAWS

Geo. Fitzmaurice, who produced Pathe's "Big Jim Garrity," had his company down in Georgia for several weeks. The weather was so bad they were kept indoors for days at a stretch. "Fitz" finally lost all track of the passage of time. When Sunday came he braved the elements and went out into the back yard of the country hotel and practiced shooting at a mark. Within ten minutes he had been arrested, arraigned before the magistrate at his home and fined $25 and costs for "hunting on the Sabbath."

Robert Edeson, who stars in Kipling's "Light That Failed," which is being produced for Pathe, says the title is a good one, for the company was held up recently for three days owing to poor light when they were doing exteriors.

SNOW SCENES MANUFACTURED FOR "THE IRON CLAW"

Desperate Measures Used on Pathe Serial.

Manufactured snow storms are an old story on the legitimate stage, but Director Jose who is now producing the new Pathe serial, "The Iron Claw," believes he is the originator of the fabricated film snowstorm. After a strenuous day, in which Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis, who are starring in the new Pathe pulse-quickener, had encountered all the danger that Jose could think of, the company repaired to their hotel at Toms River, N. J., to rest awhile and dream.

Toms River awoke the next morning to Jose's unmuffled query as to who had stolen the snow. All unconscious of the fundamental principle of "movie" mechanics that continued action demands continuity of scene character as far as weather conditions are concerned, the enterprising Toms River street cleaning department had stripped every vestige of the snow from off their fair community and their relentless shovels had completely ruined all of Jose's finest scenic effects.

The local weather prophets predicted "more snow soon" and the Pathe players settled down to wait. Three idle days passed before Jose got his idea, but not three idle minutes afterwards. "Go out and hire every wagon you can get," he ordered, "and we'll have snow from Montreal, if necessary, rather than wait another minute."

And that's how it was done. The pure white flakes were transported from a point half a mile away out or range of the Toms River diggers, sprinkled carefully over the "locations" required and the work of "The Iron Claw" making went on as merrily as ever.

SAY HIDDEN GOLD IS MYTH

California Travelers Find No Treasure In Patagonia.

San Francisco.—Hidden gold in Patagonia, to which Captain Thomas Owens was to lead the band of adventurers on the schooner Academy, was a myth, according to four members of the ill fated expedition, who returned to San Francisco on the Pacific mailer Newport from Balboa. They said that Owens' real name is John Owen Whoffer, that he was a poor navigator and that for three and a half months they sailed aimlessly around the Pacific until they finally reached the Colombian coast.

The Academy left San Francisco June 21 of last year bound for Patagonia, where Captain Owens said there was gold that rivaled the wealth of the Incas. With him were several Californians who had invested in the enterprise with hopes of great gain.

Eugene L. Halle, H. E. Schuck, William Simms and H. F. Radke, who came home on the Newport, were authority for the statement that Owens was incompetent, that he tried to turn the Academy back to San Francisco and that he proposed to sell the schooner in Callao and buy a tug to take them to the fabulous mines.

OFFICE FOR EACH CITIZEN.

California Town, With Nine Men, Has Nine Jobs to Fill.

Coram, Cal.—This town, the smallest in the state, has a registered population of twenty-one, and only nine of these are men. C. W. Baker, a town trustee, does not want to run again, as he is justice of the peace of Keswick township and has honor enough. The other men have all consented to accept the offices, of which there are nine.

No nomination petitions have been filed. The election on April 10 will be conducted on the "write in" plan. Women will sit on the election board, as it is against the law for candidates to conduct an election.

Mayor George O'Grady is mining at present in Siskiyou county with his partner, City Clerk Kinyon. The city marshal and city treasurer are both gone.

The only source of revenue is the $25 a quarter license collected from each of the two saloons. The money is ample, for there are funds in the treasury and there are no debts.

RELATES HARDSHIPS IN PURSUIT OF VILLA

Indian Scout Says Difficulties Face U. S. Army.

Denver.—Some of the difficulties that face the United States army in its pursuit of Villa were told here by James H. Cook, who in 1885 was chief scout for the Eighth United States cavalry that crossed into Mexico and captured Geronimo, the Apache chief. He led the American soldiers over much of the country the United States soldiers must cover to get Villa. He said:

"A veritable zone of death will have to be traversed by the American troopers. They will have to go over some of the worst country in the world. If Villa chooses he can fight as Geronimo and his followers did—go back into the mountains, kill his horses, scatter on foot and pick our soldiers off one by one from behind rocks. It may take us months, even years, to get Villa.

"But no men on earth are better for the task than the officers in charge of the American expedition. I personally know Lieutenant Colonel D. C. Cabell, now chief of staff to General Pershing. He was with me on the Geronimo expedition and knows the country as well as any white man.

"The aeroplane will assist our troops in the campaign, but it cannot match with all the difficulties of the region. Between the peaks are deep canyons, sometimes 1,000 feet deep and less than forty feet wide. These ravines cannot be crossed by any except the old Indians of the country. They can get over on foot.

"The only thing that makes the expedition look hopeful to me is my faith in the men who command it."

DRAW LOTS TO PREACH.

White Plains Pastors Try New Way of Exchanging Pulpits.

White Plains, N. Y.—"We had the time of our lives," said the Rev. William Dana Street, pastor of the Ridgeview Avenue Congregational church and one of the six ministers here who filled pulpits that were assigned to them by drawing lots. Sealed envelopes containing the names of the churches were put in a hat, and each minister drew one.

"None of us knew which church he had drawn," said Mr. Street, "until a couple of days after when we opened the envelopes."

The Rev. Chaellis E. Nichols, pastor of the First Baptist church, exchanged with the Rev. Ernest L. Walz, pastor of the Chatterton Hill Congregational church; the Rev. Herbert E. Wright, pastor of the Memorial M. E. church, the largest Protestant church here, exchanged with the Rev. David W. De Forest of St. Paul's M. E. Protestant church, one of the smallest churches.

What this country really wants is more of the real U boat question—that is, under our own flag in our own waters.

STRICT RULES OF ARMY CENSORS

Funston Wants Only a Few Newspaper Men With Army.

TO EXAMINE ALL PICTURES.

No Movie Men Allowed With Invading Forces and None but Real Reporters Permitted to Accompany Expedition. Violators of Rules Liable to Arrest. Personal Communications Read.

General Funston has decreed that only a few war correspondents shall accompany the American forces into Mexico.

Secretary of War Baker has upheld the decision of General Funston, but strong pressure is being brought to bear on him to throw open the doors.

The degree of censorship imposed by General Funston so far has been mild compared to that he can exercise under the army regulations. It is prescribed in the regulations that censorship within the theater of operations is controlled by the commander of the field forces. An officer is assigned as censor and provided with necessary assistants.

Stops Public and Private News.

Censorship includes censorship over private communications and over press publications and communications.

All private communications, whether they be of officers, soldiers, foreign attaches, newspaper correspondents or any other individuals, dispatched from the theater of operations are liable to censorship. A censor is authorized to suppress any statement that might be of value to the enemy or prejudicial to the welfare of the forces in the field.

All newspapers or journals in the theater of operations are subject to censorship, and they can be suppressed by the censor whenever he deems it expedient.

Each correspondent is required to file an application giving a brief history of his career and to take an oath of loyalty of the usual military form. Their employers are required to give bond for them. Men who have evidently secured credentials with a view to adventure rather than serious work as correspondents will not be received, and the secretary of war has power to say to whom passes shall be given.

The regulations provide that an official photographer shall accompany each field army or other important independent field force. His films and plates will be sent to Washington promptly, where prints will be issued at a nominal cost to the press. No professional photographers and moving picture men will be received.

Regular correspondents may carry small hand film cameras, but the films must be sent to the censor with the field forces or to the chief censor at Washington, where they will be developed and such of them as pass censorship will be sent to any given address.

The chief censor in Washington shall be a commissioned officer. In this instance he is Captain Cootes, attached to the general staff. There is also a censor attached to General Funston's headquarters, and General Pershing will also have a censor in the field. All correspondents' news or private dispatches, mail letters for publication, private letters, drawings and photographs must be submitted to the censor and receive his stamp before being sent.

The correspondent will not be allowed to send information concerning the occupation or relinquishment of a position, the news of any victory or defeat, the names of organizations or commanders, the disposition of troops, the state of supply or transport, the number of sick, the extent of losses or any other matters of information unless the dispatch or report containing such information is passed on and authorized by the censor. After censorship the correspondent will be shown what if anything has been elided by the censor. Any relaxation of these regulations rests with the commander of the field forces, in this case General Funston.

Liable to Arrest.

The official army telegraph lines are open to correspondents for the sending of dispatches when not occupied with official dispatches, but the dispatches will be sent in the order filed, and the censor shall say how many words may be sent. Within the censor's discretion correspondents may send messengers to carry censored dispatches to better wire facilities than those at the immediate front.

Correspondents are required to dress in the same olive drab uniform worn by the army, but each wears a white brassard on his arm marked with a C to designate his calling. No correspondent can leave the army to which he is attached, either to go home or any other place, without the consent of the war department.

Correspondents can be suspended for distortion of dispatches in the office of publication and also for the use of language or expressions conveying hidden meaning which would tend to deceive or mislead the censor. For extreme offenses they may be sent to the rear under arrest.

For German War Loan.

German engine drivers and railroad men have contributed a million and a half marks ($375,000) to the war fund.

COWS WEAR DRESSES.

Made of Hemp Cloth to Protect Them From the Cold.

San Francisco.—An authority on dress and its cut for dairy cows is a guest at the St. Francis, in the person of Sir Francis Webster of Glasgow, a wealthy manufacturer of hemp goods in Scotland and the owner of a stock range in Texas embracing 1,500,000 acres and thousands of head of stock.

Sir Francis' cows are dressed regularly every winter in suits of hemp cloth made at his own manufacturing establishment, to protect them from the cold and snow, minimize the dangers from tuberculosis and increase their daily yield of milk.

Each cow has two suits a week. They are not elaborate dress affairs by any means, with lingerie and all that. It is a man made dress of one piece, or simply a coverall blanket that fits loosely.

This, of course, means added expense, but the yield of milk during the cold weather is about 27 per cent larger than from cows not similarly protected.

OLD INDIAN LEAVES HOSPITAL

Chief, Over 100, Was More Comfortable on Floor Than In Cot.

Cass Lake, Minn.—Captain John Smith, the aged Chippewa Indian chief, a well known character in this portion of Minnesota, who was struck and badly injured by a Great Northern locomotive in the yards here recently, has left the hospital and gone to the home of a son.

The venerable Indian, reputed to be 117 years old, making him by far the oldest man in Minnesota, if not in the United States, grew better from the very day he was carried in an unconscious condition to the hospital.

As soon as he collected his senses he declined to remain on a hospital cot and made the nurse fix up a bed for him on a blanket on the floor, where he found contentment. He also called for his pipe and tobacco and, because of his age, was humored. He smoked constantly and rapidly grew better, as it developed that while he had been bruised and shocked, he had not been seriously injured.

FANCY HATBANDS IN FAVOR.

Some of the Pretty, Frivolous Things That Appear This Season.

Fancy adjustable hatbands are a feature of the new millinery and appeal to the woman whose longing for variety is hampered by a limited purse. They furnish an excellent means of introducing daring touches of color in an otherwise dark street costume and are adaptable to the stiff crowned, narrow brimmed models as well as to the soft sports hats of felt and beaver for which they were originally designed.

Plain colored ribbons in the new, bright shades as well as in striped and blocked effects, combining two colors in sharp contrast, are the most used for adjustable hatbands. Many of these are so woven as to pass for hand knitted bands and have a convenient elasticity which makes them easily adjustable to any size crown. Others are of a stiff ribbed silk similar to belting and fasten under the flattest of tailored bows.

Double faced ribbons, showing a dark shade on one side and a vivid coloring on the other, are among the most satisfactory for fancy hatbands, as they are capable of almost endless variety in adjustment.

Old Hickory.

The fifth grade class in history stories had been studying about Andrew Jackson, from his boyhood up. Bert, a bright little fellow of nine years, wrote, among other interesting things:

"Andrew Jackson was called 'Old Hickory' because when he was a boy he was a little tough."—New York Tribune.

PRAYERS CURE AN INVALID.

Healing of Seventy-year-old Pennsylvania Man Regarded as a Miracle.

Greensburg, Pa.—Walter McCluckle, seventy, for sixteen years a helpless invalid, is able to walk again, and his recovery is declared to be a direct answer to prayer.

He is a member of the Youngwood United Brethren church. Recently a series of cottage prayer meetings was held, and at Mr. McCluckle's suggestion it was arranged to pray for his healing. The Rev. John Watson, pastor of the church, with twenty-five members, went to his home. Mr. Watson read from the third chapter of Acts, where it is recorded that Peter and John caused the lame man to walk, and from the fifth chapter of James, which declares, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick." The minister and others followed with prayers for Mr. McCluckle's recovery.

The prayers finished, Mr. Watson said, "Let us rise and sing 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow.'" To the astonishment of all, Mr. McCluckle rose with the others, joined in the singing and then walked about the room. His recovery is regarded as a miracle.

PROPOSE MARRIAGE TRUST.

Indiana Justices of the Peace May Get Together Upon Ceremonies.

Jeffersonville, Ind.—Some of the six justices of the peace of Jefferson, who fight among themselves for "marriage couples," are proposing a combination whereby all six would establish central marrying parlors and would pool and divide equally all their earnings.

The chief benefit would be the elimination of the "runners," with whom the justices now split their fees, which only in exceptional cases amount to more than $3. One result of the competition has been the cutting of fees. Many eloping couples now get married for $1. Secret weddings generally cost the elopers a little more, and a twenty-five dollar fee shows up once in awhile.

JAIL BETTER THAN HOME.

Kruse Paid to Stay There Rather Than With His Relatives.

Chicago.—August Kruse, who for five years has been a voluntary inmate of the Du Page county jail at Wheaton, Ill., rather than live with relatives, who doubted his sanity, told the sheriff he was going west to live on a farm.

Kruse paid the county $1 a day for the privilege of living in the jail. In 1906 a petition to have him declared insane was heard in the county court. He was found to be sane, but would not return to his home, and after five years' absence returned to Wheaton and arranged for quarters in the same jail to which he had been taken years before.

"I want to get back to the farm," said Kruse. "I sit here and think of what I used to do, and I'm going to begin over again. I'm going away off, though, not back to the old farm."

It is Well to Secure Chautauqua Tickets Now to Avoid Scarcity

Success is capping the efforts of the teams composing the Chautauqua Association which is made up of about fifty members. These members are responsible for the guarantee of$ 1,500 that will keep Fulton in the Chautauqua circuit. It is the purpose of the Association to sell 750 season tickets at $2 each, but when that number has been sold the price will advance to $2.50 each.

The two ticket selling teams of the Association are of course in competition for a prize. At present they have sold 550 tickets, which leaves only 200 remaining to be sold or engaged. Messrs. G. A. Ansermet and W. H. Hornibrook are captains of teams No. 1 and 2 respectively, and they announce that inasmuch as the remaining tickets are few in number, comparatively, it is essential that persons who have not been called uponb y members of the Association to consider this a request to do so at once.

GENERAL TOO BUSY TO SEND DOCTOR TO HIS DYING SON

Verdun Chief Did Not Stop When Told of His Boy's Wounds.

A most pathetic incident of the battle of Verdun has just been reported. It begins with the following telephone conversation:

"Hello! Is that the farm? Who is speaking?"

"This is the post commander talking."

"How many men have you there?"

"Fifteen."

"Leave your senior sergeant in charge of the redoubt. Take eight men and cut off a strong German patrol which has just entered the wood, but look out for a cross fire. Report to me immediately on your return."

This conversation occurred at midnight. An hour later the German patrol had been annihilated, and the picket returned to the redoubt, carrying a lieutenant mortally wounded. The post commander sprang to the telephone:

"Hello! The coup succeeded, but Lieutenant X. is dying. Can you send a doctor?"

An exclamation of grief came from the other end of the line. There was a pause, then an impassive voice was heard saying:

"Never mind the doctor. Run immediately to the dugouts. The Germans are about to attack. I am sending you three platoons of re-enforcements."

A pause ensued, and then the same voice resumed in broken tones:

"Hello! Are you still there? Kiss Lieutenant X. for me. He is my son. Goodby."

Origin of an Old Saw.

"A feather in your cap" arose from a custom of woodcraft enthusiasts, and in Scotland today the one who kills the first woodcock plucks out a feather and proudly wears it in his cap. Oliver Cromwell gave it dignity of thought and diction when he declined England's offered crown. "Royalty is but a feather in a man's cap," he said. "Let children enjoy their rattle."

MAYOR INVITED BY EX-PRESIDENT

To Attend Meeting to Enforce Peace to Be Held in Washington.

Ex-President William H. Taft has asked Mayor Victor C. Lewis it was announced yesterday, to represent this city at the first national annual assemblage of the League to Enforce Peace to be held at Washington on Friday and Saturday, May 26 and 27. Mr. Taft is President of the League.

The League to Enforce Peace has a platform of four proposals, the main feature of which is contained in the third which provides that the joint armed forces of the great powers be used against any nation or nations who refuse to keep an agreement to try arbitration or conciliation before going to war. The other three proposals are for an international court an international council of conciliation, and a code of international law.

Mr. Taft's letter inviting the Mayor to be present at the Washington conference, also asks him to appoint delegates thereto, and points out that the Taft League is "no-stop-the-war movement, no anti-preparedness movement, no peace-at-any-price endeavor," but "an earnest effort by practical men to bring about, after the close of the European war, a co-operation among the nations which will tend to make peace more permanent and war less probable."

Mr. Taft has sent a similar invitation to Governor Charles S. Whitman asking him to represent the State personally and to send State delegates to the Washington conference.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Molly McIntyre, with all the traits of her rugged Scotch principles of honesty and right showing in her countenance and every action, is the star of "Her Great Hour," the Equitable's next release, which is coming to the Quirk theatre today, and those who have the pleasure of seeing this beautiful screen play will agree that she fairly earned the "Great Hour" which came to her after the troublous times which followed the attempt to fasten on her the theft of a ring by another girl in the department store where they were both employed. The girl wins out against her enemies, her honesty is made plain, and the happiness which comes to her in the last scene of the stirring photodrama is only her just meed. The play is presented with a close attention to detail and some wonderful photographic results were obtained by the use of specially constructed lighting apparatus, the combination of beautiful work and stirring, gripping situations, making an extremely powerful picturization of a strong, dramatic story. 'Blue Blood but Black Skin" in 2 parts with Louise Orth and Dan Russell, "Some Heroes" and "Shackles" will also be shown.

BRIGADIER WHITE COMES TO MAKE INSPECTION

Quarterly inspection will occur at the Salvation Army hall tomorrow evening, in charge of Brigadier Edny White of Buffalo, divisional officer for Western New York. The three officers will assist Ensign and Mrs. Fitzgerald in conducting special meetings in headquarters at 8 o'clock, when a large audience is anticipated.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Boils.

When a person near middle age has a crop of boils it is advisable that he go to a physician and find out if he has diabetes. With that ruled out the cause of boils comes back to the infection of the skin and the tissue below it by pus germs. The modern plan of treating boils is to clean the skin and keep it clean, free of germs.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS.

In Secrecy and Dread the Daring Deed Was Done.

He carefully locked the door behind him. No one should see him do the dreadful deed. He could no longer stand the smiles and jeers of his friends.

It was true he had met all their remarks with a smile and a laugh, but it hurt him none the less.

Even his own particular friend had turned against him, and this was the last straw. He would end it all.

He had been trying for many weeks to summon up his courage, but at the last moment it had failed him. Today he was determined. He had carefully made all preparations, no one should see, no one would know the scene that was being enacted behind the closed door.

What if he failed? Perish the thought, he must not fail! What was that—a footstep? But it passed on, and all was quiet again.

Then light came in through the window, and he pulled the blind down. No prying eyes should see him. Now he braced himself together, and, with resolution and determination depicted on his countenance, he stepped forward and took up the deadly weapon.

To make assurance doubly sure he sharpened it until it had the keenness of a razor. With a fearful glance around and with uplifted arm he began the ghastly deed.

Blood! Eugh! His hand trembled! Never mind, he would not fail. The seconds crept slowly on and passed into minutes.

At last the deed was done!

He had had his first shave!—Pearson's Weekly.

FLOATING CONTACT MINES.

Nature Destroys Their Effectiveness After a Time.

Why so few vessels are now destroyed by floating contact mines in the war zone compared with the number sunk at the start of hostilities is thus explained by a naval officer:

"A short time after the Maine was blown up or even before the Spaniards mined all the harbors in Cuba with both floating contact and electric mines. That was particularly true of Guantanamo harbor. Entirely unsuspicious of mines, our ships steamed in there early in the war and opened fire on the Spanish position. As the ships steamed along both the Marblehead and the Texas fouled floating contact mines with their propellers and literally dragged them from their moorings, yet no explosion followed. The launches of the Marblehead and of the other ships then swept the harbor and in all got nineteen contact mines.

"One day on board the United States ship Panther I saw a gunner's mate dismantling one of the mines. He had already removed the charge of guncotton. Being interested in the matter, I asked him why the mines had not exploded when fouled by the Marblehead and the Texas. By way of answer he picked up a machinist's hammer and struck one of the contact plungers a powerful blow. The plunger was not even started. On examination I found that the percussion contact plungers were all so securely sealed by barnacles and marine growths that the plungers would break off before they could be driven home.

"That, of course, happened in tropical waters after only a few months of service. In the temperate zone the same thing will occur, but not so soon. The mines in European waters have been down a year, and I believe that many of them have been rendered innocuous from the same cause. The remark applies, of course, only to contact mines."

Spendthrift America.

"Five hundred and fifty-four out of every thousand inhabitants of Switzerland, or 55 per cent," says Merle Crowell in the American Magazine, "have savings bank accounts, according to the latest available figures. Here in our own country ninety-nine out of every thousand, or less than 10 per cent, have made similar provision for the future. The average savings per capita in Switzerland are $47.08; in America, $4.84."

Metallic Magnesium.

Metallic magnesium, the lightest metal known, will be produced as a commercial commodity by a factory at Niagara Falls. It is said to have many qualities superior to aluminum. The output of the factory has been contracted for by the French government until the end of the war, the material to be made use of in the manufacture of aeroplane parts.

Our Supply of Servant Girls.

The recent arrival of an English ocean liner with only twenty-eight passengers in the steerage brings to notice again the fact that the war has shut off New York's chief sources of household help. No more young girls of Germany or Britain come knocking at the kitchen doors. They are doing men's work for men's pay at home.—New York World.

Cold Winters Are Due.

Abbe Moreaux, the French meteorologist, says the world's rain cycle, which from his study of the sun's face he predicted would begin in 1902, is now at an end. For the next twenty-six years, beginning with the present one, he forecasts a series of hard winters, but is not sure that the series will be entirely unbroken.—Chicago Journal.

Our Gold Crop.

The value of new gold added to the home supply from mills and smelters operating on domestic ores (including those of Alaska, the Philippines and Porto Rico) in 1915 was practically $90,000,000. This shows the substantial increase of $4,359,300 over the preceding year.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Headaches.

Every one knows that eye strain and diseases of the eye are frequent causes of headaches and that stomach and intestinal disturbances frequently produce aching heads. It is not so generally known, however, that a high percentage of headaches is due to diseased conditions in the nasal passages. Even in cases where nasal disease is not entirely responsible for the headache such diseases often aggravate the condition. Moreover, headache may be the result of any diseased condition in the nasal cavity. "As a general rule," says a doctor, "it may be said that when headache is present on awakening this speaks in favor of its nasal origin. When it occurs later in the day after using the eyes a great deal it is attributable very probably to some ocular affection."

It is possible to test the origin of a nasal headache with a fair degree of accuracy by using some local anaesthetic on the nasal membranes. This will lessen the pain in the head very materially if the nose is at fault, but will have little or no effect if the seat of the trouble is the eyes or the alimentary canal.

HOW

To Make the Garden a Livable Place

TO make the garden livable it must be furnished. Nature may provide the setting and the color scheme, but man's ingenuity is required to supply the seats and summer houses, the bird baths and pools, the pergolas and sun dials or as many of these things as it may seem expedient and wise to have. Garden furniture is less expensive than it used to be—less expensive and better. Moreover, there is a great variety. Good rustic pieces may be made at home, or, time and skill being lacking, they may be bought. So also may delightful old English seats and tables, while pergolas and arbors of artistic design and good workmanship may be obtained ready made and set up in the garden with but very little labor. In fact, every sort of garden furniture from summer house down to bird houses is now on the market. There are even artistic bird baths and pedestals made of wood and much cheaper than those of marble or even of composition.

Of course cement has come to take a prominent place in the garden and is used in making pedestals for sun dials, bird baths and pools as well as for benches and seats. To many minds no garden has really been brought to date until it has been equipped with a pool in which water lilies may be grown, with the glistening sides of goldfish flashing among them. Such pools need not be at all expensive and are not difficult to construct when good Portland cement is the material used.

A GARDEN HINT

How to Make and Set Out Flower Cuttings For Spring.

Cuttings from many plants growing in the window garden will root readily at this season, and in conservatories and greenhouses cuttings should be made freely now.

Clean, sharp sand is the best for rooting cuttings generally, though geranium cuttings can be made and potted up in thumb pots. The cuttings should be made just below a bud, trimming off all the foliage except a leaf or two at the top of the cutting, and the top half of these leaves may be clipped off.

Be careful to have the sand firm about the base of the cutting, setting it half its length below the surface. Water thoroughly and shade from the sun, not allowing the soil to become dry.

FOR THE COOK.

How to Fry a Large Chicken the Easiest Possible Way.

Prepare in the usual way for frying; have fat one-eighth inch deep in pan smoking hot; place the chicken in the pan and cover; reduce gas flame until the chicken fries very slowly, turning each piece until rich brown. Pour one cupful of hot water into the pan and let the chicken continue to cook with cover on until all the water has cooked out. Lift the chicken on to a dish and make a brown gravy. This is intended for grown chicken, but not old fowl.

HOW TO MAKE AN EVERGREEN EDGING FOR THE GARDEN.—An evergreen edging is a lovely adjunct to the garden. Round wooden pins, eight inches long, driven into the soil within two inches of their tops and a running wire stapled into them will support a vine of myrtle or periwinkle or English ivy, Bignonia capreolata or cross vine. Or, if you wish, some of the evergreen roses—wichuriana, for instance—can be used for this purpose. They must, however, be severely cut back to the wire and closely tied in. If time and money are unimportant factors, boxwood is quite worth while. Another good plant for the border is perennial white candytuft of the dwarf type. It is neat, dense and a free bloomer. Violas or tufted pansies in one color make a very pretty edging.

How to Make Rugs From Selvages Otherwise Quite Useless.

Tailors first cut selvages from the material which they use to make men's suits. These selvages make much better rugs than ordinary carpet rags when woven in the usual manner. They come in long strips and require little work in preparation for the weaver. In place of sewing the rugs in the usual way lay the end of the strip flat upon the end of another and sew together without doubling. Tailors usually throw these selvages away and would therefore give them away or sell them for a few cents. It is an easy matter to obtain all you wish. If you would like to make braided rugs of these selvages they must be used double. Wind the balls in one color, so that you can blend and stripe your rug conveniently.

How to Clean Zinc In the Easiest Possible Way.

Zinc should be cleansed with kerosene. Soap and water only make zinc look worse. First wipe carefully with a dry cloth, then apply the kerosene and allow it to remain on all night. In the morning rub with a soft cloth and again cover it with kerosene. The zinc will be bright and clean as new. Rub occasionally with a clean cloth wrung out in kerosene.

popular. This is cut loose, belted, short sleeved, while shapely in lines. A bit of embroidery finishes the buttoned front, the collar edge and the cuffs.

For Spring Brides.

A dainty and acceptable gift to tuck into the bride's traveling bag as a little surprise to her when her destination is reached is a boudoir set of cap and ribbon slippers. The whole output may be folded very small in its tissue paper wrapping and will take up scarcely any room at all in the bag—not as much as the handful of rice which is sometimes slipped in by a mischievous bridesmaid. The cap is an ordinary boudoir cap of white point d'esprit, filled with fine white lace and trimmed with the best quality satin ribbon in pale blue or pink shade. A bow of the ribbon is caught against the cap with a tiny rhinestone buckle.

The slippers have very flexible soles, cut from pale blue or pink goldenrod satin; two layers of satin for each sole, and a thin layer of cotton batting may be slipped between if one fancies a little thicker sole. Two inch blue or pink satin ribbon is sewed around the edge of the sole and fastened together at the back. About two inches of the ribbon are gathered along the upper edge over cord elastic to hold the slipper on the heel.

Ragged Sailors.

Materials.—Two cupfuls flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half cupful sugar, an egg, one-half teaspoonful salt, three tablespoonfuls butter, one-half cupful chopped nuts, two-thirds cupful milk.

Directions.—Sift the flour, salt and baking powder, rub the butter in; then add sugar and nuts. Mix to a soft dough with the egg and milk, roll out thin and sprinkle with sugar. Roll up with the sugar inside, cut in slices three-quarters of an inch thick, place on a greased baking tin, brush over with beaten egg and bake about fifteen minutes.

Attractive Suits.

Every woman who can possibly afford it will invest in one of the attractive suits of pongee, poplin or silk homespun. They are a delightful combination of style and utility and, though rather high priced, are well worth the cost. They are to be had in white, cream and oyster white, tan, brown and biscuit Dutch, navy and gray blue, besides different tones of green and gray.

Now It's a Book Wagon.

Now we have little wagons to use in the library. Their rubber tired wheels move noiselessly over even hardwood floors, and their top is edged by a framework high enough to hold books, while two lower shelves contain the two different sizes of the magazines of the moment. These book wagons do not take up much space in the library.

Satin For Blouses.

A new blouse of white satin shows a delightful touch of color in the lining of primrose yellow taffeta that appears in turnover points of the high collar and the jabot-like frill on the front and in the lower side of the frills that finish the long sleeves.

SHE SAW THE SHOW.

And Then She Told Him Just What Happened There.

"I heard a cynic talking on the futility of self sacrifice the other night," said a New York lawyer. "I didn't agree with his conclusions, but his theme recalled an incident in my youth.

"When I was a youngster the dog faced boy was in his prime. We lived in the county seat of a country up state. My only sister—always a great pet—and I were intensely excited when we heard that the lad with the canine countenance was to come to our town.

"We had saved up all our pennies, and when the boy arrived we had twenty-five. We figured the admission would be 10 cents and we would have a nickel over for candy. For what's seeing a dog faced boy without candy to chew while staring?

"Well, the boy arrived, and we went down to the tent where he was being displayed. To our horror the admission was 25 cents. We puzzled long, but the tragic conclusion was always the same—only one of us could go in. So with tender fingers I drew forth the twenty-five pennies, and in a voice husky with emotion of disappointment I said: 'Here, Dot, you go in. I don't mind, and you can tell me about it when you come out.'

"My sister protested, but finally went. In five minutes she was back. I was all eagerness to hear every detail.

"'How was he—how was he, Dot? What did he look like? Is he really, truly a dog? Tell me, quick.'

"Dot gazed at me, and her lip quivered. 'Oh, Jack,' she said, 'when I got in I was so scared I couldn't look at him.'"—New York Times.

No Match For Him.

Freshie—What was the professor trying to explain to you?

Senior—He has a new theory about gasoline.

Freshie—Yes, and I'll bet it will blow up, like all his other theories.—New York Globe.

Usurped.

"What's this I see!" the bashful lover cried
As, pausing in alarm before her gate,
He saw within another, bolder man
Embrace his Kate.

"This," laughed the maid when once her lips were free,
"You could not understand should I explain,
And, anyway, I'm much too busy now.
Pray call again."
—Judge.

A Literal Fall.

"I hear the newly weds had a falling out yesterday."

"So soon? What was it about?"

"About the turn in the road yonder. Their rear tire blew up."—Baltimore American.

Skirt With New Panel Effect.

The well-dressed woman cannot have too many separate skirts and this simple four-piece design offers something unusually attractive for spring wear.

Skirts are more attractive this spring than they have been for several seasons past and despite the simplicity of some of the best designs they introduce unusual ideas. The design shown here is cut in four pieces. It is slightly gathered at the sides and the front and back gores are in panel effect. At the front the panel may extend in a point above the waist-line if desired. In medium size the skirt requires 3⅞ yards 44-inch material.

Nothing could be simpler than the making of the model. First arrange the gores together according to notches, then turn under the edges of front and back gores on slot perforations, lap to lines of small "o" perforations in side gore; stitch along the folded edges as illustrated, leaving edges to left of center-back free above large "O" perforation in back gore for placket, leave upper part of gores free about 2 inches from upper edge to pass belt through. Close seams under pleats and press. Gather upper edge of side gore between double "TT" perforations. Adjust 2 inch belting to position underneath upper edge of skirt for a stay; stitch upper edges together.

Adjust belt to position, slipping the belt underneath the front and back gores as illustrated.

The adjustment is effected at the left of the center-back under the pleat. The skirt is modish in gabardine, serge or cloth.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

CANDLELIGHT is perhaps the softest and prettiest light in the world, and now that we have every sort of electric contrivance to make our houses lighter we are turning our attention more and more to candles.

Unshaded candles are still used on the dinner table, although shades are used too. So individual taste may be depended on to decide the matter. If you desire to carry out a color scheme have shades of silk or paper for your candles. If you want as much light as possible have the unshaded candles.

There are even new candles in various designs in black and white, and these are in keeping with the many other things that result from the fad for black and white interiors. Sometimes they are set in black and white candlesticks.

Fringe of little glass beads gives a sparkle to candlelight. It can be bought by the yard and fastened on any candle shades you may have. So if you have silver shades colored fringe that may be easily changed with a little sewing and ripping for some other color can be used.

Colored candles, too, can be bought, and with these the table color scheme can be emphasized.

Before using candles make them as cold as possible in the refrigerator. In fact, it would be a very good plan to keep candles in a tin box in the refrigerator. This chilling process hardens the candle so that it burns much more slowly and therefore lasts much longer than an unchilled candle does.

How to Build a Coal Fire Without Resorting to Strong Language.

Before starting to build a fire free the grate from ashes. To do this put on covers, close the front and back dampers and open the oven damper. Turn the grate, and ashes will fall into the ash receiver. If these rules are not followed ashes will fly over the room. Turn the grate back into place, remove the covers over firebox and cover the grate with pieces of paper twisted in the center and left loose at the ends. Cover the paper with small sticks or pieces of pine wood, being sure that the wood reaches the end of the firebox and so arranged that it will admit air. Over pine wood arrange hard wood; then sprinkle with two shovels of coal. Put on cover, open all closed dampers, strike a match and apply under the grate and you have a fire. When it gets to burning well put on a sprinkle of coal. After the gas has burned out close up most all of the dampers, leaving a little opening on the slide of door where you remove ashes, and that makes a draft to keep the fire burning. If you shut it all up your fire would go out. Never allow the firebox to be more than three-fourths filled. When full it checks the draft. A large amount of fuel is consumed and much heat is lost. Coal when red hot has lost most of its heat. Some refuse to believe this and insist upon keeping dampers open until most of the heat has escaped into the chimney.

How to Keep Children's Garters From Tearing Stocking Tops.

Even with a very good quality of garters the knob shaped catch to which the stocking is attached is liable to break. When this happens sew on in its place a white shoe button, being careful to use the largest procurable size, and you will be surprised to find it wholly satisfactory.

To save the top of a stocking from being worn out by the supporter fastening attach a small brass ring to a piece of tape and sew the tape to the stocking. Clasp the supporters through the rings, using rings that will allow them to slip through.

If one happens to be without the regulation chamois protectors for garters, put a bit of tissue paper over the fastening. It will prevent the threads of the stocking from running down.

CODFISH RABBIT.—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in the upper part of the chafing dish, blend with it one tablespoonful of cornstarch. Add one cupful of hot milk, gradually, and season with a dash of paprika. Cook until smooth and then add three-quarters of a cupful of grated cheese and a cupful of codfish previously soaked in cold water and then flaked. As soon as the cheese is melted stir in one well beaten egg quickly. Add one tablespoonful of lemon juice and serve on crisped wafers.

Breaded Sausage.—Select your favorite brand of sausages. Beat the yolk and white of an egg till they are frothy and, wiping each sausage dry, dip into the egg and roll in powdered breadcrumbs. Have a pan of hot fat ready. Place the sausages in a wire basket and lower into the fat, leaving them there for about ten minutes. Prepare thin, dainty slices of toast and arrange the sausages on the toast on a platter with a garnishing of parsley.

Tomato Rabbit.—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan placed over boiling water, add one cupful of finely cut American cheese, stir until melted, add gradually one cupful of well seasoned tomato liquor from canned tomatoes, stir until well blended, add three well beaten eggs, cook a minute longer, add a generous seasoning of paprika and serve on bread toasted on the under side only.

Peppers and Fish.—Cut the peppers in half lengthwise and remove the seeds. Drop into hot water and boil for six minutes without covering. Then drain and fill. Make the filling of fish, removed from bones and skin and mixed with fine breadcrumbs. Season with salt and pepper and melted butter. Baste the peppers with strained tomato juice three or four times while they are baking. They should be done in half an hour in a moderate oven.

Scrambled Calf's Brains.—Wash the brain and remove all the fine skin; be sure every bit of the fiber is removed. Put a tablespoonful of butter or bacon drippings in pan, add the brain and cook slowly, stirring all the time; beat two eggs until well mixed and pour over the brain; stir until set; add salt and pepper to taste, sprinkle with chopped parsley and paprika.

cycle apparatus, it would be necessary to re-arrange all your transmission machinery, belting, shafting, etc.

The Fulton Light, Heat & Power company is ready to make a fair contract with the Battle Island Paper company, and if differences of opinion arise as to what is fair, the Fulton company is willing to leave such questions to the Public Service Commission of the Second District as sole and final arbitrator. I will go further and say that the Fulton Company is willing to take care of the power needs of the attle Island company is desirous of purchasing power from the Island Paper company is desirous of purchasing power from the Granby Paper company, the Fulton company will arrange to transmit said power from the Granby Paper company plant to the Battle Island Paper company plant with a fight provision for arbitrating any disputed questions with the Public Service Commission of the Second District as sole and final arbitrator.

May I ask for thef avor of an early reply to this letter? If this letter should be addressed to some one else instead of yourself, kindly give me the name of such person.

Yours, very truly,
G. C. WARNER.

March 23, 1916.

Mr. Warner's second letter to Mr. Whitaker, which was provoked by the latter's communication in Monday's issues, is as follows:

To the Public,
Fulton, New York.

Referring to the communication from Mr. N. L. Whitaker as reported in the Fulton Times of yesterday, I would call attention to a letter written by me to Mr. N. L. Whitaker March 23rd, 1916. I think this letter effectually disposes of all of points made by Mr. Whitaker. Of course, Mr. Whitaker would not willingly create an erroneous impression but his reported communications do so.

When you read my letter to Mr. Whitaker you will note that it urges him to operate the Battle Island Paper company plant at once and says that to enable him to do so the Fulton Electric Light company will furnish such electricity as the Battle Island Paper Co. needs as if and when it needs it; and that as soon as the Granby Paper Co. is ready to supply the power to the Battle Island Paper company, that the Fulton Electric Light Company will, if desired, cease supplying electricity and will transmit the electricity from the Granby Paper company plant to the Battle Island Paper company plant over the line of the Electric company, a large part of which line was specially built some four years ago to take care of this very business. My letter specifies a number of reasons, most of which are obvious. why this course would greatly hasten the opening of the Battle Island Paper company plant and points out the serious delays that may result if the Battle Island Paper company waits to commence operation until after the Granby Paper company takes the necessary time to install the new equipment to enable it to supply this power,—delays in securing delivery of equipment, delays in waiting for the necessity construction work at Granby Power plant, etc., et.

Ever since the new interests acquired control of the Battle Island Paper company, the Electric company has stood ready and has offered to cooperate on the above lines, and to safeguard in every way the interests of the Battle Island Paper company plant the Electric company has proposed that in case any differences of opinion arise as to any terms of the contract, it would be willing to arbitrate same with the Public Service Commission of the Second District, or any other competent disinterested tribunal, as arbitrator.

I may further fairly comment upon Mr. Whitaker's communication that General Wotherspoon as Superintendent of Public Works granted the permit as a matter of form and that he did not intend in any way to pass upon the merits involved because same should be decided by the Public Service Commission of the Second District.

I may further say that the Electric Company is not now planning to transmit any electricity to Syracuse. It has had on a negotiation looking toward a Syracuse industry locating a factory in or near Fulton.

I notice that in these newspaper articles Mr. Whitaker is described as President Whitaker. Does the title of President refer to Mr. Whitaker's pasident as President of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce or is he President of the Battle Island Paper company. If Mr. Whitaker is president of the Battle Island Paper company his natural zeal in its behalf might extenuate his taking a position which he would probably not feel at liberty to take as President of the Chamber of Commerce. In other words, as President of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Whitaker would be careful to be fair and just to all of Fulton's industries including the Electric company.

Very, truly yours,
G. C. WARNER.

BRITAIN O[illegible]S WAY TO SEIZURE [illegible] ALL VESSELS; RULE E[illegible]CTIVE TODAY

London—Important modifications in the orders which are in force governing the blockade of the Central Empires are contained in an Order in Council issued last night. The most far reaching change made in the rules is the abrogation of the clause in the Declaration of London safeguarding a vessel and her cargo bound for a non-blockaded port.

The Order in Council declares that "neither a vessel nor her cargo shall be immune from capture for a breach of blockade upon the sole ground that she at the moment is on her way to a non-blockaded port."

The introductory paragraphs say that subject to certain modifications and omissions the government has put in force the Declaration of London respecting the capture of merchant craft during the war.

Certain doubts, however, have arisen concerning the right to effect "the capture of conditional contraband on board a vessel bound to a neutral port," which it is "expedient to put an end to," and it has decided no longer to adopt article 19 of the declaration, which provides that "whatever may be the ultimate destination of a vessel or of her cargo she cannot be captured for breach of blockade if at the moment she is on her way to a non-blockaded port."

It is therefore ordered that the provisions of the Declaration of London "shall not be deemed to limit, or to have limited, in any way ther ight of His Majestry, in accordance with the law of nations, to capture goods upon the ground that they are conditional contraband, nor to affect, or to have affected, the liability of conditional contraband to capture, whether the carriage of the goods to their destination be direct or entail trans-shipment or subsequent transport by land." This provision is made applicable also to absolute contraband.

Another clause says that enemy destination "may be presumed to exist if the goods are consigned to a person who, during the present hostilities, has forwarded imported contraband goods to territories belonging to or occupied by the enemy."

The order further says that "it shall lie upon the owners of goods to prove that their destination was innocent."

MEXICANS JOIN WITH PERSHING'S MEN TO TRAP VILLA OUTLAW BAND

U. S. Army Headquarters in Mexico (by army Radio to Columbus, N. M.)—Scouts from advanced points bring the report of another engagement between Villa and Carranza forces.

Villa is now said to be in a trap.

The fight indicates that the Carranzists are fully cooperating with the American army.

Two miles of motor trucks with "empties" arrived here from the front today.

General Gabriel Gavira, the Carranza commander, received tonight a telegram from General Bertani, at Madera, which said Francisco Villa was wounded in the leg near Guerrero in a skirmish with Carranzists Wednesday afternoon. Gavira has wired for full information.

Andreas Garcia, Mexican consul, and General Gavira claim they have had no notification from the first chief of permission having been granted to ship supplies to American troops over the Mexican Northwestern.

After a secret conference with General Bell this morning Gavira sent a message to Minister of War Alvaro Obregon asking for instructions, but has not yet had a reply.

Carranza has ordered Gavira to seize for military purposes the only locomotive at Juarez in condition to haul a freight train.

The nearest American troops to Villa are twenty miles north of Providencia. Other detachments are at Tepehuanes, Cruces, Colonia, Chuichupa, SanMiguel Ranch and Colonia Dublan.

YOUNG MEDICAL STUDENT IS DEAD IN SYRACUSE

C. B. Coman, a medical student at Syracuse University, died last night at 12 o'clock at the hospital of the Good Shepherd after undergoing an operation for appendictis. The body will be brought to this city tomorrow morning. His wife, who was Florence Adele Hubbard, lives at 603 Buffalo street.

Mr. Coman graduated from Syracuse University, liberal arts course, three years ago. Mr. Coman secured a position as teacher of science in the Oswego High chool which he held for three years, re-entering Syracuse University to take a course in medicine. He was a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity and the Masonic order.

Besides his wife, he is survived by his parents, his father, Dr. F. H. Coman, being district superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal church of Buffalo; and three brothers, John, of New York, and Alfred and Francis, of Buffalo, which is the place of the family home. The two brothers, Alfred and Francis are at present attending Syracuse University.

Funeral services will be held at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the 1st Methodist church this city. Burial will be made in Mt. Adnah.

BELIEVE DEER WERE VICTIMS OF WOLVES

Malone—A few days ago while snowshoeing on Ingraham Pond in town of Bellmont, two residents of Malone came upon the bodies of three deer, all does, which lay nearly buried in the deep snow which covers the thick body of ice on the pond. An examination showed that the deer had been partially devoured by some animal, all three carcasses being torn and mangled and parts almost entirely stripped of flesh. Surrounding each of the deer were partly obliterated tracks, some of which resembled bear tracks, but all larger than would have been left by a dog. There was no evidence that the deer had been shot or that they had come to their death through human agency.

WAR STEPS TAKEN BY PORTUGAL

Lisbon, via London— Portugal is actively preparing for war, having all eventualities in view, says the Secolo, which points out that an attack by hostile submarines upon the port of Lisbon is a possibility.

The British, says, the newspaper, have reason to believe that the submarines most recently turned out from German yards are craft of 1,500 tons with a speed of ten knots under water and of eighteen knots on the surface. They are equipped with from ten to twelve torpedo tubes, it is said, and possess the ability to remain away from their base several weeks at a time, owing to the power of their electric accumulators and motors. Some of the mare provided with three inch guns and it is even affirmed in some quarters that four inch guns are carried.

SUBMARINE BASES FOUND ON ISLANDS

London— Rome despatches report the discovery of an elaborate spy system in the Greek islands and an organization for supplying German and Austrian submarines with information, food and fuel.

One despatch says that Allied patrol ships have found four hostile submarine bases.

Another despatch, sent to the Paris Journa, and repeated here, reports an extended spy system in Corfu for providing information and supplies for submarines. It states that about forty persons, including the keeper of the one of the principal hotels on that island, have been arrested and will be removed to France.

DVINSK-RIGA FRONT AS STAGE FOR CAMPAIGN

Petrogard, via London— The Russian offensive manoeuvres along the Dvinsk-Riga front, although apparently local in character and unimportant as compared with more sweeping spectacular movements which have marked warfare on the eastern front, already have rendered the carefully constructed positions of Field Marshal von Hindenburg less secure and will, it is thought here, determine the course of the coming spring campaign.

The fight now has developed from isolated encounters along a ten-mile front to a general engagement extending more than thirty-five miles along the lines. German troops front, instead of taking part in an advance believed to have been intended by the Germans, are occupied in defending their positions of last fall, and it appears to observers here that Field Marshall von Hindenburg's spring campaign will be defensive rather than the offensive one which was expected.

THE RELIEF SHIPS READY TO START

New York—At the office of the American Commission for Belgian Relief, it was said yesterday that negotiations for the chartering of ten German ships has been under way for several months. The vessels, ranging from 5,000 to 10,000 tons each, have been arranged for with their German owners, and the consent of the Holland government has been obtained for them to use that flag while the ships are engaged in the relief work. The consent of Gt. Britain and her allies to the plan was sought at the same time negotiations with other interested parties began.

Tomorrow morning the foillowing men will meet in the Lake Shoare offices in this city and seek the answeer to these questions:

ONLY ONE PLACE TO CROSS ST. LAWRENCE

Watertown—The sudden coming of spring has resulted in the ice beginning to break up on the St. Lawrence with the result that the ferry service between Cape Vincent and Kingston was discontinued yesterday. The rapidity with which the ice is going would indicate that steamship service on the river may be resumed in a week or so.

There is no way of getting across the river now excepting at Morristown where there is a crossing to Brockville. People wishing to go from Cape Vincent to Kingston must first go to Morristown, cross the river there to Brockville and go to Brockville to Kingston by train. This is the way that the mail will go until ther iver is once more free from ice

A farmer from Bowens Corners the crew of an Empire United Railways car are carrying "souvenirs" as a result of a collision between the sleigh in which the farmer was riding and the trolley, which was followed by an exchange of blows between Motorman Ford and the Bowens Corners man.

The incident occurred at the junction of Broadway and E. First st. Tuesday night. According to an official of the road the farmer had just crossed the upper bridge and at the corner the front end of the sleigh upon which was a hay rack collided with a post swerving the sleigh into the trolley car. When the crew alighted, the Bowens Corners man, according to the official, used language which was not pleasing to Conductor Crandall who had started to ask the usual question. An exchange of blows between Ford and the farmer followed. Ford received a cut lip while the farmer has a discolored optic.

HIS NAME WAS GREED

Dr. Arthur Warren Waite, who first procured disease germs to carry off his rich father-in-law and mother-in-law and the germs not working promptly enough gave arsenic to finish the job, now says that there was a little black man from Egypt who haunted him and impelled him to murder. This is a new excuse for murder. There have been brain storms, such as afflicted Thaw, and drunken passions and other forms of insanity, but this is the first time that a little black man from Egypt, who may have lived thousands of years ago, and whom the victim of his demonology had never seen, has been introduced. Waite says that his wife knew all about it, but she says she never heard of the little black man. The fact that the victim of Waite was a rich father-in-law lends a suspicion that he was in a hurry to get his money, and that the little black man's name was "Greed."—Watertown Times.

SAVING THE COUNTRY

It is the man behind the gun that counts, both in battle and in times of peace. This was the theme of Assistant District Attorney William Ross Lee speaking the other night before the New York Mills Corporation

Here we have a great land with woderful resources, and what we do with this home depends entirely upon what the hundred millions of people—one can almost fairly say "peoples"—do with it.

It is becoming more plain that if we are to be united and do what is best for ourselves, we must see to it that there shall be no foundation for calling the country a land of peoples. We don't want to turn the country into a region of Balkan States, no matter how earnest, intelligent, hard-working, the peoples may be, and no matter what impression or what reason impelled them to come to our shores. That is why it is time to restrict immigration, particularly of the people who do not readily become assimilated, and that is the reason people who make their homes here should expect to cease to be Europeans and become "dehyphenated.

The mixture of Polish, Italian, Russian and other blood with that of the people who came here first will not harm the race of Americans. Ethnologists, in fact, say it will create a superior race. But the immigration should not come so fast that the mixture doesn't take place.

As for the lack of loyalty and patriotism for this country on the part of new or hyphenated citizens it is no more damaging than done by the congressman and community which cries for "pork." It is such waste and rottenness which eat at the vitals of the country and destroy the moral fiber. —Utica Observer.

ANTI-SALOON FORCES READY FOR WORK

It is announced by the Anti-Saloon League of America that immediately after Easter it will begin a series of not less than 1,000 meetings which will cover all parts of the Empire State. Every village of more than 200 population will be visited. The compaign will even push into wholly rural communities where a suitable hearing can be obtained and where "the message of National Prohibition" never has had a hearing.

Among the speakers who have been assigned to the New York campaign are Captain Richmond P. Hobson of Merrimac fame, former Governor Malcolm R. Patterson of Tennessee, Dr. Sam W. Small, John G. Woolley and Dr. George W. Morrow. Particular attention will be paid to state legislators, although the general theme of the speakers will be national prohibition. Each member of Congress from this state will be especially invited to attend the largest meeting in his district.

MR. WHITAKER vs. MR. WARNER

We can comprehend neither the intelligence nor the patriotism of comment which at every turn of events focuses its indignation on a public utility corporation, denouncing it on general principles as if it were the Devil himself. In the absence of conclusive evidence to the contrary The Evening Times will continue to believe that the Fulton Electric company desires as sincerely as any citizen of this community that there shall be no delay in reopening the Battle Island plant, basing the opinion upon the merits of the communications which appeared in this newspaper Tuesday and yesterday, and signed by Mr. N. L. Whitaker and Mr. George Coffing Warner respectively. The Electric Company has been held up as a performer of tricks; as insincere in its efforts to aid in getting the paper mill under way. Even Mr. Whitaker went so far as to say as much in his communication to the newspapers, but that does not settle the question of who is to blame for the delayed reopening of the sulphite mill. Everybody knows that the mill should be running now or never. Its product is in great demand and Fulton needs the payroll of a band of employes, but in weighing the merits of the communications of the contending parties it is not apparent that the Electric Company is acting in bad faith.

If unhappily the contention over the right of the Battle Island and the Electric company interests to transmit power down the river shall continue and the rehabilitation of the mill is delayed thereby, no condemnation that could be meted out by the community would be too severe for the person or persons found guilty of thwarting the efforts to secure an additional industry.

THE MINISTER'S FORD

A minister in an Indiana town has been given a Ford by his parishioners. In a letter to the local paper, expressing his gratitude he says, "I know I am unworthy of it, and I feel I owe a great debt of thanks. Let me say I do not aim to use the new car for the purpose of 'joy-riding,' but rather hope thereby to be able to do evangelistic work in some new country districts in which I would not otherwise be able."

Isn't it rather a pity that the minister should feel obliged to say he "knows he is unworthy" of the convenient little car which will make his work easier? Isn't it rather a reflection upon the essential falseness of the usual point of view of the duty of ministers, that he feels obliged to explain that he will not joy-ride in the gift-car?

Why should any laborer in any field be unworthy of the best and handiest tools of his trade? Why shouldn't they be a matter of course to him?

Why shouldn't a minister and his family have a little innocent pleasure riding about the countryside? Why shouldn't they go picnicking in the little car when they feel inclined? Why shouldn't they use it to go to the nearest town for concerts or lectures, or even theaters?

Other workers find the need of breaks in the routine, find themselves freshened and made more able by wholesome pleasure. Why not ministers?

And when is a gift not a gift, anyhow? When it's made to a minister. If the little car was given in good faith to a valued friend, why should his use of it be questioned or criticised in any way? Sometimes the idea of a minister's union which might put a little common sense and human kindness into the hearts of ordinary congregations seems rather attractive.

GANG'S FALSE WAIL OVER END OF BOXING

These prize fight promoters and their apologists are a shifty lot of liars, as well as being a nuisance in a decent community.

Their wail now is that the "manly art of boxing" is threatened with destruction if the Frawley law is repealed.

Of course, there is not a word of truth in their wail. The repeal of the Frawley law will leave any athletic club perfectly free to give all the boxing exhibitions it pleases.

BUT IT CANNOT CHARGE AN ADMISSION FEE TO ANY SUCH EXHIBITION.

That's the milk in the cocoanut which these parasites do not like.

They can box all day and all night and box their heads off, if they like, and no one to say them nay, when the Frawley law is repealed.

But they cannot stage public exhibitions for gate receipts and gambling purposes.

And these weeping and sorrowing mourners over the threatened destruction of manly exercise and physical culture would not hold a boxing match in a hundred years if there was no chance to skin the public at the gate and in the betting pools.

That is how much they care for the 'manly art of self-defense."

The one and only thing they care for is the unrestricted art of trimming the public.

The whole prize fighting game is as crooked as it is brutal and mean and demoralizing.

These so-called "sports" would not dream of taking each other's word for anything. Most of them are liars who have improved upon great natural talent in that direction by assiduous practice.

There is not a word of truth in the wail of these gentry that boxing will be abolished by the repeal of the Frawley law.

Boxing—decent, clean, manly boxing—WILL BE REINSTATED by the repeal of the Frawley law.

What WILL BE ABOLISHED by the repeal of the Frawley law are such disgraceful spectacles as that at the Garden last week, and all the graft and gambling that goes with such exhibitions.

The shame of the State will be abolished.

The shame of the city will be abolished.

A horde of cheap gamblers, tinhorns and sure-thing cheats will be abolished.

The demoralization of citizenship and the corruption of public morals and the outrage of public decency will be abolished.

And those are things which every respectable man and woman in New York will be glad to see abolished.

Lend a hand, every one of you good citizens, and let us drive this disgrace out of the State, never to return.—N. Y. American.

SPRING PRIMARIES ON TUESDAY, APRIL 4

Next Tuesday is spring Primary Day, when the voters will pass on the party nominations for delegates-at-large and district delegates to the national conventions. The Republican convention will be held in Chicago in June, and the Democratic convention will be held in St. Louis in the same month. It is between these parties that the great struggle is to be waged for the conduct of the national government for four years from March 4, 1917, when a president will be inaugrated to succeed Woodrow Wilson. The Progressives will hold their convention in Chicago simultaneously with the Republicans, and indications have been many that the two parties would act together in the choice of a presidential nominee.

The April primaries will be for the purpose also of naming party committeemen, both in the election districts as members of the County Committees, and in the respective counties of this state as members of the State Committees.

NO APRIL REDUCTION OF COAL PRICES PROBABLE

The nearness of April again directs attention to the coal bin, for the thrifty householder always fills it immediately after the Winter, provided that he can obtain reduced prices which prevailed in the month of April in past years.

The threatened strikes in the coal regions have caused the operators, who constitute as complete a trust in hard coal as can possibly be organized, to decide not to lower the prices April 1. Last year some other excuse was offered to delay the price reduction. Consumers of coal always looked forward to a 50 cent reuction per ton in April but it is stated now that because of the unsettled labor conditions at the mines and the failure of both sides to adjust their differences the dealer will not be notified this year to make the usual reduction April 1.

It is not difficult to admit that the coal mine owners cannot fix their prices until they know how much they will have to pay the miners for their work, assumming that they have not mined a season's supply under the old scale of prices. But the coal trust has been so dishonest in the past that it is difficult to believe any of the stories that are advanced to account for new impositions upon coal consumers.

Unfortuniately the retention of the Winter price will not be felt so acutely at this time of the year, because many will defer buying coal or will wait until cold weather comes again when they would be less inclined to object to pay the cold weather price. If the exaction of the coal barons could be felt now as in Winter time there would be such an aroused public opinion that Congress or the president would be forced to take cognizance of the situation just as Theodore Roosevelt took hold of it, and forced selfish interests to come to terms or to meet a crusade for government ownership or control of the mines. The day is probably not very distant, anyway, when the government will have to exercise some form of control over the production of this natural resource, as necessary to the people as fresh air and water.—Auburn Citizen.

MORE PRACTICAL OBSERVANCE OF ARBOR DAY IS PLANNED

John H. Finley, state commissioner of education, announces today that a wider and more practical observance of Arbor day will be made in all the schools of the state, and that five departments of the state government—conservation, highway, agriculture, health and education—have recently conferred thru their representatives in order to work out a practical plan for effective service to the communities of the state in the wider observances of the day, on May 5th. The plan, in brief, is for the local community to observe Arbor day along the lines of the greatest value and interest to the schools in that particular community or in the different localities of the same communities.

Commissioner Finley has sent announcements of the plan to all superintendents of schools in the state and suggests to them nine different lines of interest for the observance of Arbor Day, namely, that it be made a day in the interest of municipal or community forest or reforestation or tree planting on highways or horticulture or agriculture or protection of the trees from insects or water supply or removal of unsanitary conditions in communities or the improvement of school yards as the special need may require.

Commissioner Finley asks that each superintendent advise the department of education which of these interests his community may have and explains the assistance each of the different state departments will give.

He says: "The conservation commission is particularly interested in the matter of the acquisition of land by towns, villages and counties for permanent forestry purposes, and largely as a means of educating the children in tree planting, tree growth, and the value of forests as a wood crop, their other uses and their protection. It is said that such forests can be established at a very low cost, and it is further stated that an acre of such forest planted by the school children would in 40 years support a one-room school for a year; in other words, that if one acre of forest were planted each year for forty years it would result in a one-room school becoming self sustaining thru income from the forest.

UNIQUE CLUB FORMED BY FULTON GIRLS

The organization of the club was completed on Tuesday evening at the home of Miss Mildred Kellog of Pratt street. The following officers were elected: Magna, Septra, Miss Beatrice Dix; Picunia, Miss Anna Kendrick.

The young women are preparing a club room. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Dix.

INCORPORATING HUMAN NATURE IN PHOTO-PLAYS

GEORGE FITZMAURICE, PATHE PRODUCER, REVEALS SECRET ART OF EFFECTIVE DIRECTING

AN INFINITUDE OF DETAIL

Aptitude Must Be Inborn for the Cinema Drama Has Its Unique Rules, Technique and Psychology.

Coming from a director who has proved his theories by practical application and demonstrated their truth by a record of a series of productions without a failure, these ideas of George Fitzmaurice, the Pathe producer, on photoplay directing, are well worthy of serious consideration. He says:

"The right and proper direction of a photo-drama is necessarily as much of an art as painting, sculpture or any of the other arts. It has its rules, its technique, its composition and, above all, its psychology, and it is this latter phase of the subject that is given too little attention by the average director, which is largely responsible for the vast quantity of only mediocre pictures now produced.

"A comprehensive knowledge of psychology, in all its branches, is a necessary complement of good directorship, for motion pictures have progressed to such a stage that psychology is the base upon which they are all built. The public of today demands something more than mere action; it demands a well developed theme, and when you enter upon this you enter the realms of psychology. To incorporate human nature into a picture you must understand the science of mental phenomena, for it is this science that is guiding the guiding hand of realistic action.

"To my mind the action of a director in producing a picture is largely subconscious. I can only speak of my own individual method. First, there is the purely technical work of designing the sets. I work out every detail of this in advance, even selecting the design and color of the wall paper. Then I pick out my furniture and work out detailed plans of just how it will be arranged in the completed sets. I even carry out this initial supervision so far as to accompany the women of the cast to the stores where they purchase their gowns, in order to be perfectly sure before I start work that everything is in harmony. During all this time I am thinking deeply of the play as a whole, not in a conscious detailed manner, but absorbing the theme, the atmosphere, in a subconscious manner. When it comes to the actual acting of the various scenes the whole idea is in my mind. I first send my people through a scene without instruction, for frequently they, in studying out the action of the picture, evolve ideas that are valuable. Then by combining the best of their initial work with my own previously conceived ideas, I arrive at the manner in which the scene should be played.

"Composition is a subject that bothers many directors. Personally, I never bother about it, except to notice when it is wrong. The ability to judge composition is something that is more or less born in one. One does not necessarily group his characters in certain definite positions, but should they group themselves in a manner that offends the rules of good composition the fault is at once noticeable to the good director."

Mr. Fitzmaurice, it is interesting to note, is the man who produced "Via Wireless," "At Bay," and "New York," for the Pathe Gold Rooster program,—three pictures that are considered among the best of the last twelve months. He is now finishing "Big Jim Garrity" for the same concern.

FANIA MARINOFF DOES A REMARKABLE FALL

"New York," the Pathe Gold Rooster Play, in which Florence Reed is featured, contains a startling fall done by Fania Marinoff, who appears in many Pathe pictures. With utter disregard of life and limb she goes head first down a long flight of stairs, turning several complete somersaults. Miss Marinoff was badly bruised in the interests of realism. George Fitzmaurice produced the picture, which is adapted from the A. H. Woods play of the same name.

A lot of money must be spent to give the proper atmosphere to a picture where many scenes are laid in homes of wealth. For instance, in "New York," there are some bedroom scenes in which are used lace sheets which cost $250. The bedspread is of hand embroidered silk and costs $450.

PATHE NEWS SHOWS WONDERFUL SUBMARINE PICTURES.

One of the most noteworthy news pictures ever taken was shown in a recent number of the Pathe News. The cameraman was perched in an insecure position on the turret of a submarine, and filmed every stage of the launching of a giant torpedo at an enemy ship, together with the submersion and rising of the submarine. The pictures depict in a way that no mere description could ever do, the methods adopted by the newest and most terrible element of modern naval warfare.

ROBERT EDESON

ROBERT EDESON TALKS OF THE "MOVIES"

Is Now Starring in Pathe Production.

Robert Edeson, who stars in "Big Jim Garrity," the A. H. Woods' play produced for Pathe by George Fitzmaurice, is a deep student of dramatic art and talks intelligently and well upon the subject. Recently he gave an interviewer some opinions on photoplay art which will be found interesting:

"The screen is a strange medium" he said, "for there is no tomorrow in the movies. Each day brings its own problems and as they are solved the art moves constantly to a higher plane. The future of the photoplay is very bright. The interest is increasing and will continue to increase. The silent house and the lighted screen have a peculiar and vivid effect on you. You forget that you are sitting in a theatre—time does not exist. It's the movie lure and I'm just as great a fan as any man who spends his last nickel to watch the screen. I have been in pictures only one year, while I was on the legitimate stage for twenty-five, and yet it is safe to say that more persons have come to know me in the past year than in all the previous time. That in itself is the laurel that sits on the head of the photodrama. It is democratic to the last degree."

Mr. Edeson is a southerner and played all over the country in stock, his best know successes being "Strongheart" and "Soldiers of Fortune." He was in the famous Empire Company, which was the special pet of Charles Frohman, and which produced so many brilliant players such as Faversham, Viola Allen, Henry Miller and Ida Conquest. In addition to "Big Jim Garrity," he also stars in Kipling's "Light That Failed," a Pathe feature to be released later.

When Mr Edeson travels, his wife, five-year-old daughter, and dog, "J. D.," all go with him. He likes the life of a movie actor. "It's the life of a prince!" he says.

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, THE YOUNGEST LEADING WOMAN IN THE WORLD

She Stars Delightfully in a Pathe Picture.

Baby Marie Osborne loses her amateur standing as a guileless kid and assumes the professional dignity of an honest-to-goodness leading lady in "Little Mary Sunshine" a Pathe Gold Rooster play that propels us with an urgent, though delicate, touch, back to the free spaces of the "never-never land."

"Little Mary Sunshine," is one of those "once upon a time" butterflies, through whose gauzy wing we see life in rare and delightful tints. Five reels isn't a scene too long for "Little Mary," who, thank heaven, doesn't realize the charm of her fat little self and never overdoes the "saccharine stuff." Her utter unconsciousness of herself is a revelation in art, particularly in one so young, and points encouragingly to a brilliant stage career. Director Henry King, who also plays the male lead in the picture, deserves more than passing notice for his masterly handling of the child, and his delicate, knowing touch on a play that was woven of Fancy's woof. He is an actor of intelligence and subtlety, and a personality that is impressive. His handling of the "little things," the "tremendous trifles" in the direction of this feature, shows him an artist of depth and certainty.

Baby Osborne can honestly and truly lay claim to be the youngest leading woman in the land, for she has just turned three years of age. Far from being "camera shy," she gurgles and laughs as though she were having the time of her life and goes through her scenes as though to the manner born. Almost invariably the child player of the stage is oppressed with a feeling of self-importance. Little Marie is not—she is just a wholesome, mighty clever, unspoiled baby, of whom any mother would be proud. Her debut in pictures makes us hope we will see other, in which she is featured.

EX-KING MANUEL TAKES LIFE EASY

Plays Golf While Portugal Prepares For War.

LAND SIDES WITH ALLIES.

Former Ruler Apparently Is Not Worried Over Course Republic Is Pursuing—Germany Has Formally Declared War on Portugal, Although a State of War Has Existed.

London.—While former King Manuel of Portugal is playing golf and taking life easy in England, the little republic of Portugal, once his domain, is completing preparations for war on the side of the allies. Germany has formally declared war on Portugal, although a state of war has practically existed between the two countries since the German troops invaded Portuguese Africa in 1914.

Soon after this invasion Portugal sent re-enforcements to her African possessions, and there have been a number of clashes between the German and Portugal colonial troops.

The total war strength of the Portuguese army is 260,000 men. It is estimated that fully 100,000 soldiers have been mobilized for some months to be ready for the conflict. It is over a year since the Portuguese government decided to co-operate with the allies whenever the step seemed necessary. While Portugal has been preparing for war for some time, internal political conditions have delayed matters. A peace party has made its strength felt in that republic, but with Germany's declaration of war party lines will be obliterated.

Portugal has an alliance with Great Britain dating from 1703 that requires the Portuguese government to furnish Great Britain with 10,000 soldiers when the latter is at war. While these troops have not been put at the disposal of Great Britain in the European theater of war, the Portuguese have been cooperating with the troops of the allies in Africa.

While the peace strength of the Portuguese army is only 30,000, with 8,105 more men in the colonial army, the government has 230,000 reserves and 871,476 available men for war purposes. The navy of the republic, however, is one of the smallest in the world. It consists of one second class cruiser, four third class cruisers, fifteen gunboats, five destroyers, four torpedo boats and one submarine.

Most of these vessels are of an antiquated type. The Vasco da Gama, the star ship of the navy, has been in service since 1878. It cost $660,000 and is of 3,030 tons displacement. It is equipped with two eight-inch guns, one six-inch, one twelve-pounder and eight three-pounders. The Vasco da Gama has a complement of 259 officers and men.

Portugal, with the Azores and Madeira island, has a population of 5,957,985 and an area of 35,490 square miles. The population of the republic's colonial possessions in Africa is 8,300,000, and these colonies have an area of 828,334 square miles. The colonies in Asia have an area of 8,983 square miles and a population of 950,000. Portuguese Africa is made up of Angola, the Kongo, Guinea, East Africa and some islands.

Many Portuguese have been bitter toward Germany for many years. They have felt that the kaiser's government has had designs on the Azores and Angola. The war party in the republic has long been enthusiastic to enter the contest on the side of the allies not only on account of the treaty with Great Britain, but on account of the long standing grievance against Germany.

The wealth of Portugal is estimated at $2,500,000,000. The national debt amounts to $947,608,000. The revenue of the country is $81,066,000 a year, with an additional yearly revenue of $17,186,000 from the colonies.

SHOOT AWAY $24,000,000.

Tremendous Cost of War Illustrated by the Battle of Verdun.

If the estimate of 2,000,000 shells is approximately the number fired in the great Verdun battle the financial outlay to the contending armies for artillery ammunition alone has been at least $20,000,000 to $24,000,000.

This estimate of army ordnance experts is based on the theory that the bulk of the fighting has been done with 75 centimeter field guns. Inasmuch as the Germans have made use of a considerable number of large fieldpieces and siege guns, the cost in artillery ammunition probably has been considerably more than $24,000,000.

As the caliber of a gun increases the cost per round multiplies rapidly. The huge German guns which demolished the Liege fortifications and shelled Dunkirk from a distance of twenty miles or more hurl projectiles that cost many hundreds of dollars, the exact figures not being known.

In addition to the enormous cost of artillery ammunition used in the Verdun fight, many millions of rounds of small arms ammunition have been consumed, the outlay for hospital service has been excessively high, while the loss of effective fighting units has been enormous on both sides.

VALUE OF BABY IS $90.

"Aged Person Becomes a Negative Quantity," Declares Professor.

What is a baby worth?

Professor Irving T. Fisher of Yale, urging the adoption of a bill for compulsory social insurance for workmen, told the committee on social welfare at the statehouse, in Boston, that he estimated the value of a baby to be $90.

"And I estimate the value of an adult to be $4,000," said the professor. "The value of an aged person, by computations under the proposed system, becomes a negative quantity.

"The proposed bill will bring preventive medicine into every home. Last year there were 630,000 unnecessary deaths in the United States. The bill also will distribute the enormous burden of sickness so it will not entirely overwhelm a worker when it comes."

Why Do Dairy Cows Run Down?

No other farm animal is the cause of so much anxiety to the owner as his dairy cows; sickness gets in in spite of the best of care.

Why? Because the dairy cow is subjected to constant forcing to get the maximum in quantity and quality of the milk yield. This constant strain proves too much for many a good cow; some important function becomes impaired and for want of proper medical assistance she becomes a "backward" cow. In just such cases as these Kow-Kure has made its reputation for success when used to

It has wonderful medicinal qualities that act on the organs of production and reproduction for the prevention or cure of many serious cow ailments. It is especially useful in cases of Abortion, Barrenness, Milk Fever, Scouring, Lost Appetite, Bunches, Retained Afterbirth, etc. Farmers who have used it keep Kow-Kure on hand constantly. # The SAFETY POINT

By Dr. Frank Crane

The railroad needs money not only to pay the expenses of hauling passengers and freight.

It costs millions more to keep the right of way and rolling stock in condition.

It takes tens of millions in addition to supply steel cars, new safety appliances and other modern facilities and comforts demanded by the public.

Keep the earnings down below a certain point and the railroads will be unable to meet this constant demand.

INTEMPERANCE HINDERS WORK

That's the Experience of An Officer of the W. C. T. U. As Explained at the Union Meeting.

Mrs. Carlotta Conrad gave an interesting talk to the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union at the Baptist church, last Tuesday afternoon, explaining the relationship between temperance and the missionary movement. She urged the cooperation of everybody interested in missionary work—home and foreign—claiming that the rum power is one of theg reatest hindrances to the work of missionaries. About 200 women listened to the address and tweny women joined the local Union during the afternoon which number brings the membership up to the 200 mark.

Every missionary society of the different churches was represented at the meeting including Mrs. E. C. Spencer, president of the county W. C. T. U. A pleasant feature of the musical program was the singing by the Free Methodist quartet, especially the closing song, "The Brewer's Big Horses," by special request. The Free Methodist Society carried off the honors and the prize offered by the Union to the organization having the largest number of its members present.

RECTORY WILL BE MADE INTO APARTMENT HOUSE

Judge Coville yesterday gave All Saints church permission to expend $1,200 on their old rectory in Second street, Fulton, and then to sell it for not less than $4,000. The $1,200 will go to H. L. Crandall, who will convert it into a four-family apartment house. The rectory has been abandoned for several years and the money from its sale will go toward a new church and residence. The society has $8,000 real property left and personal property worth $4,000. It owes $6.579 on its new parish house; $1,200 to Mr. Crandall and $200 to an architect.

Visit the Van Wagenen store Saturday and see the new and used cars on exhibition and don't forget the auction of auto supplies, afternoon and evening.

BE VERY CAREFUL WHERE YOU FISH TOMORROW

The law says that the open season for brook trout shall commence on the first Saturday in April, and this year the date falls on tomorrow, so far as the law is concerned. Tomorrow the fisherman may take his snow shoes, a snow shovel and the rest of the tackle, and go to it, but he must be careful not to infringe upon the law. He must be careful of his selection of the places where he drops his hook, for Section 252 of the Conservation law provides that "no person shall take fish through ice in waters inhabited by trout unless an order, specifying the waters and fixing the season, shall first be made by the commission. The commission have issued strict orders to their protectors to see that this provision of the law is enforced.

Fishing for trout can therefore begin in any part of the State only when the ice has left the waters. Thus, according to the commission, the beginning of the open season in each section of the State is automatically regulated by the climatic conditions in the interest of the best fishing throughout the season.

KLINE-WOOD DRUG STORE TO REMOVE FROM CITY

The Kline-Wood Drug Co., is closing out its stock of goods in its local store and will remove to new quarters in Rochester.

TABERNACLE IS NEARLY FINISHED

The tabernacle at East First st. and Broadway is nearing completion, the finishing touches being put on under the supervision of A. S. Appleton and T. J. Redhead. Scrapers and horses have been used to get the interior in shape for placing in position the benches.

The building measures 70x170 feet and extends from First st. to the river bank. The ground on which it rests having a gradual slope no elevation of the benches, which will seat 2000 persons, will be necessary.

It has a high truss roof containing eight dormer windows and two gable windows for ventilation. The rostrum and choir loft are at the lower end of the building where a staging 32x62 feet has been built. In the side walls eight stoves will provide heat. Several hundred electric light fixtures are being installed by Wayne Bidwell and a crew of helpers.

Rev. Luther K. Peacock, the evangelist, will arrive here April 16 and remain six weeks.

BRICK PAVING FOR MINETTO'S NEW BRIDGE

State engineers engaged in drawing plans for the State's part of the Minetto bridge will have the plans ready for advertising next month and it is probable that the bids will be opened late in the month or early in May. Superintendent Howard and members of the highway committee of the Board of Supervisors who accompanied him to Albany conferred Wednesday with State Engineer Williams in regard to this matter. It is believed that the brick will be used by the State in the bridge paving and this material will be also used by the contractors on the county and town's share of the bridge.

HIGH SCHOOL DOUBLED SCORE

Real Spirit Injected Into Sport In Championship Struggle.

In a bitterly contested game, with a large precentage of the high school body present, amidst a tumultuous noise produced with horns, tin pans, and other implements, the first contest in the series of three matches to decide the championship of the city was waged on the court at Church's hall last night, High scoring a decisive victory over the Maccabees, 36 to 16.

The enthsiasm displayed far exceeded any noted in some time, the hall being in a constant uproar from the time Mayor Lewis tossed the ball up in center on the first play until the final whistle had been blown by Referee Morin. As a result the played on both sides battled without regard to safety first measures and the game resolved itself into a rough encounter in which every player violated the court rules many times.

The game was closely contested at all times, especially in the first few minutes in each half when the high school boys were outclassed and unable to meet the attack of the lodge boys who on these occasions found the baskets for practically all of their points. The Maccabees started off with a rush in the first minute of play and in one-two-three order had scored a basket on fast passwork, Crockett dropping the ball into the net for the two points. A foul scored by Ives increased the lead of the lodge boys and for ten minutes the two teams battled on even terms.

Long passes throughout the forty minute session spelled disaster for the Maccabees as they clearly had the advantage in being in possession of the ball most of the time. Fast snappy passes between Martin and Reynolds were responsiblef or the score rolled up by the school team., Reynolds dropping the ball into the net for 16 points. Martin and yes made a number of baskets good from the foul line, each scoring six points in this manner.

Unpleasantness Ensues

A "free-for-all' encounter in the second period, in which most of the players and a number of spectators participated ended in a draw according to all reports, the contestants being so closely massed together as a result of wedging by others desirous of joined in the fray, that there was no opportunity afforded for blows to be struck. With the offending players ordered to the side lines by Referee Morin, the game proceeded as usual with the exception of several occasions when the referee had to instruct the "noise contingent" to remain quiet in order that the official's whistle could be heard.

Two more games will be played by the teams.

A preliminary staged between two girls' teams from Miss Dickerman's squad proved interesting.

Summary:

As well as being a talented soprano singer and pianist, Mrs. Baker is also the mother of three interesting children—Betty, the oldest; Newton D. Baker 3d, alias "Junior," and Peggy, the baby.

VARIOUS INITIALS.

Hints About Marking Child's Garments So They Won't Mix.

One can buy in the various stores initials by the yard, worked in red or blue outline stitch on narrow strips of linen tape, three-eighths or a half inch wide.

These letters are used for marking plain underclothing, etc. They are of great use to the mother with a large family, who has neither money nor time to spare on embroidery and who finds it necessary to have some distinguishing mark on the clothing, especially when there are two children the same size.

The letters are cut off from the strip when needed and overcast on the inside of the garment, any place where it will be invisible when worn.

When this system is used even stockings are easily paired. Sew each child's initial at the top of the stocking on the inside; then put a cross stitch in red under the letter on each stocking of the first pair. Use a blue cross stitch on the second, yellow on the third, etc.

It is an easy matter to sort even a large pile of stockings, two M's with red crosses being a pair of Mary's stockings, two M's with green crosses another pair, while two J's with blue crosses are a pair of stockings belonging to Jack.

If two children have the same initial use the blue letters for one and red for the other.

Street and Motor Coats.

The ripple coat for spring is made in both cloth and silk. Belts are placed at the normal waist line, at slightly higher than normal or a few inches below the point. Some are short waisted in the front and long waisted in the back. Both styles are liked.

Many coats have high collars and button up to the throat. They are made so that they can be worn open or closed. Oblong sailor collars, draped collars, ruche effect collars, cape collars and simple notched collars are approved. The cape collar is made detachable, being fastened with clasps or with buttons.

Sleeves are dressy, both in cut and by means of fancy cuffs. Motor coats are in plain colors, stripes, checks, plaids and mixtures.

Your New Veil.

If you would preserve that new novelty veil of yours and get from it the greatest possible wear do not fold it when putting it away. Instead take a piece of cardboard, around which you may roll it without creases, cover it with tissue paper and keep it in the box with your hat; and it will always be in the best condition and ready for wear.

Child's Cereal Set.

Nowadays there are many American wares of rather coarse clay finished in beautiful colors and made in pretty shapes. A child's set consisting of a plate, bowl and milk jug—a cereal set—is yellow, and around the top of the jug and bowl and around the edge of the plate is a decoration of white ducklings.

HOW TO MAKE A BIRTHDAY CAKE THAT IS REAL CAKE. Weigh seven large eggs (fresh), take their weight in dried flour and a little more than half their weight in sifted sugar. Break the eggs, separate the yolks from the whites. Beat the former in a bowl, add the sugar to them very gradually, together with a little grated lemon rind, a spoonful of orange flower or rosewater or any other suitable flavoring. Add the flour a little at a time and continue to beat the mixture for twenty minutes. Butter a mold, sprinkle powdered sugar upon the butter and shake off all that will not adhere. Tie a strip of buttered paper round the top of the mold to keep the preparation from rolling down the sides while it is baked. Pour in the cake, three parts; fill the mold with it. When done enough let it stand a few minutes, shake it well to loosen it, turn it out carefully, cut it in slices when cool one-quarter of an inch thick, spread some jam over these and place five or six or more slices together, one on top of the other. Whisk together the whites of two or more eggs, according to size of cake; add half a pound of finely sifted sugar (to the eggs), a dessertspoonful of orange flower water. Whisk the mixture until quite smooth and spread it over the cake with the back of a spoon. Mark the shape of the pieces into which it is afterward to be cut. Place the cake in a very cool oven to dry the icing. Time, half an hour to prepare. Two or three drops of coloring will give it a rose tint. Send to table with lighted candles.

FOR THE BRIDE'S CHEST.

How to Finish Your Bed Linen Attractively and Durably.

Scalloping as a finish for sheets and pillowcases is one of the nicest ways of finishing them. Of course the scallops need to be well padded, and this can be accomplished either by filling in between the marked lines of the scallops with rows of running stitches before applying the buttonholing.

The work can also be given more stability if after the scallops are completed and cut out an extra and tiny buttonhole edge is added to the extreme length of the scallops.

A baby's pillow cover can be simply made as follows: Sew together as for a pillow slip three-fourths of a yard of eighteen inch camisole embroidery of fine quality. Run blue or pink ribbon through small eyelets in scallops, thereby closing the cover. Run ribbon of suitable width through the larger eyelets, forming a bow of the ends on top.

CARE OF YOUR MACHINE.

How to Oil Your Sewing Machine and Save Nerves.

Sewing is not one-half as hard as some people find it if the sewing machine is kept in good order. When the machine works hard and heavy take the needle and shuttle out and give every joint and bearing a generous bath of gasoline.

Of course there should not be a lighted lamp or fire of any kind in the room, and the windows should be open. Turn the wheels briskly for a few moments, to enable the gasoline to penetrate to every part and to loosen and wash away all dirt and grit; then clean it all away.

When all the oil and grime have been removed oil with proper lubricating oil, running the machine for two or three minutes before inserting the needle. Now with a piece of chamois skin wipe away all superfluous oil.

How to Make Delicious Fruit Cocktails For Company Spreads.

A delicious first course for the spring luncheon or midday Sunday dinner is fruit cocktail, served ice cold in dainty glasses. Use the fruits of the season—oranges, bananas, apples, white grapes and perhaps a little chopped pineapple. Skin the grapes, pare the apples and cut the oranges in very thin slices through pulp and rind. Then chop all the fruit in small pieces and soak an hour in their own juice sweetened with sugar. Then stand on the ice until just before serving, when the fruit cocktail may be flavored with a little Rhine wine or claret.

How to Dry Your New Umbrella and So Make It Last.

When you come in from the rain put the umbrella in the rack with the handle downward, because when the handle is upward the water runs down inside to the place where the ribs are joined to the handle and cannot get out, but stays, rotting the cloth and rusting the metal until slowly dried away. The wire fastening the ribs soon rusts and breaks. If placed the other end up the water readily runs off and the umbrella dries almost immediately.

How to Test an Oven Before You Burn Your Cake.

Test your oven before putting in the cake by throwing on the bottom a spoonful of dry flour. If the flour takes fire or quickly turns dark brown color the oven's temperature is too high, and you should allow the oven to cool a little. If the flour remains white after it has been there a few moments the temperature is too low. If the oven is of the proper heat the flour will slightly brown and look a little scorched.

Information and Amusement Furnished by a Map of the World on a Globe Many Things of Interest to Small People—A Sweet Miss From Chicago.

A BEAR AND A BUTTERFLY.

A large and ferocious bear once lived in the middle of a great forest, and so fierce and terrible was he that he had the forest all to himself, for all the animals who used to live there ran away when they saw him coming.

At last he met a butterfly. It was a beautiful blue and gold butterfly, and when the bear discovered it it was sitting on a wild rose eating breakfast. The bear was so delighted at finding something to scare that the roar he gave sounded almost amiable. Nevertheless it was such a roar as would have frightened a squirrel into a fit. But instead of showing any signs of fits the butterfly continued quietly eating breakfast, just as if the bear had not spoken. At this the bear was angry. So he gave seventeen of his loudest and fiercest roars. When he was all through the butterfly turned and said politely, "Excuse me; did you say anything?"

"Say anything?" repeated the bear. "Didn't you hear me? Aren't you frightened?"

"Frightened!" echoed the butterfly. "What should I be afraid of?"

"Why, of me, of course," said the bear. "Everybody's afraid of me."

At that the butterfly laughed and laughed. "You don't suppose you are so terrible, you silly creature!" she said. "You are the one that should be frightened. There is something always behind you, and it follows wherever you go."

The bear looked over his shoulder.

"Oh, you can't see it," said the butterfly. "But it's behind you all the same."

"Goodness gracious me!" cried the bear. "What is it?"

"I shan't tell you," replied the butterfly, "but if I were you I'd be careful how I behaved."

"Thank you so much for telling me," said the bear, quite meekly. "I'll be particularly careful, and I won't growl and romp and roar and scare things ever any more. Goodby, Miss Butterfly," and he tiptoed back to his forest.

When he had gone the butterfly laughed and laughed. "Silly thing!" she said. "Of course there's something behind him that he can't see, but it's only his own tail!"

Use of the Globe.

It is very interesting for children to trace paths of travel on the globe, which many of them possess, for it is really more fun, little boy or girl, than many of your toys, and if you have no globe ask your father to buy you one. It is certainly an interesting game, and if you do not believe just try it.

New Coat Model with Removable Collar.

For spring or summer this suit in cool green linen is admirable. The coat has double collars, one being of white linen.

A lovely shade of cool springtime green linen is used for this model, the coat being trimmed with square collars and revers. One of the collars is removable and is perforated at the front for a square outline if that is preferred to the shawl effect. The sleeves are of regulation coat design, cut in two pieces and finished with turn-back cuffs. In medium size the coat requires 2½ yards 54-inch or 3¾ yards 36-inch material. As most of the smart linens rarely exceed 40 inches in width, it will be necessary to cut the frock and the sleeve on an open width of material. If serge or cloth is used for the coat, fold the material as shown in the cutting guide.

The very important thing is to arrange the various parts of the pattern as indicated, placing each piece over a lengthwise thread where this is required and on the fold when necessary.

The belt is laid on a crosswise fold of material, if a stripe is used, for this is a favorite idea with French dressmakers. The coat hangs quite full below the waist. The removable collar frequently is made of heavy white linen. Sheer organdy, however, is quite as smart looking and probably will be preferred on very warm days.

Many smart, serviceable coats are developed in checked worsted, while others are made of white gabardine. The latter are plainly tailored and trimmed with large pearl buttons.

The new silks of the season offer ample opportunity for that elegant simplicity so earnestly sought and when understandingly handled are effective beyond description.

Let rise until twice its size, form into loaves, let rise until its bulk is doubled, then bake about forty-five minutes. This makes two large loaves.

The spirit of youth has been captured and put into this tailleur costume of Callot plaid. The skirt is a plain, full circular model and the jacket would be a Norfolk did not the raised belt cause indecision with its Empire suggestions. ## CASSEROLE COOKING.

Appetizing Viands Depend Upon Dainty Serving of Them.

The cooking done in casseroles has several important advantages over that of the ordinary kitchen vessel. The dishes are without the metal taste which so often contaminates common pots and pans. As the cooking is slow and thorough the nutritive values of food are preserved, and the perfection of the flavor is therefore concentrated.

The ornamental appearance of the various dishes used permits serving the viands in the very utensils in which they were cooked, which is a tremendous point when the dish needs to be eaten very hot. Food can be put away in the casserole without danger of changing color or taste, as would happen if it were left to chill in a metal vessel. The earthenware of which the dishes are made is not open to the acid influences of fruit and therefore is without the possibility of any noxious change. The enamel of the inside does not scale off, it is easily kept clean and so food prepared in the casserole is clean and sweet.

The pretty marmite for soupmaking, the larger and smaller pots and shallow pans and plates in every size can be bought. Among the many shades of brown there are some green tones (these vessels of French make), which are very effective on the table. Some don'ts are involved in the proper care of the charming utensils.

Before using them for the first time the dishes should be soaked in cold water for some hours, as this will help to keep them from cracking on their first exposure to heat. Never put the vessels on the hot stove or in the oven without first putting in water or fat. Do not put them roughly on a metal surface or set them when hot on a wet table. A fierce heat is never desirable, and so, even if the flame of the top of the stove is low, it is best to put an asbestos mat under the vessel used.

Many more things for the preservation of these toylike cooking vessels might be said, and for young housekeepers and girls who want to learn how to cook in a dainty and perfect manner they are certainly more inspiring than the common cook pot, pan and kettle.

A Carlyle View.

Carlyle compared the advance of the world to the progress of some drunken man who, reeling from one side of the street to the other, slowly and at the expense of much wasted effort finally arrives at his destination.

NECKWEAR AND VEILINGS.

Fashion Cues About Two of the Important Accessories.

Among neckwear it does not matter what the design of the collar if it has an open front. While there are a few extreme dresses seen with high collars, the majority are made with low, flat collars or those with high backs and low fronts.

Some cape collars are made to lie flat, while others have collars with high standing backs attached, with the points turning on either side forming a V.

There are many attractive styles in collar and cuff sets. The collars may be either flat or with a high back and low V front. The cuffs are medium in depth and follow out the design of the collar. Some sets are simply finished on the edge with hemstitching or a picot edge, while others are elaborately trimmed. Ruffles of lace or net about an inch in width are sometimes arranged on the edge in as many as four rows and are finished at the head with hemstitching. The same idea is carried out on the cuffs. Among novelties are leather collar and cuff sets. They are in colors as well as white.

Guimpes and vestees are in many attractive styles. Net, organdie, batiste, voile, marquisette and georgette crape are the materials employed in their making, with embroidery and lace for trimmings.

Plaitings of net, organdie and malines are used in various ways. Plaitings on wide bands are used to wear inside of a high fur or coat collar. Plaitings are also used in making collars, the plaitings being used on both the upper and lower edge of the ribbon band surrounding the neck.

Loose flowing face veils will be much worn this spring. Some are circular; others are draped. The circular veil with a round opening in the center which fits over the crown of the hat is used to quite an extent. Lacy effects with woven scroll patterns are especially effective in veils of this kind. Some are gathered on to an elastic band, allowing it to be adjusted over the crown of the hat. Some hang in straight lines to the shoulders, while others are finished with a ruche or band, which may be caught around the throat. Veils usually match the color of the hat.

FOR NEEDLEWORKERS.

Try These Short Cuts.

There are all sorts of short cuts for sewing on the market. The endless task of working buttonholes may be eliminated by using the worked buttonholes, which may be purchased by the yard at the low cost of 6 cents, suitable for the little folks' underwear. They come worked in fine lawn for shirt waists and the little girl's dresses. The trying task of sewing on hooks and eyes is not now necessary, when they can be bought by the yard ready to be stitched into place. In making a fitted lining it is well to sew on these fastenings before it is fitted in order to secure a good fit. If the spacings between the hooks is too wide in some places where there is a strain it does not take long to sew a few on at these points. If, however, you do sew on hooks and eyes you will find it much less difficult to keep the thread from showing through on the right side if you will slip a piece of whalebone into the hem. If the hem is too wide for a whalebone cut a heavy piece of cardboard the proper width and slip that in.

Odds and Ends of Silk.

Look through your bag or box containing odds and ends of embroidery silks and let them prove useful in ornamenting guest towels and other things. It is well to have a few little towels on hand, not only for home use, but to be showered on girls whose engagements have been announced. The most attractive towels can be made by embroidering across their ends little flowers. These can be filled in with French knots made from the various corded silks. The result is really very satisfactory.

Maitre d'Hotel Sauce.

One-third cupful butter, ten drops onion juice, one tablespoonful lemon juice, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Beat the butter to a cream as for a cake, add the lemon juice a little at a time and, when blended, stir in the parsley, onion juice and seasoning. Form into a ball or flat cake and set aside to chill before serving.

Chiffon Taffeta Afternoon Frock.

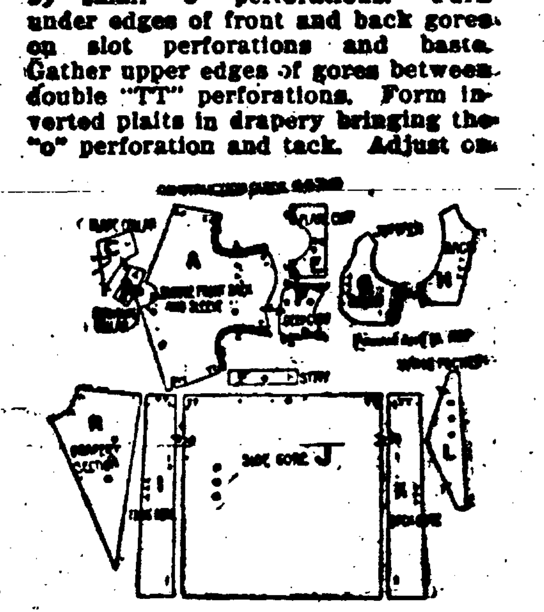
A youthful costume in a becoming shade of gray taffeta trimmed with green satin. The skirt has wing pockets.

Wet sand is a new shade of gray that is becoming to youthful figures, especially when brightened with a touch of blue, rose or pink. In this instance, the belt is of green satin and the gauze collar is outlined with the narrowest band of green. To make the dress in medium size requires 4½ yards 40-inch taffeta and 2⅛ yards 36-inch chiffon for the blouse, cuffs and collar.

Begin the construction of the dress with the blouse. Close underarm and sleeve seams, then close center-back seam. Turn hem at notches, gather lower edge of blouse between double "TT" perforations, and 2 inches above. Adjust stay underneath gathers, center-backs even, large "O" perforation at upper edge at under-arm seam; and bring front edge to center-front. Sew square collar to neck edge, notches and center-backs even. If long sleeve is desired, gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of cuff as notched to large "O" perforation; sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve; and bring seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve.

For the wing pocket on the skirt, upper edge of pocket being marked, close the seam. Adjust on skirt, fold pocket, matching notches and by small "o" perforations. Turn under edges of front and back gores on slot perforations and baste. Gather upper edges of gores between double "TT" perforations. Form inverted plaits in drapery bringing the "o" perforation and tack. Adjust on



"T" perforations together on small side gore, small "o" perforations at "o" perforation and tack. Adjust on side edges; and the upper edges even; bring the edges of drapery together at the line of small "o" perforations in skirt.

To make the jumper, plait underarm edge of front placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Close right under-arm seam as notched: finish left edges for a closing. Lap the upper pointed end of front, on the back matching small "o" perforations and close with buttons and buttonholes.

Trim the deep cuffs with tiny buttons from top to wrist.

Waists Now Close at the Side.

Shirt waist of crepe meteor, closing at the side. It is trimmed with self-buttons and a four-in-hand of taffeta.

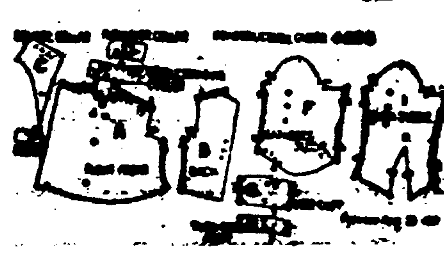
Nothing short of an index system will keep one posted on the changes in separate waists. Each innovation seems to find a ready welcome, however. Here is a new design in crepe meteor, distinguished by its method of adjustment. The side closing gives free play to front decoration and one easily can imagine how effective embroidery would be on a waist of batiste or linen. In medium size the model calls for 2⅝ yards 36-inch material.

The preliminary step in the construction of the waist is to gather the shoulder edges of the front between double "TT" perforations. Then close the underarm and shoulder seams and hem at left front edge of right front at notches. Stitch a tape underneath the gathers at left shoulder edge of right front drawing gathers tto the required size. Center-front is indicated by large "O" perforations in right front.

Adjust pockets to position on right front, upper edge of pockets between the 2 small "o" perforations.

Sew collar to neck edge, center-upper edge of pockets between the 2 backs even and on right front along small "o" perforations, single large "O" perforations even: leave the left side of the collar free from shoulder seam to lower front edge of collar and bind the edge.

Close the sleeve seam as notched and gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of cuff as notched leaving seam free about 2 inches from lower edge.



Sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff to seam of sleeve, and bring the seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew turn-over to cuff as notched. Sew sleeve in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even, easing in any fulness.

Self-covered buttons and a four-in-hand of taffeta are details that count for smartness of decoration.

For The Small Girl.

Little girl's frock of white crepe meteor, trimmed with smocking, done in blue. Shirring makes an equally smart trimming.

The supply of dainty frocks for little tots is remarkable, and among them one notices many quaint models in silk, crepe de chine and crepe meteor, all, however, of washable variety. A dainty model is shown here, made with the front and back yoke cut in one. The distinguishing feature of the dress is the smocking which trims it. In medium size it requires 2⅝ yards of 36-inch material.

There are eight pieces in the pattern and it is necessary to fold the material in half so that each piece will be cut in duplicate. The front is placed on the lengthwise fold, as shown on the cutting guide (A), and to the right of it is laid the back (B). Next come the yoke and collar.

On the second row are placed the lap, the pocket and the sleeve, all on a lengthwise fold. For the open neck, cut out the neck edge of the yoke ⅝ inch above small "o" perforations. Many mothers prefer the high neck, however, with straight collar, in which case a double row of buttons may be added to the decorative scheme, being sewn directly down the front.

The smocking is a simple design and works up very quickly. Threads of contrasting color may be used for the work, for instance, white on a blue or pink ground, and vice versa.

There is a plait at either side of the back of the dress and between this are several rows of smocking.

Shirring may take the place of smocking and is also very fashionable.

WOMEN CHARGED WITH SHOPLIFTING RELEASED UPON PAYING FINES

Mrs. Mary Misswa and Mrs. Helen Kurasz, aged 25 and 23 respectively, the women arrested yesterday at the trolley terminal by Chief Dyer on a charge of shoplifting were given a hearing late in the day by Judge Wilson. They entered a plea ouf guilty and were released upon payment of a fine of $25 each. W. H. Patterson and M. C. McDonald appeared in court and identified the clothing which had been found on the women when searched at the police station as having been taken from their stores. During the trial the accused women, who claimed to live in Oswego, stated that their husbands had left for Utica two weeks ago in search of work, and have received no word from either the men. Mrs. Misswa stated she had four children at home, with no one to take care of them in her absence, while the other women said she had two children.

A number of storekeepers received visits from the women who made a hasty tour yesterday during the noon hour while the force of clerks was small. In most instances thye were closely watched and were unable to carry out their plan which was to engage a clerk's attention in a distant part of the store while the other woman donned expensive clothing over her street attire, both making their exist.

THE QUIRK TODAY

World Film Corporation presents Clara Kimball Young, them ost beautiful and accomplished motion picture artist in thew orld, in a picturization of Alexandre Dumas' famous play "The Lady with the Camellias."

Camille has obtained her name by popular assignment—she was called the "lady with the camellias" after her fondness for those flowers—properly she was Marguerite Gautier, a girl with a bad reputation. But what mattered it? She was lovely and popular. There was a young Count, with millions, at her feet. Yet she did not love him.

It was Armand, the young lawyer who won her heart. For a time there was happiness between the pair. Then Armand's father persuaded her to give up the boy, Camille reverted to de Varville.

Armand and de Varville fought a duel; and Marguerite died of a broken heart, not however, before making it plain that she really loved Armand.

"Women are strannge." Miss Young has a splendid character in that of Camille, and does if the fullest justice. Admittedly the finest and most expressive actress now befoore the motion picture camera, she rises to the great opportunities which this character gives her.

Four other reels and four acts of vaudeville round out an excellent bill.

ENGLAND PLANS TO UNLOAD GOLF BALLS ON AMERICA

Patent Expiring In April May Let Bars Down to Importers.

Vice Consul Hamilton C. Claborne, who represents the United States at Swansea, Wales, has warned the state department that British manufacturers are laying in a supply of ammunition in the form of golf balls with which they intend to bombard the United States after April 11, 1916. On that date the Haskell patent for the manufacture of golf balls in the United States expires.

In making his prediction of the golf ball bombardment which will then be undertaken unless congress prohibits the dumping of golf balls as well as dyestuffs, Vice Consul Claborne says the British manufacturers hope by invading the American market to make up the losses incurred through the falling off of golf in the British isles on account of the war. He quotes from the London Daily Mail as follows:

"British golf ball manufacturers, hard hit by the war, are to make a determined effort to capture the American market. The attempt is made possible by the expiration on April 11 of the Haskell patent, under which golf balls are manufactured in the United States. The Haskell patent, which killed the gutty ball, was not recognized by the English law courts, but was declared valid in America, thus keeping the ever improving British balls out of that country.

"After April 11 the market will be open, subject to the payment of a duty of 10 per cent—about 6 cents a ball. Cheaper labor here will compensate for that, and ten leading British firms are sending representatives to the United States or appointing agents to prepare the way for the invasion."

NEW PLAN FOR RELIEF.

"Buy a Yard of Cloth" Day Is Planned For Belgian Funds.

"Buy a yard of cloth days" have been designated by more than fifty governors and mayors throughout the country to aid state committees of the commission for relief in Belgium in their efforts to obtain clothing for the destitute in Belgium and northern France. The purpose of the proclamations is to concentrate the minds of merchants and the public upon sales of cloth for the Belgians.

The commission announced that it already had purchased and shipped cloth from which its textile experts estimate the Belgians will be able to fashion 777,850 garments.

LOSSES CAUSED BY OAT SMUT

The country as a whole loses each year about $20,000,000 from oat smut, and at least one-tenth of this amount, or $2,000,000 is the present annual loss in New York State, according to figures just issued by the Cornell experiment station.

Now that New York state farmers are preparing to sow their oat crops the college calls renewed attention to the well-known blackened appearance of oat heads, which is commonly called oat smut or loose smut of oats, and says it is responsible for a much greater annual loss than is generally supposed.

The fungus which causes this disease brings about the loss in two ways. There is a reduction in yield due to a certain percentage of the heads being smutted. This is ordinarily recognized. There is a further loss not generally recognized which is caused by the fungus killing out many of the young seedlings and stunting the growth of others, which, as a result, do not head out well.

According to the United States department of Agriculture, the field loss in the United States in the year 1911 from the loose smut of oats was 4 per cent of the crop of 36,891,920 bushels, which represents a money loss of $16,586,520. Calculating the smutted heads to average 4 per cent, which some years is low, there has been a loss every year since 1909 of $16,000,000 to $23,000,000.

New York contributes her full share towards this loss. The state experiment station reports the loss to be from 8.5 to 10 per cent in 1884, and an average loss of 8.5 per cent with occasional losses of 20 per cent and even 30 per cent in 1886. A large number of counts made by farm bureau agents last year in fifteen counties of the state showed 16 1-2 per cent of smutted heads. Last year's crop in New York is estimated to be 54,370,000 bushels, valued at $24,422,000. If the smut is estimated to be but 10 per cent, there is a loss to the farmers of the State of over $2,500,000.

This loss may be looked upon as a smut tax to which everyone who grows smutty oats contributes. The college authorities make this query: Does it now seem foolish to pay such a tax when it can be easily avoided at a cost of material of less than a cent per bushel of seed oats by treatment with formaldehyde? One pint of the 40 per cent solution should be sprinkled with this until it is wet, after which it should be thrown into a pile, left covered with blankets or bags for four hours or more. It may then be dried and sown.

UNIVERSITY STUDENT TAKES UP REFORM

Philadelphia, Pa.—Howard L. Baldensperger, an instructor of economics in the Wharton school of the University of Pennsylvania whose utterances caused James H. R. Cromwell, a stepson of E. T. Stotesbury, banker to withdraw from the economic course last fall, has resigned to take up prison reform work.

He announced that he will teach for the last time in the Wharton school tomorrow and that he will go to New York to take up his new line of work on Monday.

Mr. Baldensperger offended young Mr. Cromwell by saying among other things that the "Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company has the public by the throat and has been strangling it." The incident attracted considerable attention. Mr. Cromwell remained at the Wharton school, but gave up economics.

Now Then, Full Speed Ahead! W. P. Morin Succeeds N. L. Whitaker as President of Chamber of Commerce

The result of a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce, held this forenoon is: W. P. Morin, President; L. W. Emerick, Vice President; D. L. Lipsky, Treasurer; D. S. Hollenga, Secretary. New directors elected last night were: I. Achille, 94; W. A. Butts, 77; H. L. Paddock, 66. Messrs. [illegible], Lipsky and Conley secured 23, 21 and 17 each respectively.

What has the Chamber of Commerce done in twelve months. The question is frequently asked, by others than members of the board of directors, for they never ask it—they know.

In full measure the answer came last night, when Secretary Hollenga made public the annual report of the Chamber during its first year as a rejuvenated body. The list of doings was a long one, and what applies to this city, applies to all cities. The report was for the purpose of telling the people just the function of the Chamber of Commerce, because it is proper they should know, especially if they are contributing to it. It costs a lot of money to run a live Chamber of Commerce, as over $7000 was expended during 1915 and 1916 by the directors of the local body. Something more than $6,000 comprised the receipts from membership dues, leaving a deficit of $112.46; but the cost may be considered small in proportion to the amount of work accomplished, especially in the last four months.

Diversified Opportunities

Since last March, about 312 days, the following diversified subjects have been up for consideration and handled in a successful and unsuccessful manner according to the viewpoint of the critic, and no better practical explanation of the routine work of the Chamber could be given than what has occurred in the last year by mentioning the different things accomplished.

The Secretary recognized the growth of the old trade guilds into what are now known as commercial organizations, adding that it is hard to satisfy everybody with the work conducted by the Chamber of Commerce, whose directorate has met 46 times in the year. He pointed to the "Trade at Home" campaign begun by his predecessor, and this he said, will continue until the flag waves over the [illegible]t. In this connection he referred to the merchants for exi[illegible] of the beneficial results of the work. Nods of approval were given by retailers present. Other things accomplished by the Chamber in the year were: the establishment of a school of salesmanship; the passage of a street traffic ordinance; the Hannibal-Fulton bus line; consideration of a cold storage plant; a fall display week, which gave to out-of-town papers an immense amount of advertising; a credit bureau with over 2000 names of persons and their ratings; the inauguration of the public market movement. Here the Secretary paused long enough to express his appreciation of the cooperation on The Plaza December 24th, when 1800 gifts were distributed to children.

A City Survey Will Come

In addition to the Chamber's work in behalf of the rehabilitation of the Battle Island paper mill, it has been possible to secure a survey of the city since 1902, which, when complete, will furnish the people with al ist of expenses of each and every department of the municipal government since that date. At this point the Secretary touched lightly upon the campaign in behalf of Commission Government, conducted by his predecessar, and which turned out to be a fizzle, costing the chamber about $150, and the city three times the amount.

Not long ago the Chamber of Commerce moved to give assistance to the Spanswick Manufacturing Company. It was found necessary, the Secretary said, to place the books of the company in charge of an auditor, which wasd one together with making a complete survey of the company's affairs, with the result, he said, that today this industry is in sounder condition than ever before in its history. and further than that, it will remain as one of Fulton's assets.

When the new Secretary came here he recognized the need of stamping Fulton-made goods with a trade mark. He secured an acceptable design and soon every piece of manufactured product of the city's industries will be shipped bearing a stamp proclaiming the place of its origin. Through the efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, with D. S. Hollenga as secretary, the milk station will become another industry of importance. The plant re-opened today under the management of Mr. W. J. Peach. When the matter of dividing Oswego Town was before the Board of Supervisors, Fulton's Chamber of Commerce showed its activity, and the result was that the movement carried. The Secretary explained why interest was taken in the movement, by saying that this city will be benefited by the big cotton mill which is to be erected at Minnetto as a result of the town division. The Chambeer has been active in securing more good roads in this vicinity, the Secretary saying that he and R. L. McCully have made a tour with that object in view, and that there exists every reason to believe results are coming.

In referring to the establishment of the Fulton Symphony Orchestra the Secretary injected a bit of humor, by telling of an incident of the recent concert, when 1156 persons paid for admission to the Quirk whose seating capacity is 1282. A member of the audience asked one of his neighbors how much salary the Secretary received. The neighbor happened to be a director whop romptly declined to divulge the exact amount, whereupon the inquisitive one said: "Gee, but $20 would pave a lot of streets." Mr. Hollenga's efforts to abolish the early-closing practice indulged in by the Empire United, resulted in the First st. terminal remaining open until midnight. He is hopeful of securing improved car service, better cars, even to parlor cars such as are used on the Rochester division. He spoke of sending out 1900 invitations to farmers to attend the Fashion Days and that the same number will be sent out for the week of April 12th.

Mr. G. G. Chauncey moved and it was adopted that the report be printed in promphlet form for distribution.

When Troubled, Call 51

In outlining the 1916-17 program the Secretary said that next week will be known as "Pay-up Week," beginning on Monday. It is his intention to further benefit the retailers by establishing a complaint department at the Chamber of Commerce rooms, where customers should make known their inability to secure articles in any one of the stores, and that he will do all in his power to induce merchant who may be delinquent to supply the wants.

An "Old Home Week" and the Fourth of July will be celebrated jointly in a way quite unusual, says the Secretary; but before that time there will ensue a "Clean-up, Paint-up and Live-up" campaign which promises to be a leader in the annals of such events. Encouragement will be given by the Chamber to persons who desire to improve yards and houses, by planting trees, flowers and shrubbery Bird houses will be erected in the parks and a band stand will also be placed in East Park, Another item of adornment for the streets will be the placing of boxes containing growing plants on top of the lighting standards.

The Secretary recognizes the neglect obtaining in the matter of looking to the farmer population for help in building up the city, saying that theirs is a staple trade. Accordingly he is going to hold a farmers' picnic and a farmers' wife picnic, upon which occasions it will do us good to get acquainted with our guests. Hitching grounds, he said, must also be established—and soon. He wants to have the State land opposite the Citizens Club look spick and span, so that the thousands of auto tourists who will this year pass through the city may leave with only a good impression of their visit.

Merchants Must Work

Sometime during the late spring them erchants will, at the instance of the Chamber, make trips into the country surrounding the city, for the purpose of making the acquaintance of the rest of the community. A good roads day will be another feature of the next six months, as will be the establishment of a workingman's hospital fund. One object of the latter is to encourage workingmen to place in a fund one cent each week as insurance against becoming charity patients in the hospital in times of distress.

When the Secretary mentioned his desire to have vocational and agricultural education as features of the public schools, Prof. Fairgrieve spoke in behalf of a new high school building, saying that under existing conditions it would be impossible to carry out such a program, the main reason being that the old building does not offer proper facilities. The foregoing and dozens of other items are to receive the attention of the Chamber during the next six months.

New Milling Interests Want Canal Lands

It was made plainly evident at last night's meeting of the Chamber of Commerce that the men of Fulton are interested in the outcome of the fight to secure the abandoned canal lands for some purpose, for at no time during the meeting was there as much interest shown in a project as in this case.

The retiring president of the Chamber reviewed the incident of a recent trip to Albany where he met the State officials and, incidentally, Mayor Lewis, Attorney Hillick and Mr. H. P. Burgard. Mr. Burgard conveyed information relative to the desire of the interests back of the new feed mill to secure the land north of the Plaza for manufacturing purposes, with the exception of enough of it to provide for widening Wall street.

In order that the city may acquire the land for market purposes it would be necessary for a number of men to sign their names to a note for the amount of the purchase price, which, according to the appraisal value of the land board, was over $11,000. This price is deemed extravagantly high by those who profess to know.

Dr. F. E. Fox precipitated an argument by insisting that if the city is to relinquish the land for manufacturing purposes, it should be required of the buyers that they agree to employ a certain number of men. He was supported in a measure by M. A. Stranahan who seemed to doubt the sincerity of Mr. Burgard's participation in the project of using theg round for manufacturing purposes.

A resolution was offered by B. W. Bennett, in effect that every encouragement should be offered the milling interests who are developing the old Gage mill tol ocate here, even though it may be found necessary to locate the city market upon some other site. A number of speakers coincided with Mr. Bennett.

Mr. E. R. Redhead just returned from Albany where it is presumed he went to learn some things about the transactions connected with the land deal, expressed the opinion that too much secrecy obtained in connection with the work of securing the land. It was finally decided to lay the matter over until today when Mr. Burgard was to appear before the Chamber of Commerce directors to make a proposition. This meeting was held about noon today, but the Chamber deems it expedient that the result shall remain in their hands instead of with thep ublic.

SEPARATING JOBS FROM POLITICS

The first annual report of Governor Whitman's Civil Service Commission shows work which must have been anything but satisfactory to the professional politicians and their job-hunter constituents. That means that it should be thoroughly satisfactory to the bulk of the population of the state—to those who regard the state service as one where each individual should do his work and be able to earn his salary just as if he were hired by a private business concern.

In 1915 the commission actually reduced the number of exempt places on the state's payroll by 187—that is, took away from the politicians 187 chances of landing henchmen in jobs. —N. Y. Tribune.

VIGOROUS ADVOCATES OF PROTECTION

The shock of the war has opened the eyes of English manufacturers to the fallacies of free trade as an economic policy, even though the adminis tration at Washington remains absolutely blind to the lesson of the dye situation and to the warnings of the deluge of foreign-made goods which will inundate our shores the moment peace is declared. The speeches delivered at the annual meeting of the British Chambers of Commerce, in London, are as strongly tinctured with protection as any ever made by a Republican in the heat of a presidential campaign in which the tariff was the dominant issue.

The vigorous and emphatic nature of the demand for a change in the traditional British economic policy may be judged by the speech of Sir Algernon Freeman Firth, who laid down the sweeping doctrine that "national strength and safety in times of trial lie in the possession of the power to produce its requirements from its own soil and factories." Again, "the rude shock of war has shown that laissez-faire is not a policy for a great people in a time of national crisis. National production is of vital national interest, and should be safeguarded from attack as well as from delay."

The American people have never had occasion to consider the value of protection as a measure of national defense, but the remarks of the Englishmen whose words we have quoted show that in time of war protection is essential to the national safety, just as experience in this country has demonstrated that in time of peace it is essential to national prosperity. He described at some length the awkward place in which England found herself at the outbreak of the war because of the discovery that some of the most important industries were at the mercy of foreigners. It was found that the people had become virtually dependent upon Germany for analine dyes, textiles, leather goods, wall paper and many other articles.

"The result," he said, "was eighteen months' hard work, with dislocation of some industries, to overtake our needs. We had to be dependent upon neutrals for many essential supplies, and that was a position in which a great country ought not to be placed." This resolution was passed before the meeting adjourned.

This association desires to place on record for the guidance of those who follow us in days to come its firm conviction, based on experience of war, that the strength and safety of the Empire lie in its ability to produce what it requires, as largely as may be possible, from its own soil and factories.

It is a pity that these words cannot be burned in letters of fire on the hearts of those in Washington who are shuffling and dodging in their efforts to avoid the adoption of a ringing American policy that shall place us on our feet economically, no matter what the issue of the war. As matters stand now, the upbuilding of important industries is being delayed because of the reluctance of Congress to come to their support, and no steps are being taken to prevent economic disaster when the poverty-stricken nations of Europe set feverishl yto work to repair their shattered fortunes. — Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

BUILDING CITIES

City planning bids fair to be one of the most popular public interests for the next few years. People are getting tired of the results of the haphazard growth of their cities, and desirous of making their surroundings more comfortable and livable for all. The idea of having extravagantly beautiful living quarters at one end of town, and unspeakable slums at the other, is becoming adhorrent. A better distribution of pleasantness and comfort is the aim. Moreover, people are beginning to realize that these extremes of housing are not necessary, but simply due to lack of forethought and common sense.

Augusta, Georgia, has just had a serious fire, and the Augusta Chronicle warns against the haste which says "We'll begin to rebuild tomorrow." It commends the spirit and enterprise which prompts the promise, but advises, most wisely, that the builders take time enough to plan their construction with a view to remaking the city as a whole in shape more suitable to the city's needs, both of efficiency and aesthetics. If the opportunity is seized, not for a hasty throwing up of ill-considered edifices, but of creating beauty and usefulness for the present and future, the fire will prove in the end a benefit instead of an injury to the city.

A municipality as widely different from Augusta in all its needs and circumstances as New York is now considering the matter of redistricting the borough of Manhattan. This is a new departure in American cities. How wise or successful it will prove is still to be seen. The idea is to confine certain areas to certain uses, not allowing factories to encroach upon retail districts, keeping residence districts free from trade, and restricting the height of buildings, particularly where stricter regulation seems to be needed.

Cleveland, Ohio, has been working steadily for several years on a "group plan" of public buildings and a park system which shall encircle the city with recreation grounds enjoyed by all the people.

Salt Lake City was one of the first American cities to be given a street plan looking toward the future.

It is, after all, just a question of whether growing cities shall be allowed to "just grow," or whether their development shall proceed according to some sensible system. Building laws providing for light, air and durability, safeguarding against fire, darkness and disease are within the possibility of any town. The establishment of a definite plan making secure the city's future growth along the line of beauty, and satisfaction is also possible everywhere.

A quarter of a century from now the charge of ugliness as a necessary element of an American city ought to be relegated to a dim and almost forgotten past.

GOSSIP ON THE WIRE

The Public Service Commission of the Second (up state) Distrist has been "listening in," by request of business offices tired of hearing Central's "wire busy." on rural telephone talkers. Business men complained that their pretendedly necessary conversations were interrupted by the clatter of those who visit by telephone, and the commission deemed it its duty to intervene. Heaven help the commissioners! Appreciating the difficulties of the situation, they have wisely limited their activities to a recommendation more tolerable than a flatly forbidding flat.

Business? A dull matter of prices and credits, of percentages, mortgages, profit and loss, making what's yours mine and preventing what's mine from becoming yours. An idol with feet of clay before which we Americans too easily bow in a somewhat insincere, therefore the more abased homage.

Telephone gossip? Here is the stuff of life. Has Mrs. Jones heard the latest about Mrs. Smith? Mrs. Robinson who has it savory hot, will enlighten the ignorance of her neighbor three towns away. Sim Tinker has painted his barn; that's worth 45 minutes—especially when it is recalled, as recalled it must be that Mrs. Tinker has been without a new hat at Easter since 1913; wasn't that the year young S. De Veer Tinker went to the Upper Tier Polytechnic Institute? And by the way, my girl Sally, who's at Miss So and So's Seminary of Young Ladies down in Delaware, she tells me that young De Veer Tinker is spending a week more butter than the cream of his father's herd of Holbeins is good for in a month. Let Party J ring, and ring again!

The bells jingle joy, fun or funerals or buzz business. Business, real business, is a recipe for chili sauce; a new baby at the Boorman's, perhaps a baby with an interest superior to mere enumeration in the birth statistics; the triumph in the spelling book of a son or daughter, destined to become a village blacksmith or tire inflater or a dressmaker known to the furthest bounds of the county; the thickness of ice on Throckmorton's mill pond, or the running of 'taters to tops; the hang of a skirt, the new minister's first sermon—and brown eyes, or Araminta's first tooth or little Si's first "longers." That's business.

"Idle gossip?" Not at all! That's the stuff of life. Who rings up Party R? Men or women? We guess the men can gossip. Odd Fellows tonight—be ther, Jonas? Little game afterward, over to Pete's and—you know! (Sibilant sound of a sip.) Trial of Tod Hones this afternoon; see you at the Court House? Ploughin' go hang! Ground's too wet right now anyway. Besides, old Judge Whathisname has said he's going to put a stop to this—all right, down to Myer's store at 2:30 sharp! And while thew ires buzz with these matters of prime import let that life insurance man in Skaneateles wait, let that feller down to Syracuse go hang—and old Squire Bryant over in th' next county can jest take all the time he wants.

New York can fuss about its Four Hundred, or thousand or million; Hillman's Corners has got its high society and if fixin' up that affair at Seth Freeman's celebratin' his daughter Florabelle's engagement to that street car mag-net from the metropolis conflicts with Business, why Buisness can go—to any place where it ain't agoin' to interfere with Affairs. And as to regulatin' calls to five minutes, in the public interest, just how be ye agoin' to dew it when it's the public thet's talkin' anyhow?—N. Y. Sun.

A COURAGEOUS STAND

No one can accuse Senator Brown of lacking the courage of his convictions, standing alone in the committee against the presentation of a woman suffrage amendment next year and now submitting a bill to prevent its re-submission before five years has elapsed. It would appear, however, that he had wisdom on his side. An amendment defeated by nearly 300,000 majority only last fall would hardly have any chance of being adopted if submitted again within two years. Five years is short enough time in which to again take the record of public opinion upon this question. Probably it would be better for the suffragist cause, for the public gets tired of continual nagging on one thing and it is apt to get irritated and develop more strenuous opposition. Three or four years' quiet work on the part of the suffragists might accomplish more. Public opinion as expressed last fall is not likely to be changed in a year, though it might be in five years.—Watertown Times.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Butte, Montana, after nearly a year and a half of woman suffrage, has a woman candidate for alderman.

Peter Mackenzie, whose wife lost her right to vote in the state of California when she married him, filed his application for American citizenship in San Francisco on March 8th for the express purpose of enfranchising his wife. Peter is an entirely new variety of hyphenated American.

"I believe that women can develop peculiar qualifications for public service if properly trained," said City Chamberlain Bruere in a recent speech at the Intercollegiate Bureau of Occupations in New York city, and he added, "There are 700 women now employed in the municipal building and we want as many more as possible in public service here in New York."

At the Republican primary in Cottonwood Falls, Kansas, more women appeared than men. Here was a chance, if ever, for the women to seize the reins of government and relegate men to that same back seat so long occupied by women in politics. Not so. The women helped themselves politely and meekly to just ten of the twenty-five county delegates, when they might easily have taken them all.

It is not alone in politics that women are complaining about taxation without representation. "Unless all signs fail, "according to the sporting page of the New York Post, "there promises to 'be something akin to suffrage agitation among the women lawn-tennis players."

They are asking why they should be deprived of a direct vote in governing the National Association. They say that their money and their services make the Association prosperous but when the plans are made for the season the women and their requests are forgotten.

"There is no doubt that the English women will be given the vote directly the war is over," according to Mrs. Bertrand Russell who is in the country to raise money for the work for wartime babies and mothers that the suffragists are doing in England, and who was interviewed by the New York Post.

"The war," so she said, "could not have lasted twelve months without the cooperation of the women and the suffragists have done the best work. It is to their old enemies, the suffragists, that the government has turned, because they are the highly trained women, the competent and disinterested women."

A Bit of Sicily.

"There is no Italian town more picturesque than the Sicilian capital. Palermo," writes a traveler. "Sailing ships of all rigs, their hulls painted all the colors of the rainbow, nose up against the quay, where mule carts, whose drivers are shouting at the top of their voices, wait to take away the merchandise. The narrow streets where the custom house officers examine the goods brought ashore is a place of terrific noise. When a driver, two clerks and two custom house officers are discussing the contents of a bale or a cask it seems as though murder must be committed within the next few seconds. But somebody signs something, the cart moves on, and everybody laughs."

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

"By thrift," says Dr. Shailer Matthews, "is meant simply that way of living which systematically transfers a portion of one's income to one's capital. It is not consistent with generosity; it is not a synonym of niggardliness."

The fear of being thought stingy or of being unsuccessful is at the root of much of the prodigality that afflicts our people. They do not seem to realize that few people get rich in a day, but that those who have acquired a competency have done so by the systematic saving of a certain amount each day, week or month.

A person must have money for any enterprise he wishes to undertake. Many opportunities arise for a man who has a little money that pass by the man who has none. The Brooklyn Navy Branch of the Y. M. C. A. opened a deposit system for the enlisted men fourteen years ago and in that time over $5,000,000 was deposited. Last year there was a balance of $225,000 upon which interest is being paid. But from these savings many of the lads, after their apprenticeship was served, completed courses in universities, in engineering, architecture and mechanics. Because of their thrift in putting by money they were able to enlarge their opportunities many times over.

Out of an estimated population of 1,905,339,000 in all countries having savings banks, there are 132,506,114 depositors. This means a world average deposit account of $136.18 and an average per inhabitant of $17.94. Though the amount of deposits in the United States is large, yet the number of savers in proportion to the population is about 11 per cent, which is 2 per cent less than that of the entire world.

In a survey made recently from the reports based in part on the opinion of the state comptrollers, rather than solely on statistics, it is shown that savings during the past year have increased in all communities, save the South. The reports of banks show a total increase of $61,000,000 in savings. The greatest increase in the year was in the New England group of states which had a gain of $28,795,758. The middle states, $16,998,752; the Eastern states and Pacific states, more than $8,000,000; the Southern states, $7,999,314, and the Western states $5,573,121 increase in deposits.

SPRING IS HERE

Spring is the oldest, stalest and most absurd subject upon which to write, especially a newspaper article. That is the reason I am writing this.

Our reliable friend, Dr. Mill's Almanac, and others, told us that Spring came on the 4:47 p. m. train Monday, March 20, 1916. Of course no one believes the almanacs, except a few trusting old souls, who are usually ashamed to reveal themselves. At that time Spring did come, but dressed in the stiff, white sheets of a ghost of winter.

Now Spring is really here. The symptons are too obvious to deny the fact. Robins are chirping and singing gaily every morning—but this is no sign, for Mr. Brooks saw or heard his annual first robin some long time ago. The real signs of Spring are:

The snow is going—where, I know not, but going, and fast. Many people, who had left their walks to be cleared by the party who put the snow there, are complaining that the snow is not going fast enough; but the majority of people, especially those who live on low lands, are satisfied; and the regulator of our planet usually pleases the majority when it also pleases Himself, or Itself. Some others, also, are displeased, for the fast-sinking snow piles reveal their backyards decorated with cans, ashes, paper and food for the pigs.

The minds of our youths, and even some of our grown-ups, are lightly turning to thoughts of love. Well, I don't blame them; do you? And this is the surest sign of Spring. Even the animals become human, or perhaps the humans are animal here, and turn their thoughts to love. Especially the cat family, as any would-be sleeper will attest, who has tried to sleep through a concert by the Tom-cat Phildisharmonic Orchestra, serenading their pussy sweethearts. But don't be too hard on the cats; some humans do worse than this in serenading and wooing their pussy often sweethearts.

The Spring Fever has come. This is a happily convenient excuse for all laziness, day-dreaming, lack of ambition and foolishness, happening in this season, and, too, chronic. Our janitors especially suffer from this affliction, and our heat is going with the snow. But this is not always a sure sign, for many janitors rush the season.

Men are making out thirty day notes, or pawning their new Spring coat and hat to buy Easter bonnets. Now this matter of Easter hats deserves our consideration. It is a dread disease which infects women the year around, is acute a few weeks before Easter, and enjoys the crisis or relapse about two days after Easter, when they see another woman with a better or prettier hat.

Among many minor signs of Spring are: People are beginning to store up eggs for Easter, and appetites for the accompaniment. Women are beginning to talk of house cleaning, and are worrying their men folks in regard to their services. Trolleys and trains are running on time. Baseball is beginning to relieve our minds and newspapers of war news, bowling and basketball. Umbrella menders and some who can't mend are beginning to bother busy housewives. Lastly, and leastly, women gossipers, and I regret to admit, some men gossipers are enjoying tete a tetes which were graciously denied them in the prison of winter.

Of course we are all glad Spring is here. Soon the trees will bud and leaf, fruit trees will shower the earth with fragrant confetti of gay colored petals, the grass will green, so that perhaps others than diviners will hear it grow, and the flies and the mosquitoes will come.

FLED FRANCE IN PLANE, HE SAYS

FEARED THE FIRING SQUAD.

Arrested After Attempting to Send Dispatches by the Censor, He Broke Out of Jail, Walked Many Miles and Met an American Aviator, Who Took Him Safely to England.

Thomas A. Price, a news writer, of Audubon, N. J., came back from the European battlefields the other day with a story of strange and divers adventures. The narrative as Price told it—his flight from court martial and death in France, crossing the English channel in an aeroplane and returning to New York as a stowaway aboard the American liner Philadelphia—follows:

"I went over last May as a free lance. But I soon found that I could not see anything more than the authorities wanted me to see, and I couldn't send that out unless they were willing. So I went to Kent and enlisted as a Canadian. I was sent to France about the 1st of July to a station at Kemmel, between Ypres and Messines, with the Second divisional ammunition corps. I was made a dispatch rider, and I went all through the French and Belgian lines, under shell fire most of the time.

"I saw the battle of Loos and got sent to the base hospital at Etaples as a result of being buried in a shell crater.

All His News Censored.

"All the time I was trying to get something out, but I found that everything I wrote was slashed. At last I found a man going to England on leave, and he agreed to take some of my stuff. I don't know whether they trapped him or whether he turned back on me, but I was arrested and held for court martial. The rules are severe in such things, and death is usually the punishment.

"I was put in prison at Westoutre, Belgium, in an old building that had been hit by shell fire. It looked easy to escape, and as I saw nothing ahead but the firing squad I made the attempt. When the sentry was lounging in a corner out of sight I slipped away. I could only travel by night, for I was hemmed in on all sides. At Ploegstreet, near the Belgian-French border, I got caught in the middle of a body of troops accidentally, and I had to hide in a haystack for four days without food or water before they moved on. I weighed 170 pounds when I started, and I'm down to 120 now. The whole trip was practically a continuous fast.

Saved by American Aviator.

"At last I got to an aviation hangar at Bailleul, about eight miles across the French border. I hid near by, living on raw turnips from the fields and creeping in when no one was around to gather up the leavings from the soldiers' mess.

"At last one day I heard an American talking. I was hiding behind a hedge fence, and I managed to get him alone. I told him the whole yarn, and I begged him to get my memorandum book home to my folks. But the American—I don't dare to give his name—did more. He was starting with some dispatches across the channel, and he put me on his machine, goggled and disguised as his helper. We were thirty-five miles from the channel, the distance across was twenty miles, and he dropped me near Hendon, where he was going, sixty miles inland, a distance of 115 miles in all. Then he gave me a pound note and left me. I made for my old quarters at London and got some clothes and enough money to take me to Liverpool.

"I sneaked aboard and hid in the sand lockers. I expected to be caught even them, for, although I had my American passport, I wouldn't have dared to show it, for it would have revealed me as Price, a deserter. But I found that I could walk among the steerage passengers without anybody suspecting that I was not one of them. When the ship docked I just walked ashore as one of the crew, and somehow or other I got by with it."

WHISKYTOWN CHANGES NAME.

Now Called Schilling After Man Who Refused to Serve as Postmaster.

Schilling is to be the postoffice name of the town of Whiskytown, Cal., between Shasta and French Gulch, on the Redding-Weaverville stage route. The name Schilling has been decided upon by the postoffice department.

Stella is the old postoffice name of Whiskytown. The office was abandoned six years ago when the late John F. Schilling, who had been postmaster for several years, positively refused to serve longer if the department insisted on putting money orders in the office. Schilling held out, and the office was abandoned. It has since been re-established.

Husband Too Nice and Kind.

Husband "too nice and kind, and I can't stand it," seventeen-year-old bride explained in Cincinnati court in telling why she left him. "If he would bully me I would like him better." So hubby was advised to bully her awhile.

ACROBATIC SQUIRREL KILLED.

Schoolgirls See "Tight Rope Walking" Pet Die.

Tarrytown, N. Y.—Jack, the "tight rope walking" gray squirrel, is dead. Jack was the pet of a girls' school because of his wonderful achievements in walking along a telephone cable. He would travel this way for blocks. The girls at the school fed him with nuts which they would place on a pole near their windows.

One day in fun a girl broke off an icicle under the window ledge and handed it to Jack to use as a balancing stick. He soon became a proficient in balancing and would sit and beg for nuts. He was doing this when suddenly one end of the icicle broke, causing Jack to lose his balance and fall fifty feet to the ground. When the girls picked him up Jack was breathing his last.

PEARL WHITE

WHEN PEARL WHITE, the heroine of "The Iron Claw," saw that Arthur Stringer, the author of this serial, proposed to have her jump from the Palisades into the early spring waters of the Hudson River, she indited the following lines of reproval and promptly sent them on to the author in question:

"Honest, Arthur, hear my plea,
Or you'll prove the death of me!
Say, remember this is March
And there's ice by High Bridge arch!
Put that high-dive stuff away,
Till at least the end of May!
Can that Hudson swimming, please,
Till the leaves are on the trees;
Shift the time, rewrite the part,
But have a heart, man, have a heart!"

To this invocation from the Pathe star the author of "The Iron Claw," sent back the following reply:

Fearless, peerless, reckless Pearl,
More a sea-bird than a girl,
More a wisp of flying spray
Than a child of mortal clay,
Dodging bullets, ditching trains,
Leaping slap through window-panes,
Smashing motor-cars kerflop,
Always coming out on top,
Trapped by villains black with gore,
Giving same the slip once more,
Gaily facing a la mode
Perils through each episode,
Can't you see I have to do
What the world expects of you,
And that spirits more sedate
In your trials luxuriate,
And the hum-drum, commonplace,
Hearts of hum-drum mortals race,
Madder, quicker, at the sight
Of our plot-immured Pearl White!
For the Claw that drags you back,
Leaves them gasping on the rack,
And each plunge you take, dear maid,
Though from roadster, Palisade,
Or from studio river-bank
Plump into the Pathe tank,
Warms them to their very toes,
Making cock-tails of your woes,—
Therefore, though the chill Atlantic
Ice-floes drive you nearly frantic,
Jump you must into that river,
That we all may share your shiver!

It's a good thing our buried hopes don't need tombstones or the supply would run mighty short.—New York Times.

Red, White and Blue Pigs.

Connellsville, Pa.—W. E. Mier of Pennsville has a patriotic hog. With the thermometer registering 4 degrees below zero her hogship gave birth to ten pigs. Four are white, three red and three blue.

Ordeal of Rice.

In the east ground rice is used to detect criminals, the idea being that fear makes the roof of the mouth dry and that a criminal overcome by fear consequently finds it almost impossible to swallow any hard substance with ease.

A Carlyle View.

Carlyle compared the advance of the world to the progress of some drunken man who, reeling from one side of the street to the other, slowly and at the expense of much wasted effort finally arrives at his destination.

HEIFERS FOR FIFTY BOYS.

Illinois Bank Is to Lend Stock to Farmers' Sons.

St. Louis.—Fifty boys in and near Brighton, Ill., will have an opportunity given by the First National bank of Brighton to earn some money easily and at the same time learn something of stock breeding.

Thomas Chamberlain, cashier, will go to Wisconsin and buy fifty Holstein heifers. They will be taken to Brighton and distributed among the boys, their parents going security for the animals. The heifers will be bred, and the next fall they will be sold at auction.

All the money in excess of $40 that the animals bring will be given to the boys who have cared for them. The bank figures that this will also have a good effect on the grade of milk cows in that neighborhood.

Commuted 500,000 Miles.

Tarrytown, N. Y.—Edgar Fairchilds, seventy-three years old, died at his home in Elizabeth street recently of apoplexy. Mr. Fairchilds was the oldest commuter from this station. It is estimated that he traveled 500,000 miles in thirty years. He leaves a wife and two brothers.

SHAVE BY AUTO LIGHT.

Son Put Machine Where Barber Could Work on His Father.

Clayton, Mo.—Heroic measures were resorted to in order that Frank Tegethoff, a real estate dealer, could be shaved in time to catch a train. Tegethoff had but a short time in which to make the train and rushed into one of Clayton's barber shops and demanded a hasty "once over."

While the barber was engaged in daubing Tegethoff's face with lather the electric lights failed, and the process had to be stopped. It was up to Tegethoff's son, Leo, to supply the light.

Fifty-seven Years Without Vacation.

Bridgeport, O.—After being on the job for fifty-seven years as toll collector at the Bridgeport end of the Wheeling-Bridgeport bridge, John Richardson will retire. He had worked fifty-seven years without a vacation or illness, but a few days ago he became ill and was forced to abandon his post. He says he enjoyed his "vacation" so much that he will make it permanent.

PREFERRED CAVE TO LIFE IN A SOD HOUSE

Unique Home of Pioneer and Family Brought to Light.

Garber, Okla.—The falling of five feet of cement porch of a farmhouse a half mile north of Garber brings to light the unique home of a pioneer of this section.

Under this porch was a cave. The cave was dug in 1894. At a point along a little ravine a sandstone ledge cropped out, and there S. H. Peters tunneled under and excavated two large rooms, with a sandstone ledge about three feet thick for a roof. The rooms extended sixty feet under the ground, and at the deepest place there was perhaps eight feet of dirt on top. To the back room a skylight 8 by 5 feet was opened.

The rooms were plastered and white-coated, and the rock roof was whitewashed, making it light enough for one to read newspapers in any part of the cave. It was very dry at that time, and coffee kept in the cave ground easily. S. H. Peters and his family lived there many months before he built a home above ground.

The stovepipe ran up the skylight, and to persons passing along the road the smoke coming out of the ground was a novel sight. Hundreds of persons visited this cave home, and all wondered why the roof didn't fall in, as it was not supported by timbers.

When the wet years came a little spring in the cave which furnished all the water for the family overflowed the rooms at times, and in recent years when the drain became clogged the cave filled with water. The pioneer later built a house almost over the cave.

S. H. Peters was but little longer digging the cave home than was required to build a sod house of the same size. Sod houses were the first homes of most of the pioneers. The plaster was the only expense to the cave home. Today this section has the finest country homes in the state and is in the wheat belt.

TIME TO ACT

Don't Wait for the Fatal Stages of Kidney Illness. Profit By Fulton People's Experiences

Occasional attacks of backache, irregular urination, headaches and dizzy spells are frequent symptoms of kidney disorders. It's an error to neglect these ills. The attacks may pass off for a time but generally return with greaater intensity. Don't delay a minute. Begin taking Doan's Kidney Pills, and keep up their use until the desired results are obtained. Good work in Fulton proves the effectiveness of this great kidney remedy.

Mrs. Peter Pullen, 311 Erie st., Fulton, says: "I had lumbago and could hardly get around to attend to my housework. I used ttwo boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted just as represented. I have had no trouble from my back or kidneys since."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Pullen had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props, Buffalo, N. Y. adv

ASSESSORS MAY MAKE EQUAL ASSESSMENTS

Oswego—Owners of land in the city limits who have been using their property as farm lands and who have been escaping taxation for the operating expense of the water department and contributing to the lighting fund may soon have to pay their share if a movement now on foot is brought to a successful conclusion.

Many farm lands are receiving the benefit of light and that the Water Department is furnishing water. It is believed that owners of this class of property should pay their share of the operation of the two departments and the charter will probably be amended making this compulsory.

The next year may see some starting changes in assessment. It is understood that the tax department will raise the assessment on several pieces of property that have been held to be worth much more than they are assessed for and that there will be an attempt made to equalize all assessments.

COURAGE.

Let the man who has to make his own fortune remember this maxim: Attacking is the only secret. Dare and the world always yields, or, if it beat you sometimes, dare it again and it will succumb.—Thackeray.

Nelson as a Courtier.

Nelson was the hero of England even in his own time, but not apparently of the court. Samuel Rogers recounts a conversation with him which appears in the life of the poet by R. Ellis Roberts. "I heard him once during dinner," says Rogers, "utter many bitter complaints (which Lady Hamilton vainly attempted to check) of the way he had been treated at court that forenoon—the queen had not condescended to take the slightest notice of him. In truth, Nelson was hated at court; they were jealous of him." But then it must be remembered that Rogers was renowned as a particularly ill natured gossip.

In a recent address on diseases of the ear Dr. S. MacCuen Smith of Philadelphia gave an earnest warning against using blisters or poultices to relieve acute earache as well as putting oil or anything else into the ear. Either may do irreparable damage.

FREEDOM OF LIBERTY.

That Is What He Was Looking For, but It Wasn't on Tap.

The following amusing letter addressed to the New York World recently appeared in its columns.

"I kindly beg to offer you my insignify suggestions for protests concerning the untruthful liberty of this country. It is so. About fifteen years past, when I was energetic and young, I hear about the great country of London, Liverpool and New York and United States. So I leave my three wives in Bagdad, on the Tigris, and come to London with Mr. Daly, great scientific man. I come to London, work hard five years; then Liverpool, one year; New York and Chicago stockyard, three years, until I do prosperous work with chickens and eggs in Petaluma, Cal.

"Then I went to bring my three wifes here. My lawyer say police put me in jail when my wifes come. So I want to go to Bagdad myself. They tell me that the police put me in jail in London because this country fight the Turk and I am Turk subject.

"Is this freedom of liberty? I ask for question. When I see statu of liberty I say it is very great, but not truthful. So you can see for yourself.

"Hoping this insignify suggestion will strike you, I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ALASKA'S MOOSE HERDS.

Unless Protected They May Go the Way of the Buffalo.

An interesting report of a hunting trip made last November in Alaska has just been received at the war department from First Lieutenant Clarence A. Dougherty of the signal corps, on duty in connection with the military telegraph system in that territory, with station at Seward. He hunted near the shores of Skilak lake, just south of its central point, not leaving its shores over a distance of six miles at any time. He was accompanied by a licensed guide. Among other things, he says in the report:

"Moose are in that country literally by the hundred. My time was limited, and I hunted for only three days before starting on my return journey. At no time was I absent from camp longer than six hours. I was only at the beginning of the moose country, yet the first day I saw thirty-seven moose, the second forty-two, and the third, before I killed mine, had counted over twenty. I was anxious to get a large head and was searching out for this with my field glasses until a proper sized one was found. I was within less than 100 feet of moose several times and could get within 500 yards of any bunch in sight. I counted twenty-seven bull moose in one herd at one time. The one I killed had a spread of sixty and one-half inches, but it was the largest herd I saw. I killed only one, but could just as easily have killed a dozen."

Lieutenant Dougherty recommends the creation of a national game preserve in that section. He says: "The hunters are more or less relentlessly following this game, and it is only a question of a few years before, like the buffalo, it will be a thing of the past. A small restricted area as a haven of refuge for them would always insure an overflow into the surrounding country and the conservation of animals very valuable for their meat."—Washington Post.

One Auto Every Mile.

In the days when the horse was king of the road the people of the United States bought 1,000,000 buggies a year. The sale of automobiles is just reaching the mark set by the buggy. Last year 448 manufacturers produced 892,618 vehicles and orders for 300,000 remained unfilled. This year plants are being increased to provide the 1916 market with at least 1,000,000 cars. Sales such as this show that the automobile has long ago got out of the class of luxuries. There were registered in 1915 in all the states 2,400,000 motorcars, which is more than one for every mile of public highway in the Union.—Christian Herald.

Warsaw and Music.

Warsaw's conservatory of music, which can boast Chopin and Paderewski among its past pupils, has lately been able to celebrate what was its one hundredth birthday if a quarter of a century of suspended animation early in its career be ignored. It was in 1815 that it was founded as a school of music and dramatic art by the Warsaw composer, John Elsner. A few years later the name was changed to conservatory, but in 1830 the institution was closed because of the revolution, and it was not until 1856 that it was reopened.

The Deepest Well.

A diamond drill hole fifteen miles west of Pittsburgh is expected by the geological survey to become the world's deepest well. The record is now held by a well of upper Silesia, 7,350 feet deep, but the latest figures give the Pennsylvania well a depth of 7,174 feet, and it is being sunk deeper, with the hope of oil and gas when the Medina sandstone is reached.

A Rare Flea.

One of the queerest requests on record has been received at San Antonio, Tex., from Dr. Guy A. K. Marshall of the royal bureau of entomology, London. It is for a certain flea which lives in the eye of a bat, and San Antonio, the only town in the world with a municipal bat roost, is about the proper place to go for it.—Indianapolis News.

Little Montenegro.

Montenegro is quite a small country, lacking more than a thousand square miles of being as big as the state of Connecticut. Its area in square miles is 3,630, and its population is about 250,000.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Nature's Warnings.

There are times when every one realizes that he is on the verge of illness. At such time, if at all possible, a day in bed is the best possible medicine and often will stave off sickness. Rest is one of nature's simplest and most effective aids to healing and if taken in time may be warranted to "make a new man of you." An extremely light diet or a fast for twenty-four hours serves the same purpose in giving the digestive organs a needed rest. There are some people who boast of their ability to keep going regardless of the warnings which nature serves in time of danger. For awhile they may successfully avoid the penalty, but usually they have to "pay the piper," and in full. Better a short voluntary rest now and then than one enforced by serious sickness as the result of disregarding nature's warnings.

HOW TO START A POULTRY PLANT WITH FIVE DOLLARS. Five dollars will start anybody in the poultry business and produce profitable results if judiciously invested. The man or woman who is starting from the very beginning had better invest in twenty to twenty-five day old chicks at a cost of $3.75, leaving $1.25 for material to make a homemade fireless brooder. If twenty out of twenty-five chicks survive babyhood there will probably be twelve cockerels and eight pullets. Sell the cockerels in the summer as broilers. They will bring $1.50 a pair. Use the money received for them to purchase a good rooster of whatever breed the chickens belong to. Mate him to the eight pullets the following spring, and you should be able to raise at least 200 chickens, besides having had eggs from your pullets during the winter. They should have begun to lay in October or November, and their eggs can be sold or used on the family table until March or early April, after which time, when they are mated to the rooster, the eggs must be used for incubation only.

The following November you should have from 100 to 150 pullets and be getting fifteen or twenty dozen eggs a week, which at an average of 40 cents a dozen will bring in from $6 to $8 a week, and your little poultry plant will be firmly established on a paying basis with the promise of yielding $50 to $60 a month by the third season.

CARE OF RUGS.

How to Keep Your Floor Coverings So They Will Last.

It is inadvisable to attempt to clean valuable rugs yourself for obvious reasons, but during spring months the best way to clean rugs at home is to turn them right side down and tap them gently with a light flexible stick or piece of rubber on the wrong side and then sweep them with a dampened broom.

Do not under any circumstances use the ubiquitous vacuum cleaner on a rare rug, since it loosens the nap when drawing out the dust. Rugs should never be packed away for summer where they cannot have monthly inspection at least. The washing of rare rugs is a simple matter for the expert, but nearly impossible for the housekeeper. Never fold a handsome rug when putting it away. Roll it in sheets of newspaper and camphor between, and then wrap it in newspapers and sew it up tightly in an enveloping sheet of nonwool covering.

A WORD TO THE W[illegible]

How to Pass For Being Intelligent Even if You Aren't.

The most intelligent people and the most beautiful are those who see things and get all possible pleasure out of them. An exhibition of indifference to things about you is not an evidence of intelligence. Intelligent people are those whose eyes are open, and that is the way to become intelligent. Such people, also, are the most interesting, sometimes so much so that, even though they lack physical beauty, that is forgotten in admiration for their intellect.

The victim of indifference victimizes all about her. Her friends may look upon her and admire her beauty, but if she is decidedly uninteresting even a little of her society is generally an overdose.

JUST DIP 'EM.

How to Keep Your Garden Labels From Rotting and Fading.

Gardeners frequently have trouble with plant labels rotting. The labels when used in the garden are subject to wet and heat during the season, causing the portion that is in the ground to rot; the label falls over and is lost, and the gardener loses the name of the plants. A good way to preserve wooden garden labels is to soak them in a solution of sulphate of iron. Dry the labels and then soak them in a strong solution of limewater. This results in the formation of insoluble sulphate of lime in the wood and preserves the labels from rotting.

HOW TO RID THE CANARY OF VERMIN.—Sometimes a canary will droop and stop his song, his vitality preyed upon by lice almost microscopic. One of the simplest as well as the surest ways to relieve him is to hang a piece of soft muslin over his cage nights, in the morning removing the several little black dots that rest upon it. This process repeated for a week or ten days will quite rid the bird of vermin, and he will take up his song again.

How to Plant Seed to Get the Best Results.

A good rule to follow in planting seed is to put it in the ground at a depth about four times the diameter of the individual seed. If the soil is dry it should be pressed down firmly after sowing. In transplanting, also, the soil should be pressed tightly over the roots.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Smart Suit in Blue Serge.

Tailored costume in men's wear serge, one of the fashionable shades of blue being used. Inlaid collar and cuffs of faille are suggested for the trimming.

Blue is essentially a spring color and it is more fashionable than ever this year. This tailored costume is carried out in fine men's wear serge. Today's dressmaking lesson features the jacket, which is made with a yoke and trimmed with straps, which may be omitted, if desired. As the collar is convertible, the front of the coat may be buttoned high or rolled back to form revers. In medium size the dress requires 5¼ yards 54-inch material. If made separately, the coat calls for 2⅝ yards of serge.

As this is a model that will be used for pongee, taffeta, faille and other fashionable fabrics this season, it is well to study well the method of cutting it. Notice how the back of the coat and back of the yoke are laid on the lengthwise fold. Opposite these sections, in the direction of the selvage edge, are placed the front, front of the yoke and lower sleeve sections. Continuing along the upper row are the pocket and cuffs laid on a lengthwise thread. In the center are pocket and skirt section, while on the bottom row are the under-facing and belt.

If the coat is desired without straps cut off the straps as indicated by small "o" perforations. If desired with strap in belt only cut off the lower rounded end of strap on small "o" perforations.

Trimmed with inlaid collar and cuffs of faille or white cloth this jacket is as smart a model as has been shown this season.

Pictorial Review Jacket No. 6657. Sizes, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust. Price, 15 cents. Skirt No. 6499. Sizes, 16 to 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

For Young Folks

Taking Pictures on the Sand at Palm Beach.

Palm Beach, Fla., is the winter playground of many society folks from New York and other northern cities. By going south they miss the joys of winter, such as skating, coasting, snowballing and other healthful sports. Most of our young northerners, if they had their choice, would prefer to stay where the snow blows rather than spend it where the sun shines warmly all the time. That makes two summers in one year, which is almost too much of a good thing. The pure, bracing breezes of our northern clime put roses in the cheeks of the little people who brave its nipping frost. But we can't all think alike, so many enjoy the balmy breezes of the southland. The boy with the camera taking pictures in the sand is Master Jack Rutherford of New York. He seems to be having a good time and perhaps did not observe the camera man who turned the tables on him by snapping his photograph.

Feeding the Birds.

Whenever boy scouts take a winter hike a chance offers for that good turn to be done. By taking along a few pounds of cornmeal or a bagful of breadcrumbs and scattering some here and there in sheltered spots in the woods for the birds a great deal of substantial comfort and happiness may be given. After heavy snows, when fallen weed seeds and insects are covered up, or especially after sleet storms, when everything edible is coated over beyond possible finding for several days, many a little feathered "tummy" gets empty, and birds with their excessive vitality and the necessity of keeping up a high normal temperature, are quickly weakened by lack of food and fall victims to resulting cold. It is not a rare thing to find many small sojourners in the winter woods frozen to death after a cold snap.

Boy Scouts Honor Anniversary.

Nearly 150,000 boys, members of the 7,375 troops of the Boy Scouts of America, assembled in special troop meeting on the evening of Feb. 8, in honor of the sixth anniversary of the incorporation of the boy scout movement in the United States. Promptly at 8:15 o'clock every scout stood at attention and repeated the scout oath:

On my honor I will do my best—

1. To do my duty to God and my country and to obey the scout law.
2. To help other people at all times.
3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight.

Questions and Answers.

The following is an amusing game: Each player writes a question. On another slip of paper he writes an answer to the question. The questions are collected and put in a hat. Then the answers are collected and put in a different hat. Both are well shaken. Then each player draws a question and an answer. The result is very funny. For instance:

"Do you like roses?"
"Yes, with mustard."
"Do you like roast beef?"
"Those that smell nice."

Not Fair.

"Say, Bob," asked George, "is it true that schoolteachers get paid?"

"Certainly it is," said Bob.

"Well, then," George said indignantly, "that ain't right. Why should the teachers get paid when we kids do all the work?"

The New Dress.

I've a new dress, don't you see,
Robin redbreast in the tree?
Tell me what you think of it!
Do you like it? Does it fit?

Don't you wish you were a dress
Instead of feathers? Now, confess!
Feathers are such funny things.
I could never use your wings.

Still I guess they suit you best,
Just as all girls should be dressed
As I am, so do not mind
If you think I've been unkind.

—Philadelphia Record.

HOW TO WARD OFF DISEASES BY HAVING CLEAN HANDS.

Most epidemics of typhoid fever nowadays are ultimately traced to a single person who, either sick with the disease, sickening with it, convalescent from it or acting as a chronic "carrier" of the germs, literally hands the infection to those who happen to be in contact with him.

But if typhoid and dysentery and cholera were the only diseases spread by unwashed hands we wouldn't say a word—we'd leave it to the health authorities. Unfortunately a lot of other diseases are peddled about in the same manner, such as diphtheria, pneumonia, sore throat and "cold" in the head, and with the exception of diphtheria and pneumonia these diseases do not interest the health authorities.

There are families where children sit at table and say grace with unwashed hands. There are other families where parents take a squint at the children's hands and, if they discover no microbes thereon, let the youngsters sit right down and shovel in whatever contamination may have been collected through the day. Is it any wonder grandma still has occasional seeming vindication of her idea that "sugar makes worms?" Worms make worms, and children help the work along by transplanting the eggs from contaminated soil to food and from the food to their own innocent mouths.

THE MIDNIGHT SUPPERS.

How to Make Dream Cakes on Your Chafing Dish.

The easiest things in the world to make in a chafing dish are dream cakes, and everybody who likes a rarebit will rave over these toothsome dainties, which are built of cheese, cream and slices of bread. They are less trouble than the ordinary Welsh rabbit, which requires a good many ingredients and prolonged cooking, and they are "hearty" enough to make a sustaining supper after an evening of bridge. Two or at most three dream cakes will be all the average person can eat, unless he is willing to risk the possible weird dreams which are said to have given these rich delicacies their name.

Press half a pound of soft rarebit cheese through a potato curler or a colander until you have a pile of light, flaky cheese particles. Mix with the cheese half a cupful of sweet cream. Season with a pinch of salt, paprika, a dash of mustard and a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce. Have ready slices of bread, cut rather thick and with the crusts trimmed off. Spread one slice thickly with the cheese, another slice down upon it and then brown the sandwich thus made in a chafing dish brazier in which butter is bubbling. When golden brown and crisp serve piping hot on a small plate. Do not have the sandwiches too large; small ones will brown more quickly. Ordinary slices of bread, trimmed at the edges, may be cut in two diagonally to make three cornered dream cakes.

How to Teach Children the Great Law of Cause and Effect.

Children should be taught from the beginning the great moral law of cause and effect, not to look for wealth without work, for honor without honesty. Teach them that character stands above surroundings and that esteem should be bestowed where it is due, whether for mental endowment or material wealth.

It is not all of morals to moralize, and less precept and more example is to be commended. The living realization, the quiet suggestion, the favorable opportunity, are the efficient teachers. Ignorance is responsible for a great deal of wickedness, but evil example and parental neglect are responsible for vastly more.

A sense of right and wrong should be cultivated early in a child's life, and much may be accomplished in this direction before the child leaves the mother's nursery training.

How to Case Harden Iron Utensils When They Are Quite New.

Make up a paste of powdered prussiate of potash and water. Coat the iron with this paste and set it aside to dry. Let the forge fire be clear and bright. When the paste is dry upon the iron thrust the iron into the fire until it is cherry red. Keep it at this heat for a few minutes and then take it out. Plunge it into cold water, and it will be found converted into steel at the surface.—Popular Science Monthly.

How to Sew Buttons on Children's Clothes For Permanency.

When you sew buttons on the children's dresses run a tape down the wrong side first. If each button is sewed through to the tape no amount of hard wear or abuse in the laundry will tear it from the goods. Another wise precaution is to use linen thread for the buttons on your boy's suit.

How to Add Life to Candles During the Long Evenings.

With the shorter days here candles are being used more and more for dinner. If the candles are given a coat of colorless varnish and allowed to dry thoroughly before lighting they will not only last longer, but the varnish will prevent the wax melting and running down.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Showing just how effectively the French masters manipulate their big open plaids with plain materials. The skirt falls in folds at the side formed by the perfect way in which it is hung at the waistline. The slip-on semi-fitted blouse has a deep shoulder yoke and notched collar, the latter of plain material stitched with plaid. The cuffs match the skirt. Much of the splendid line of the middy is due to the panel front. In medium size the skirt requires 2 1-2 yards 36-inch material and the middy the same amount of 40-inch material.

Experts who have closely followed the details of warfare in Europe assert that the lesson is obvious that infantry and cavalry are doing less execution than artillery. Cannon are represented as literally blasting roads through every manner of obstacle for the line to get forward. This being the case, our problem of preparedness is simplified. No matter what plan may be devised, the building up of an efficient force of 500,000 to 1,000,000 arms bearing soldiers will prove to be a colossal task. But with our facilities for construction the vitals of an immense cannon power are chiefly matters of money, metal and mechanical skill. Cannon will keep, and unloaded shells will keep. With the up to date appliances for getting range the production of an efficient artilleryman is as easy as that of training an efficient cavalry or infantry soldier. The artillery arm of service never goes begging for recruits and gets the best. Army experts say that our artillery has not only been slighted in the past, is weaker today than it should be, but that plans for army increase do not call for adequate strength in artillery.

A HOUSE GOWN.

A Model For Young Women That Spells Spring.

Pink is one of the spring colors, along with tan, and this afternoon gown is made of rose pussy willow silk with narrow bands of maroon velvet on the bodice and cuffs. The sleeves are full, and a deep fold of velvet bands the skirt and disappears under the wing drapery that drops from the hips.

DON'T DRUDGE.

Housewife Warned Not to Overwork This Grippy Time of the Year.

One of the worst pieces of extravagance on the part of the housewife is committed when she allows herself to be "all tired out." There always is the temptation to put in a day of very fatiguing work so that the next day can be one of leisure. There is an adage, "Never leave for tomorrow what you can do today," which is an extremely bad one for the housewife to follow. "Never do today what is part of tomorrow's work" would be a better proverb. It really is a form of laziness to overdo so that the following day can be one of ease, and it certainly is a form of inconsiderateness, for an overworked, overtired housewife is a damper on the good nature of the entire household.

But if you do overdo and draw near to the end of the day in a state of exhaustion do what you can to refresh yourself before the evening meal. And this refreshing process does not consist in simply throwing yourself tired and exhausted on the nearest bed and sleeping. There are other more direct ways of restoring tired nerves and muscles than that.

A warm bath taken leisurely is more refreshing in the daytime than a nap and puts one in better condition for eating than anything else. If after the bath and dressing you still feel worn out take a cup of hot bouillon and a wafer. A half an hour later you will be refreshed enough to eat dinner. But it is a rule that all housewives should remember that it is always a bad plan to take a heavy meal when exhausted.

Baby Bath Set, Homemade.

For the littlest baby there is a pretty model in morning bath sets which may be readily copied by any amateur sewer. Buy two yards of double width, very fine white Turkish toweling and, having cut off enough of it for a good sized wiping towel and a face cloth, reserve the remainder for a laprobe.

Having bound the larger piece with a pink or blue wash ribbon, embroider the center of either end with a garland of rosebuds and forgetmenots in their natural colors. Only one side of the towel and face cloth need be embroidered, but to the upper corner of each of the three pieces should be attached ribbon hangers.

These hangers are very short on the lap robe, considerably longer on the wiping towel and of extreme length on the face cloth, so that when hung up to dry the three strips of ribbon coming at all of the top corners will keep the several sections of the set together.

Inexpensive Fruit Cake.

Take three eggs and two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of butter, milk and molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg, one pound of raisins, currants and citron and five cupfuls of flour. Cream the butter and sugar. Add the well beaten eggs and the molasses and a small portion of the flour, then add the milk and spices. Stir well. Add the flour, into which the soda has been sifted, and lastly the fruit well dredged with flour.

Ultra Modish Dinner Gown.

China blue crepe Georgette is combined with chiffon and lace in the development of this gown, which is among the newest models for dinner wear.

For the nice occasions that demand something dressy without being too formal, this costume supplies every demand. It is fashioned from China blue crepe georgette, the underblouse of the bodice being in chiffon over lace-trimmed taffeta. In medium size the costume requires 6 yards 40-inch crepe Georgette, 1⅝ yard 36-inch taffeta for the lining, 1½ yards chiffon for underblouse and 1½ yards lace. If contrasting material is used for the collar, cuffs and girdle, 1⅛ yards will be required.

Pictorial Review Waist No. 6626. Sizes, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Price, 15 cents. Skirt No. 6655. Sizes, 22 to 32 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

The lining is made after the fashion of all linings, by closing the shoulder and underarm seams and hemming the front. The lace may be omitted, if desired, but it is very effective under the chiffon. It is adjusted to the lining from crossline of small "o" perforations to lower edge as illustrated. Next, gather shoulder edge of front, then the lower edges back and front. Arrange trimming piece on right blouse front, notches even; close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Gather lower edge of blouse between double "TT" perforations, then gather the back along small "o" perforations. Bring small "o" perforation at lower edge of trimming piece to corresponding perforation in peplum and tack.

Arrange blouse on underbody center-fronts, center-backs and under-arm seams even. Stitch lower edges together. Sew the square collar to front edge of trimming piece, notches and small "o" perforations even, and to neck edge of waist, center-backs even.

For the belt, turn the front section over on outside on small "o" perforations, gather ⅝ inch from fold and sew to back belt section drawing gathers to fit; large "O" perforation indicates upper edge. Leave the belt free to the left of center-back and finish for a closing. Adjust belt to position stitching upper edge of back belt section along upper row of gathers in back; leave the lower edge of belt free.

Finally, close the sleeve seam as notched; gather lower edges and close cuff seam as notched to extension. Lap extension matching small "o" perforations when closing. Sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve, and bring the seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even, easing in any fulness.

Silver lace makes an effective trimming for the blue crepe.

Why pay Tire Bills for Others— —i. e., for RECKLESS Drivers

AMERICANS who want their money's worth,—who dislike to pay for the Reckless-driving extravagance of Others,—in the price of their own Tires, should sit up and take notice of following FACTS:—

The current Goodrich "Fair-List" price on Tires, is based upon what it costs the largest, and best equipped, Rubber Factory in America to produce them.

No "Insurance" Premium added to the NORMAL retail price of Goodrich Tires, in order to protect the Reckless Driver at the expense of the Careful Driver, through a fancy List Price which is high enough to absorb that Premium.

The excess Mileage each Goodrich Tire is reasonably certain to deliver, when given reasonable care in driving, thus becomes clear "Velvet" to the Owner of GOODRICH Tires.

Money can't make, and can't buy, better Tires of Fabric construction, than Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires, as Test will prove.

And, money can't buy the B. F. Goodrich Co. to produce Tires which would discredit the 269 other lines of Rubber Goods made by the B. F. Goodrich Co., for which its name stands Sponsor.

COMPARE prices on Goodrich "Fair-List" Tires with present prices on any other responsible Tires in the field, bearing in mind that NO "LARGER-SIZED" Tires (type for type and size for size) than Goodrich Black-Treads, are made in America.

Then, Test out at least ONE pair of Goodrich black-tread Tires, on their per-DELIVERED-Mile cost to you, against any other Tires in the field, at any price, and,—abide by the Result.

Why (if YOU are not a Reckless Driver) should YOU pay MORE than the "BUSINESS" price of the Goodrich Tire, for ANY Fabric Tire in the field?

STEPS ARE TAKEN TO AID RED CROSS

Name E. A. Moree, Director of Atlantic Division.

MORE MEMBERS ARE SOUGHT

One of New Appointee's First Duties Is to Assist In Organizing New Chapters—Moree Lately Has Been Actively Engaged In Field of Public Health. His Division Covers Large Area.

Washington.—Ernest P. Bicknell, director general of civilian relief of the American Red Cross, announced the appointment of Edward A. Moree of Yonkers, N. Y., as director of the Atlantic division of the Red Cross, with headquarters in New York city.

In announcing the appointment Mr. Bicknell said that filling the post is one of the steps in the campaign of the Red Cross for a million members and that one of Mr. Moree's first duties would be to assist in organizing new chapters and in campaigning for new members of present chapters.

The Atlantic division of the Red Cross is east and south of the Ohio river and east of the Mississippi river (this includes twenty-one states) and has a population of nearly 50,000,000 persons.

To accept the position Mr. Moree resigned as assistant secretary of the New York State Charities Aid association.

EDWARD A. MOREE.

He was a member of the association's staff for six years. As director of the extension work and later as assistant secretary he assumed an important part in organizing the tuberculosis movement in that state. His chief interest and activity in recent years have been in the field of public health.

He served as assistant to the secretary of the commission which three years ago investigated the public health situation in that state and had much to do with framing and in securing the passage of the health law under which the New York state department of health was reorganized by Dr. Hermann M. Biggs. Mr. Moree is now advisory expert in public health education in that department. He has been a frequent speaker before state and national health organizations on the subject of public health organization and legislation.

Mr. Moree was New York state manager of the Red Cross Christmas seal sale the first two years that the State Charities Aid association conducted the sale on a state wide basis. He mapped out the plan of campaign and organization which has since been followed with few changes in the state and which has been adopted, in many of its chief aspects, in many other states in the union.

Previous to entering social work Mr. Moree was in the newspaper profession, serving in many capacities on various New York papers. Going to New York from Elmira, Mr. Moree took the position of editor of the educational department of the Brooklyn Eagle, from which position he went to the New York Tribune as New Jersey editor. After four years' service with the Tribune he resigned as night city editor and started a newspaper in Geneva, N. Y., but later entered social work with the Russell Sage foundation.

WANTED, A POSTMASTER.

Office Discontinued Because No One For the Job Could Be Found.

Marinette, Wis. — The postoffice at Washington Harbor, Door county, has been discontinued for the reason that ill health prevented the postmaster, L. P. Ottosen, from performing his duties, and he resigned.

Uncle Sam made every effort to get a man to replace the postmaster, without success. The job was not only offered to several, but advertisements were inserted in Door county papers, offering the place to any one who desired it, but without success.

The postoffice, which literally went begging, had to be discontinued because no one would take it. The mail patrons will be supplied by rural delivery from Detroit Harbor, but the people are parting with their postoffice ruefully, because it gave them a gathering place and, as one man put it, "lent dignity to the village."

TEUTONS CENTER FIGHT AT HILL

Struggle Heaviest West of Meuse—Malancourt Evacuated After Hard Battle.

Paris—The Germans in a fierce attack on French positions northeast of Hill No. 295, in the Le Mort Homme region, some three miles east of Malancourt, gained a footing in some of the French first line trenches, but were immediately driven out in a vigorous counter attack, according to the French official communication issued this evening. The Germans have made no attempt to debouch from Malancourt, which they hold.

The afternoon French report tells of a night of furious fighting in which Malancourt was evacuted. It follows:—

"In the Argonne district we have repulsed two attacks with hand grenades directed against our positions to the north of Avocourt.

"To the west of the River Meuse the bombardment of Malancourt has gone on with redoubled violence. Last night the Germans delivered a series of attacks in massed formation. They advanced from three sides at a time upon the village, which formed the advance salient of our line and which sheltered one of our battalions. After furious fighting all night long, which entailed considerable sacrifices on the part of the enemy, our troops evacuted the village, butw e hold its outskirts.

DODD'S BAND KILLS THIRTY

Villa Escapes Capture At Hands of 400 Picked Cavalery Who Defeat 500 Mexicans.

El Paso—Under command of Colonel George A. Dodd, four hundred picked American cavalrymen fell upon Villa's forces at 6 o'clock last Wednesday morning eighteen miles from Guerrero. The Americans in a five-hour battle killed 30 and routed the rest of the 500 bandits and drove them into ther ecesses of the mountains.

Only four Americans were wounded, none seriously.

Villa was hurried early from the field of battle in a light wagon. One of his legs is said to be broken, and his hip shattered by af all from his horse. This latter injury may permanently disable him.

Army officers are sure that since the fight heavier American forces have come up to support the flying columns, and another action may have followed of which nothing was known here tonight.

gave the first clue to Dodd of Villa's mountain lair. Keen as a hound on the trial, the veteran colonel led his men a gruelling ride for seventeen hours down the valley of the Santa Maria River. For fifty-five miles they dashed along, each man pressing his horses to the utmost.

When Dodd's men came upon the Villa camp, he quickly split his 400 men into three divisions, and sent them dashing in from three sides. The Mexicans were bewildered and panicstricken. They resisted and were pursued for five hours in a running fight.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

Everyone must be in their seats NOT LATER THAN 6:45 tonight for the banquet, otherwise they will have to wait until after 7 o'clock.

Whether a thing is right or wrong depends almost entirely upon the view point of the individual. Reformers would have us believe that there is a hard and fast rule for right and wrong. They draw a line and tell us that everything on their side is right, while on the other side all is wrong. Speaking of man's relation to right and wrong, the [illegible] us that 'As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." [illegible] the belief as to good and evil is purely conventional. That is, we accept a thing as being right or wrong simply because someone else has said it was so, or because we have been accustomed to think it was so. Conventional ideas of good and evil change constantly; absolute ideas, based on sound morals, remain fixed. The views on murder and theft are practically the same now as they were two thousand years ago. Hence, we may conclude that these offenses are wrong per se. Twenty years ago, even fifteen, cigarette smoking was almost universally condemned in this country as being both a sign and a result of degeneracy. Yet, today, in spirte of anti-cigarette leagues and efforts to regulate their use by legislation it is more general than ever and attracts no more attention than the use of tobacco in any other form. A few hundred years ago offenses that are now punished as misdemeanors by the imposition of a light fine were capital crimes. Highway robbery in England was [illegible]eath, yet it never flourished so abundantly [illegible]d. The mildest criticism of the king might [illegible] a man his life, yet only a few years ago the King of England was ridiculed when he successfully prosecuted one of his subjects in court because the latter had said the king had at one time contracted a morganatic marriage.

Doubtless there will always be conventional ideas of right and wrong, at least until every one learns to do his own thinking. There will always be those who want to set up their own moral standard and require others to measure up to it. There will also always be pioneers blazing the way to better living and better thinking. But they will not lift mankind toward higher ideals by so-called reforms. It will not be accomplished by regulation from without, but by the desire for such things from within the individual.

HUGHES LOOKS LIKE WINNER

The New York Herald today says of the political situation in part as follows:

With the first direct Presidential primaries in the State to be held to strong sentiment for Justice Hughes ial candidates is not an issue in any of the few contests which has developed. Reports indicate a surprisingly undoubtedly is the first choice of the among republicans and little strength for Theodore Roosevelt. The democratic delegation, of course, will be solid for President Wilson.

Justice Hughes seems to be the first choice of not only rank and file of the republican, but also of the majority of those who will sit as delegates at the national Convention at Chicago. On the Canadian border, in the Southern tier, in Central and Western New York and along the Hudson River he appears likely to obtain the support of the majority of the delegates if he will consent to run.

Barring possible developments arising from the meeting of Elihu Root and Mr. Roosevelt, Justice Hughes undoubtedly is thefi rst choice of the majority of the delegates from New York city. This is decidedly so in Manhattan, Brooklyn is likely to send a mixed delegation, part of which will be for Justice Hughes and the rest for whatever candidate the "Old Guard" of the party decides to support. The four Bronx delegates probably will remain uncommitted until the meeting of the Convention.

Reports from up-State indicate thot a majfiority of the leaders there are likely to stand with Governor Whitman in a fight for his renomination, and that William Barnes cannot count upon their support for re-election as a member of the National ommittee.

New York county is practically certain to be against Mr. Barnes and for the Governor. Brooklyn is likely to be divided, and the Bronx may be considered doubtful. In view of the Governor's position upon the Mohansic pure water proposition the comment of a Westchester county correspondent that William L. Ward will control there absolutely and that his friends do not consider that the Governor's difficulties have any bearing on the present situation is of more than ordinary interest.

Auto Club May Join State Association

From present indications the Fulton Auto Club will become affiliated with the State Automobile Association. This is in accordance with the desire of Mr. R. L. McCully president of the local club and a numbere of members who have been sounded on the subject.

That the matter may be threshed out in detail, the local club has invited Herbert W. Bakeer, of Albany, who is secretary of the State Automobile Association, to come here on Friday evening of this week to meet with the knights of the road at the Public Library assembly hall and make plain the benefits that should accrue to them in case they vote to join the big association.

At the same meeting officers for 1916 will be elected, and in addition a number of other matters will be brought up for settlement. Mr. McCully is desirous that every auto owner in this community shall attend the meeting, announcing also that there will be a seat for everybody in the hall. Non-members, but who are auto drivers, will receive a cordial welcome; in fact, they are urged to attend the meeting—but will not be urged to join the club. That matter will be left entirely up to each person present. Refreshments will be served and a social hour enjoyed at the conclusion of the business meeting.

Last Zeppelin Raid Most Destructive Yet

London—Following closely on Friday night's raid on London, Zeppelins attacked British coast towns on Saturday and again last night. More damage to life and property was caused on these occasions than on any previous occasion this year except in the raid of January 31.

According to an official report fifty nine- persons were killed and 166 wounded. Saturday night's raid was confined to the eastern counties of England. That of last night extended to the coast of Scotland.

As some compensation for the sacrifice of life the British public finds satisfaction in practical proof afforded of a great improvement in the defensive methods of dealing with aerial incursions. For the first time since the inception of this method of warfare on the British coast not only has one Zeppelin been brought down and its crew taken prisoner, but the official report recounts an exciting aerial fight on Friday nnight between a Zeppelin and a British airman, Lieutenant Brandon, who mounting to a height of 9,000 feet, got over the raider and dropped several bombs on it with effect.

The machine of Lieutenant Brandon was hit several times by machine gun bullets from the Zeppelin. It is unknown whether the Zeppelin in this fight was the L-15, which wasb rought down off the Thames estuary, or another craft which is believed to have dropped its machine gun, petrol tank and other parts.

Lieutenant Alfred Brandon, the British airman, is a native of Wellington, New Zealand. He is thirty-two years old and joined the flying corps only last July.

There has been constant agitation in the newspapers for British airmen to ascend and attack Zeppelins, and the fact that this has now been successfully done gives promise of still greater achievements in the same direction. At the same time it will tend to increase public confidence that the authorities are making progress in their efforts to deal with the Zeppelin danger.

In connection with Lieutenant Brandon's exploit is an unconfirmed but interesting report from Copenhagen that a Danish fishing vessel observed at a great distance in the North Sea what appeared to be a half-submerged Zeppelin. The authorities express the hope that this may prove to be the machine that Lieutenant Brandon hit.

In connection with Lieutenant Brandon's exploit is an unconfirmed but interesting report from Copenhagen that a Danish fishing vessel observed at a great distance in the North Sea what appeared to be a half-submerged Zeppelin. The authorities express the hope that this may prove to be the machine that Lieutenant Brandon hit.

Saturday night's raid was much less serious than that of Friday night. Only the most scanty details of the latter attack, however, are yet available. According to these only one of two raiders succeeded in passing the coast, the other being turned back. Sixteen persons were killed in this raid, of whom six were women and children, and about one hundred were injured.

High Water at Upper Dam; Mills Flooded

The water level in the river has not been lowered from the mark reached yesterday at a point near the upper dam where 356 feet above sea level was registered. Although the water is no higher today than in the spring of last year, it has caused considerable damage and inconvenience to the mills and power plants on the river bank. The retaining wall adjoining the old power plant of the electric light company at the lower bridge was broken by the tremendous pressure permitting the plant to be flooded. Workmen were busy today strengthening the cofferdam at the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Company.

On Saturday when the river commenced to rise, the gain was easily noticeable, and within a few hours the level had risen four feet. At the Granby Paper mill water from the river has washed over the retaining wall of earth and rock, increasing the volmne in the race way so the water flows in a part of the basement of the mill. A large portion of the river bank next to the mill has caved in and workmen labored all day with bags of dirt attempting to stop the leaks.

Boathouses were toppled over yesterday just north of the lower bridge and one houseboat was nearly submerged. Hundreds of people stopped yesterday on both bridges to observe the antics of the troubled stream. It is reported that the Black creek bridge along the towpath of the old canal was washed out last night. The water has not risen so rapidly in the vicinity of Phoenix.

Villa is Not Wounded, the Belief in Texas

El Paso—The optimism of Major Funston, Brigadier General Pershing and the administration at Washington concerning the early capture of the bandit is not shared here, although it is admitted that Villa has had some bumps which may have bewildered him and may make his capture easier than if he had been allowed to practice his old Indian methods of warfare.

Men who know Villa and his colossal vanity well are of the opinion that the fight at Guerrero and the way in which the American cavalry has kept at his heels have given him the surprise of his life.

There is no faith in the report that Villa is badly wounded. Villa has not yet been engaged personally with American troops, and no American officer or soldier has laid eyes on the bandit since he retreated from Columbus, so far as is known. There Brigadier General Pershing, it is thought, must have got his information concerning Villa's wound from Mexican sources.

Every day the Mexican officials in Juarez take an arm or a leg from Villa, and if their reports were true he would be dismembered completely:

All thoughts here tonight are on Chilhuahua City. If Villa goes in there it is believed that the world will be startled by the tragedy that will follow.

Last New Year's Day Villa and his man executed Chilhuahua. The night before he left Villa made a speech to the people in which he said:—

"Listen to me, friends; I am leaving Chilhuahua and I am going to kill every American I meet. The gringoes have betrayed me. When I return there will not be an American left in the State."

Since that time Villa has slain forty-four Americans. He killed eighteen at Canta Ysabel, eighteen at Columbus, three at the Palomas ranch, three at Minaca and two at Guerro.

Villa will go to tremendous risks to keep any threat that he has made. It was this Indian trick that made him such a terror as a bandit. He said he would return to Chilhuahua City, and it is believed that he will if it is a possible thing.

The last reports that can be relied upon placed Villa close to Chilhuahua City, but they also stated that American cavalry was hot on his trail.

If he is at all closely pursued Villa cannot enter Chilhuahua City with safety, in spite of the fact that the Carranga garrison will not fight him.

And this is the hope of everybody here although it is hard to figure how the American troops can keep going at sucha distance from their base.

BATTLE ISLAND CASE ON AGAIN

Fulton Men on Stand Upon Resumption of Famous Damage Case Against the State.

Syracuse — H. Lester Paddock, president of the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Co. was the first witness called in the trial of the famous claim of the Battle Island Paper company against the state for $1,875,000 damages to its property from the construction of the Barge Canal when the case opened yesterday afternoon in the Appellate Division Room of the Court House, Judges Fred M. Ackerson and Thomas F. Fennell presiding.

Mr. Paddock testified at length regarding the peculiarities of the stream, and told how it had been affected by the changes since the construction of the barge canal and the consequent elimination of the Battle Island.

Value of Water Power

The testimony was introduced to show the value of the water power which was lost because of thew ork of the building of the canal. G. H. Webb of Fulton was called to the stand for expert testimony along the same lines just before court adjourned at 5 o'clock.

The case will be continued this morning, and will probably occupy nearly the entire term of one part of the court. The case is being warmly fought by the state, and constant clashes between the attorneys are features.

The claimants expected to finish within a few days, but it now appears that at least four weeks may be consumed in the trial.

Many Expert Witnesses

The state has numerous expert witnesses to introduce, and although it has been announced that this side of the case will be completed in about ten days, it is probable it will require much longer.

As during the last trial of the claim court, the state is represented by Deputy Attorney-General Sanford W. Smith and Attorney Edward J. Mone, Edwin M. Ellis and R. J. Phillips, engineers, are here in the interests of the state.

In counsel for the claimants appear William Nottingham, Charles E. Spencer, George W. Driscoll, William C. Gannon and Louis Mitchell, in addition to many expert witnesses.

The order for the four parts of the Court of Claims was announced last night following a conference of the judges. Judges Fred M. Ackerson and Thomas F. Fennell are holding court in the Appellate Division room on the fourth floor of the Court House.

Judge W. W. Webb is sitting in Part III of the Supreme Court. Judge Charles R. Paris is in the Grand Jury room and Judge William Cunningham in the supervisors' chambers

Judge W. W. Webb, who succeeded Adolph J. Rodenbeck, found ready for trial the case of the Burt Olney Canning Company of Oneida, which holds a claim against the state of $17,126 84 for damages to their property resulting from the overflow of Oneida creek.

The creek interesects the Erie canal near the plant of the canning company and alleged negligence is claimed from a disastrous overflow which inundated the baasement floor of the canning company.

McMahon, Mason & Larkin appear for the canning company. The claimants were anxious to finish up the case yesterday, but Judge Webb determined it would be necessary to submit additional evidence and the trial will be continued several days.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE URGED TO HEAR TRIAL OF CLAIMS

Syracuse— The large number of cases for decision by the Court of Claims has caused agitation in the office of the ottorney-general at Albany for an additional judge. At present there are five, with Fred M. Ackerson as chief judge. The others are Thomas F. Fennell, Charles R. Paris, W. W. Webb and William Cunningham.

Onondaga county contributes a large share of the cases to be tried and since the court sat here last fall more than forty new cases have been added from this vicinity.

Several claims from this county are for personal injury and one man is suing for $800 injury to a cold during the State Fair a year ago.

Judge Cunninghom was the only judge of the court who had not arrived yesterday. He will be here this morning.

WALKS 4,000 MILES TO REGAIN HIS HEALTH

When Doctors Seem to Be Giving Up Hope He Handles Own Case and Resorts to Walking.

Davenport, Ia.—Robert Sindt, thirty-five years old, was facing a physical breakdown last fall. The doctors did not hold out much hope for him. He is a pretty good sized man when in robust health, but his weight had dropped to 135 pounds.

"I'll doctor my own case and fresh air will be my first prescription," decided Sindt.

So he started walking. Not to any destination in particular, but just jogging along as far as he felt like going every day. He started to walk in August. Recently he arrived at San Diego, Cal., having walked 3,394 miles in that time.

His prescription of fresh air, along with the accompanying exercise, has worked wonders, and his weight has gone up fifteen pounds. It's all solid bone and muscle, too, now.

Sindt has become a devotee of walking and has started out on a new trip to Washington. He pays his own way and adopts none of the minor grafts usually employed by professional pedestrians.

While on his long jaunt Sindt made a study of the effects of various foods, and he has arrived at the conclusion that the old fashioned staple—beans—just about tops the list in the way of affording nutriment. He drinks a great deal of water every day. He sleeps in the open air most of the time.

Sindt has averaged 15.73 miles every day since he started on his health pilgrimage.

GOVERNOR WHITMAN'S SPEECH LAST NIGHT

line and add a line, with a little shading here and a little shading there, to produce a perfect picture, they, too, may think that they are living the life of New York. But that is not the life of the State.

All over this State, as all over this Nation—but I am speaking primarily of the State, of which I have the honor and proud privilege to be the Chief Executive—upon the hills, yes, on the mountains and down by the sea, along the rivers and in the valleys, in the cities and in the towns, in the country, is being lived today the real life, as it has been for generations past. In the homes all through this great commonwealth good men and good women, clean hearted men and clean hearted women, patriotic men and patriotic women, unselfish men and unselfish women, in leading clean and wholesome, honest and upright American lives, are living the real life of the State. That is the true life lived throughout the Nation and throughout the State, and the home is its dwelling place. It has been wholesome; it is wholesome now. It has been true to ideals and that is what makes our citizenship true and loyal and patriotic today. It is upon character so created that we are depending, upon which theg overnment of the State and of the Nation is depending; it is upon that that the welfare of the world is depending.

If we are the Empire State, if we possess within our borders the greatest city in the world, it has not been due to favoring accidents but to an indomitable spirit, impatient of obstacles, and to a splendid courage, careless of odds. Where is there record of more fearless determination and larger vision than that displayed in the construction of our canal system? The Commonwealth was in its swaddling clothes, the science of engineering still in its infancy, there were swamps and forests to conquer, and the refusal of federal aid brought close the shadow of failure and bankruptcy. But nothing had force to weaken the resolution of our fathers.

Great in material prosperity, great in financial and commercial achievement, New York leads the Nation today in its charities, in the care of the feeble, the helpless and the insane, in the opportunities it offers rich and poor alike in the world of education. Nowhere on earth is the demand for social justice more pronounced and nowhere has it met more full and complete response on the part of governmental agencies than has been the case with us.

In a democratic government, the responsibility for every branch and department of government, for the proper enactment as well as enforcement of laws, rests primarily upon the people themselves, and it is because of that fact that I want to speak to you but very briefly on one or two matter s relating to the government of this State, which are, in my opinion, of vital importance to you and to every man and woman in the State of New York.

As I said to an audience in your sister city of Syracuse last Wednesday night. For years the State has labored under a financial system that would have driven any private business into bankruptcy long ago.

The plan of lump sum appropriations turned huge amounts over to department heads to spend as they pleased, with the knowledge that when sums allowed were exhausted, new obligations could be incurred and that deficiency bills could be jammed through to meet deficits.

To add to the confusion, various departments have had power to collect fees and spend them practically as they chose, while some sixty-five officers of the State and County were privileged to disburse moneys without supervision by the State Comptroller.

It has been practically impossible chambers of commerce, boards of trade and other business and quasi-civic organizations, composed as they are as a general rule all over this State of men patriotically inclined but especially devoted to the welfare and building up of the immediate locality in which their lot has been placed.

I thank you gentlemen for giving me the privilege and opportunity to greet you. It is a great privilege and a great opportunity—for men engaged as many of us are engaged with routine demands of government, with the constant details and with difficulties, obstacles and trials, and with the pleasures, too, of course—to meet with those, to talk with those, face to face, whom we are trying to serve and for whom we have assumed great obligations. These social occasions help to adjust the official's sense of proportion. At the Capitol in Albany in the Executive Chamber, the Governor constantly at work with governmental matters, his time almost monopolized by men connected with politics or government, hearing affairs of state every hour of every day, grows to think that after all this is the life of New York. But it is not the life of the State.

And the legislators, when they come back on the 1st of January and receive petitioners and the delegations and groups of men from all parts of the State, asking for something, begging for certain kinds of legislation and opposing certain other kinds of legislation, absorbed in committee work, perhaps grow to feel that they are living the life of the State. But it is not the life of the State.

When once in twenty years distinguished, honorable, able and famous men, renowned for their wisdom, gather at the Capital to make the fundamental law of the State, to make the Constitution under which we shall live, when these men listen to the propositions of men of experience and men of theory, when they remove a for a citizen, a legislator or a Governor to gain exact informotion as to income and expenditures, for the itemless, irresponsible lump sum plan defied analysis and comprehension.

In my first year as Governor, appropriation bills to the amount of well above $50,000,000 came to me for my approval, and I discovered that I possessed no power to alter a single item but must either accept entirely or reject absolutely. By taking full advantage of the thirty days allowed me, I found ninety items that were obviously unnecessary, and by these vetoes I managed to bring about a reduction of $2,500,000.

It was as a consequence of this experience that I presented a budget plan to the Legislature. It was a tentative plan; I understood, and stated publicly, that many changes might perhaps properly be made but it represented the first effort toward the adoption of a budget system, which in the end, I am sure, will accomplish great good to the people of this State. The Legislature or its committees has not agreed to all of the provisions or to the whole plan presented by the Executive, but I expect that the salient features, namely, segregation of amounts, free and full publicity for every item appropriated, and opportunity for every citizen to learn exactly where the money of the State is going, opportunity for every member of the Legislature to learn every detail of a single appropriation bill before voting upon the same—I say I believe that these at least of the recommendations of the Executive are to be accompliished.

The budget plan is not an automatic device by any means. Its principle value, in the last analysis, is the opportunity that it present for popular understanding and popular control No citizen under such a scheme can claim that the State's business is a mystery that only experts may understand. I hope that appropriation schemes of the future will involve a statement of every dollar received by every department and the exact purpose for which every dollar is to be expended. A child may understand, and if, with this full information in their hands, the sovereign voters permit graft and waste and extravagance the fault is theirs.

Now, gentlemen, nobody claims that a budget system, even when it is perfected, is a cure-all or is going to work miracles. Human nature would remain very much the same if the most absolutely perfect system humanly possible were developed and adopted for the government of mankind in any political unit.

I am in no sense a faddist, and those who have been working loyally with the Executive in the legislative halls of the State, as well as in the various departments and in elective positions, understand, as well as I do, that the gain to be derived by the kind of legislotion proposed, should it all be enacted, consists largely in the opportunity it offers to all our citizens to share in governmental activities, as, in the last analysis, they must carry the burden of responsibility for the government of the State of New York.

Time does not permit me to go in detail into the workings of the various departments, but with the proper kind of a single appropriation bill every citizen in this County, for instance, can in a very brief space of time put himself into such position that he can properly and fairly judge as to the efficiency and as to the deserts of every public official in this State.

We haven't accomplished all, and we can't expect to accomplish all that it may be desirable to accomplish in one session or two sessions or more of the Legislature, but I believe that I can truthfully say to you, when the work of this session shall have been finished and shall be subject to the review of the people, every fairminded man will admit that we have made distinct progress and that the conditions in every branch of our government are better and that those called upon to render service to the people are rendering better service than was possible under the conditions which prevailed two years ago in this State.

And on behalf of myself and of all those charged with responsibility of government, we not only ask but we must sincerely urge your examination, your suggestion and advice, as we believe we have a right to call for your approval and support.

It is a great pleasure to me, here in his home county, to express to Speaker Sweet the gratitude which I feel and which every good citizen, familiar with the work of the Legislature for the years during which he has presided over the Lower House, must feel. Patient, loyal, untiring, and, in the defense of principle unyielding. Your representative has become far more than the representative of a single assembly district, important, of course, as the position is, but, in a large sense, representative of all that is best in the public life of the State, and, old as is the sentiment, it is eminently true here, that you honor yourselves in honoring him.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Samuel J. Ryan, who plays the part of the political boss in the William Fox feature photoplay, "The Fourth Estate," is one of the best known men on the American stage. He became famous in "Irish Aristocracy," and "Muldoon's Picnic," and in later years played big parts in "Little Johnny Jones," and "Yankee Prince" and other Cohan and Harris productions.

His conception of the part of Boss Duprey in "The Fourt Estate" is remarkable. Mr. Ryan declares that he prefers the pictures to the legitimate stage, as he does not have to travel as much as formerly and can remain home with his family. He own a handsome place on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River, directly opposite New York's Forty-second Street ferry.

WOULD LIVE WHERE SHE KILLED HUSBAND

Woman Longs For the Cabin in Maryland Mountains Instead of a City Home.

Frederick, Md.—"I want to go back to my home in the mountains to live. There I can be more alone than any place I know. I want to take my children up there and be alone with them in the woods."

This is the expressed desire of Mrs. Eloise Young English, who recently in this same mountain cabin shot and killed her husband to protect herself and their children from his anger.

"There are a lot of chickens up there, and the property is big," she said as if to convince herself that her plan was practicable. "I believe that I could get along very nicely though I do not expect to be happy again. I have never had a ray of sunshine since I married, and I surely do not hope for any now."

That Mrs. English has been completely exonerated from blame is shown in the attitude of Thomas Dunn English, the only son of the dead man by a former wife. Mr. English has offered to take his stepmother back to his own home in Brooklyn.

"Dunn has been awfully nice to me," said Mrs. English. "He begged me to go to New York to live with him. But I don't want to go. I appreciate his offer, but I don't want to be under obligations to anybody.

"If it had been only myself I would not have shot Arthur. When he wanted to he be could be as nice as anybody could wish. But there were so many times that his temper would snap in an instant, and I was afraid of him. I knew at these moments he was perfectly capable of killing my children."

HEROISM WINS BRIDE.

Weds Miss After Giving Skin For Grafting Upon Little Girl.

Denver.—A romance, like those you read about in novels, culminated recently when Miss Lelia Alma Peck, a nurse at the County hospital, formerly of Madison, Ind., was married to Vincent Brunner, Jr., of Mishawaka, Ind.

Several months ago Brunner read in an Indiana paper that little five-year-old Mary Lena Lewis, who was badly burned in a Colorado forest fire, needed healthy skin grafted on to her scarred body. The appeal touched his heart, and he, being a healthy young man, came to Denver and gave a portion of his skin that the child might recover.

During the skin grafting operation he met Miss Peck, and the romance began.

NO PAYMENT FOR WRAPPINGS

In a decision recently rendered by Judge Beall, of the City Court of Yonkers, lies a grain of comfort for the bedeviled housewife whose weekly bills threaten to exceed her weekly appropriation for food. The decision was rendered against Armour & Co., who, as is the custom with other packers, have included the weight of wrappings and twine in counting the weight of hams, bacon and the like. Judge Beall holds that this practice is a violation of the law demanding that each container of foodstuffs be marked with the net weight of its contents.

Under this ruling, unless it be contested and overturned, the packers will not be able to charge the retailer for the weight of the wrappings. The retailer, therefore, will have no reason for passing along that charge to the consumer. That individual, who pays the freight for everything, may at least hope to escape paying for the unedible paper or burlap in which his breakfast ham was wrapped. — N. Y. American.

MISUSING THE WHITE SLAVE LAW

Federal Judge Carpenter at Chicago appears to have laid violent hands on the commonly-accepted rules of evidence and procedure in the trial of criminal cases. He has had before him the prosecution of a millionaire under the Mann White Slave Law, at the instigation of a woman who, as charged, had crossed a state boundary line in his company. On the contention of counsel for the defense that the woman was an adventuress seeking to extort money, Judge Carpenter rules that evidence as to the woman's past and present character may be admitted.

This is going behind the returns of the case immediately in hand to a degree calculated to shock the more punctillious formalists of the legal profession. But it is a ruling which would make short work of this general perversion from its plain purposes of the law in question.

Instead of against the "white slave" the Mann Act has been used chiefly to regulate private morals and promote blackmail. When evidence of previous character and performances becomes admissible in any case, a hard blow will have been dealt at the ridiculous business of engaging the great power of the federal government to protect and encourage traffic in extortion.—N. Y. World.

BILL WOULD GIVE ELECTRICITY AT COST

Assemblyman Alan V. Parker of Niagara Falls has introduced a bill at Albany creating the Niagara hydro-electric power commission to consist of three members appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Senate.

Its purpose shall be the construction and operation and maintenance of a state power house on the reservation at Niagara Falls to generate electricity and distribute it at cost to the communities of Western New York. The members are to hold office until death, resignation or removal, and may hire and discharge employes at will. The commission may contract for power with persons or civic communities.

In fixing the rates, the commission may apportion the original cost of construction among contracting parties without the control of the public service and may provide for a gradual return to the state of the original outlay. The chairman of the commission is to receive $3,000 a year and the other two members $2,000 a year. The chief engineer shall not receive more than $2,500 a year and the accountant and secretary not more than $2,000 a year.

THE SPIRITUAL SALESMAN

The New York Evening Post comments lengthily upon the tendency to "inspirational" literature for business men.

"The surprising thing about it all," says the Post, "is its method. It aims not so much at practical instruction as at a revolution of the entire mental and moral being of the salesman. His whole spiritual nature, it seems, must be quickened before he can successfully take orders for hosiery. He has to go through a long course of brooding over the deep things of the soul. Instead of being exhorted in the old, crude way to hustle and 'get thar,' he is taught how to release the dynamic energies hidden in his breast, how to develop an irresistible will-power, how to make selling shirts or hats an exercise in transcendental philosophy."

That "a type of salesman disagreeable to the prospective customer is frequently developed" by this modern teaching the Post suspects. Also that "what passes for efficiency training may be only old imprudence writ large."

The conclusion reached is that "We are plainly in for a great vogue of this style of filling business men with metaphysical impulses and deep spiritual longings. It is one of the signs of a recurring mysticism even in the midst of a society that seems material and sordid."

The nineteenth century seemed an age of materialism. In it science reigned supreme, upsetting old religious ideas and often contemning any spiritual basis for life. In this new century the pendulum has already swung far back. Or rather, thought, which seems to progress spirally, has again reached the spiritual side, but this time with a higher and sounder understanding. Science swept away much of the dross of the old religious teaching, scoured off the barnacles of lazy thought. But in doing so it simply revealed the gold, cleaned the keel which now goes far and swiftly.

Mystic truths are not less true because we are getting at them crudely in our "uplift" literature, whether for stocking salesman or college professors. The conflict between religion and science which enlivened the past century is over. Dimly we realize that if we are to be wise and successful and happy, we must make use of their combined forces. The man who "makes the selling of hats an exercise in transcendental philosophy" may be an amusing person, but he is groping in the right direction.

LOCAL PRIDE

"I am sick of all this gush about Kansas," a denizen of Ephriam, Wisconsin, writes in. "Wisconsin has county after county that can beat Kansas' best. Kansas may have a town that can load half its population into its own motor cars, but my little home town of Ephraim can seat every one of its people in its own cars and have room for a few broken-down visitors from the sun-scorched plains of Kansas seeking balm in Northern Wisconsin. And, although we are thirty miles from a railway station, we need not plow through mud of the Kansas brand or any other, but can drive the entire distance of a choice of several routes of macadamized roads.

"And yet it is only half as long since we began to carve our farms out of the primeval forest as it is since the soil-robbers of Kansas began their work."

It appears that this Ephriam patriot is a trifle testy. Real local pride is more often than not impatient and intolerant. And when you come right down to it, this very human defect of impatience and intolerance has its distinct value in obtaining a hearing for one who would boost the treasures of his own hearthside.

To say "We live in just as nice a place as the other fellow, our wheat heads out just as abundantly as his, the pretty girls of our town are just as comely as the pretty girls of his town" sounds molly-coddlish. The reader does not prick up his ears and feel his temperature rise.

But when you put it this way: "Our township is the only strip of original paradise left in the universe; our pretty girls are so beautiful they must wear masks to prevent benighted strangers from kidnaping them; we raise an average of twenty more bushels of buckwheat to the acre than any other region yet discovered by man; the most backward children of our most backward farmers drive their own aeroplanes," and so on, why then you've got ninety per cent of your audience sitting up with agitated interest.

Local pride is a great thing—probably the greatest of all stimulants to energy. You can't send us in too much evidence of it. — Country Gentleman.

CYCLISTS' CARDS; NO TAGS READY

Cristman Bill Requires Registration of All Cyclists---Tags Not Ready Yet.

Albany—Cards certifying that the motorcyclist has registered with the Secretary of State in accordance with the Christman law effective April 1st, are now being issued and are to be accepted by police authorities in lieu of license plates until the supply of the latter can be received from the manufacturer. The Christman bill was signed only a week ago. A rush order was immediately placed for 40,000 motorcycle registration plates. As soon as these are received they will be mailed to all registered motorcyclists, the plate number corresponding to the one on the card issued.

Hundreds of motorcyclists have already registered with Secretary of State Hugo in compliance with the law, the summer-like weather of the past few days undoubtedly augmenting the number. In requiring the registration of motorcyclists, New York state has followed the action of forty-two other states as a means of bettering their individual highway systems. The fee of $2.50 charged by this State is an average between the extremes of other states. Rhode Island has thel owest fee, one dollar, while Idaho and Kentucky charge the motor-cyclist as high as five dollars a year.

Different states have different ways of licensing the motorcyclist, Wyoming does not itself require a registration but gives its cities authority to license machines owned and operated wthin their limits. In the District of Columbia, al icense fee of two dollars is good as long as the machine is owned by the party taking out the license. Texas and South Carolina have county registration of riders.

The Christman law defines a motor cycle as two wheels, one following the other, propelled by other than muscular power. Bicycles with motor attachment will necessarily have to be registered as coming under the new law.

"PRINCESS TRA-LA-LA" AT THE RICHARDSON

Andreas Dippel, the well-known impressario, who is always doing things in just a little different way from the ordinary, is coming to Oswego soon with a new musical attraction which he guarantees will make the most jaded theatregoes, sit up and take notice. "The Princess Tra-la-la." Mr. Dippel's mid-season production is the English version of the Viennese operetta which won such laurels in Europe under the name of "Hoheit Tanzt Walzer." It was played more than five hundred times in succession in Vienna and Paris and an equal number in each of the principal cities of Europe. This is the very first time it has been given in English, and the original beauty and vivacity of the score has been retained in the present adaptation. Its score and lyrics are of the hauntingly melodious kind that cannot be readily forgotten and, the story is a well-rounded out comic-tragedy, full of laughter, action, pretty girls and a mixture of pathos and tears as a ballast. It deals with life on the banks of the Blue Danube in the early thirties, and the scenic effects are very beautiful. America has learned to expect much from Impressario Dippel, since the production of his "The Lilac Domino" and it is rumored that this latest production will outclass anything that he has ever produced and will be far ahead of any light opera that has ever been presented in this country. The premiere performance in this city will be given on Thursday evening at the Richardson theatre, swego. This is the same company that is playing now at the Empire theatre, Syracuse. Seat sale Tuesday 9 a. m. Checks 8 a. m.

ELECTRIC CO. TO REISSUE STOCK, PAR VALUE $10

The Fulton Light, Heat & Power company filed with the County Clerk, Oswego, on Saturday, its certificate which indicates a desire to reissue its stock, changing it from 3,000 shares at $100 each to 30,000 shares at $10 each. This action it is believed will result in securing a wider distribution of the company's stock.

Not Opposed to Doctors

More than 200 persons listened with rapt attention to thel ecture given by Mr. Bicknell Young, of Chicago, on Saturday evening, in the Assembly hall of the Public Library.

He was introduced by Miss Ada Thayer, who paid a glowing tribute to the ability of the guest of the evening as an entertainer and clear-cut exponent of Truth as known to the followerers of the religion of Christian Science.

The subject of Mr. Young's address was the relationship of Christian Science to healing, and was in part as follows:

"We are not opposed to physicians nor to their legitimate attempts to do good," said Bicknell Young of Chicago in a lecture on Christian Science last evening at Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist.

"We are not opposed to sanitation," he continued. "We are only opposed to its present inadequacy. We believe it should not only mean perfect cleanliness of body and environment but that it should extend to the human mind and character, which should be thoroughly cleansed and kept clean.

"No one need take my word for such a system. Any person or community can try it. Just as the tendency to sin can be weakened and destroyed by refusing to entertain degrading thoughts, in exactly the same way the tendency to disease can be weakened and destroyed. Christian Science not only explains all this but gives one the power of Christ with which to accomplish it.

SPIRITUAL HEALING

"That there must be, step by step, scientific discernment, understanding and devotion before there can be absolute irrefutable proof hardly needs to be pointed out. Material methods of healing, however strongly entrenched in opinion and belief, are not scientific. They ignore human consciousness or human mentality, or if they are forced to consider it they have no means with which either to meet or overcome its difficulties. Such systems are not educational.

"All accurate observations pertaining to disease tend to prove that it is necessary to probe more deeply for the root or cause of human suffering than do those who look for it solely in matter. In order to understand anything of correct mental healing we must remember that the human body possesses no sensation as mere matter. Sensation is only present when human life is present. Now if one stops to consider and remember that a human being is not entirely material, but that he is largely mental, the conclusion, if drawn correctly will be that all of his experiences are at least partially mental.

"The more one views human life the more conclusively must one see that when disease appears it is a part of what one calls himself, and that this self is a conscious creature. The disease is therefore a part of what is called the human consciousness. On this account any propaganda tending to increase fear is not only a mistake but is inhuman.

FALSE MENTALITY

"One who is taught to fear disease is virtually taught to give power to disease, because disease has only the power which universal belief ascribes to it, and has no other law than universal human opinion to sustain it. Therefore any system which tends to increase the fear of disease tends equally to increase the hold of disease, not only upon the individual but upon the human race, which is the exact opposite of the ostensible object even of medical science.

"There should, however, be no misunderstanding of the attitude of Christian Scientists toward other sytems of healing. Christian Science stands alone. It is not competing with other methods or systems of healing. While we have got beyond the use of medicine ourselves, we would not prevent others from employing any method of healing which appeals to them, since we can claim the same right for ourselves.

"To those who feel that nothing is being done for them unless material remedies are being used. Christian Science shows that nothing is being done for them when material remedies are being used This becomes evident if one stops to consider the nature of material remedies and also the requirements for healing disease.

"To heal disease is a most intelligent action. To suppose that a non-intelligent thing can accomplish it is not only reasonable, but foolish. People believe that they are helped by material remedies, when in fact the material remedy does not possess any intelligence and cannot heal or even mitigate disease, and that is true notwithstanding the fact that people who take material remedies or use them often experience relief, and not infrequently, if the disease is not considered serious, recover under the use of material remedies.

"They suppose that the material remedy accomplishes the result, but they could not suppose such a thing if they thought deeply about it. When disease is either mitigated or the health of the patient improved under such system, it is the faith in faith as universal as the race and as old as its history, which accomplishes the result. All so-called material healing is faith healing on a very low plane, whereas Christian Science is even higher than the highest faith healing, for it is not merely faith in God, but the knowledge of Him, which as evidence of both presence and power accomplishes the desired result.

"People catch diseases mentally. All the contagious diseases are made so by contagious mentality. Now, Jesus declared that the kingdom of Heaven is to be found within. It therefore must be a state of true mentality. Why not get out of the realm of contagious disease or contagious mentality by getting into heaven and staying there? Under the shadow of the Almighty in that pure mentality which the Bible calls the 'secret place of the Most High' you will find no diseases, contagious or hereditary or whatnot. You will learn that you do not need to be afraid. You have only to reflect, the mind which never created disease, does not know it, and therefore is not afraid of it, and this can be done only by thoughts in accord with that divine mind.

"The conclusion that disease is error or false mentality is not weakened by observing that people sometimes have diseases which they never heard of. One only needs to remember that if one believes in disease and fears and expects it, he is mentally prepared for disease, and might therefore have any disease, whether he ever heard of it or not. The whole trend of human education is to prepare us for trouble, yet none of that preparation provides against trouble. It starts wrong by giving power to evil, a human habit which is incontrovertibly wrong.

"Whenever true religion has constituted the only science and the only philosophy it has always declared, "Thou halt have no other Gods before me." From the standpoint of pure logic such religion is right, and the conclusions drawn by material views are wrong.

"The race needs to be educated [illegible] truth, not in error. In propor[illegible] that it is so educated it become[illegible] healthy race through mind. It can not through beliefs in matter.

"By means of divine thoughts, which are necessarily divine facts, you and I are learning to analyze evil and not to be afraid of it, and that is the very first thing that science concerns itself with, for the true mission of science is to deliver the human race from affliction a thing to be done only by correct education.

OVERCOMING FEAR

"Fear is no legitimate part of education. The Bible says that God has not given us the spirit of fear, and that statement beyond all question is logical and relevant. The fear which forms a part of the ordinary person's education can be overcome at least gradually through even a slight understanding of Christian Science. This is especially true of the fear of disease. No other system but Christian Science has ever recognized the undesirable and afflictive nature of fear, and no other system has ever provided for the mitigation or complete extinction of fear. That such a result may appear one needs to realize the naturalness of divine power and help, and such realization comes through Christian Science as one learns more and more how to test that power.

"No matter how fearful one may be, no matter what the difficulty may be under which he labors, if he will stand for his understanding and against fear he can prove that his understanding of God, through slight, is more powerful than the fear which seems to beset him, and as he thus faces and overcomes his fears step by step that diminish and disappear This shows that it is the practice of what one understands that is mose important, because it is by means of this practice alone that fear can be destroyed.

"It is far more important to get rid of the fear of germs and microbes than it is to get rid of the germs or microbes themselves. Doctors ofter find that a very harmless germ and much fear produce fatal results, while even a comparative state of fearlessness with the presence of so-called deadly germs gives the patient at least a fair chance for recovery.

"In view of their own experiences, how foolish seem to be all their present propaganda. It reminds one of the old views of theology in which it was supposed that a person was not properly prepared for heaven unless he was thoroughly afraid of hell, notwithstanding that the Bible says, 'fear hath torment'—or is hell, and that fear could never be found in heaven, so that one could never find heaven so long as he was afraid of hell, or of anything else. In the same way health can never be found in the ways of fear, for health and fear are opposites; the one is a legitimate and inevitable incident of heaven, the other has no place therein.

LIFE

"Heaven cannot mean more than eternal existence with perfect happiness. This implies uninterrupted life. Ordinarily ethical systems and the commonly accepted theories of medicine and religion predicate the inevitable triumph of disease. They declare that however much man may struggle and however much he may know or gain in knowledge, yet finally he will be overcome by evil. Christian Science, on the other hand, holds out the alluring hope and establishes the divine and demonstrable assurance that man, meaning every person, shall eventually triumph over all evil, and awake in that dominion which the Bible says God gave to him.

"We are not only alive, but we want to live. Practically all of us would be willing to live forever if we could only be sure that we could be happy forever. So common is this instinct or desire to live that it is expressed axiomatically, "self preservation is the first law of nature.' Humanly speaking, it is not a law, it is only a desire, yet so universal is it, so immeasurable, so without beginning or end, that it must indicate a permanent fact. This permanent fact is fundamental to all thing.s It must be life, for without life there is nothing. Such thoughts show why Christian Science is right in teaching that God, divine mind, principle, is life.

"Even the human sense of life has never been found in matter, however industriously sought there. To suppose that it could be so found is so manifestly illogical, and so clearly impossible, that it seems strange that thousands of devoted and learned men and women have spent untold years in the vain endeavor to locate in matter the immeasurable, incontainable principle, life God.

"Life is eternal now. Nearly all religious doctrine has been to the effect that eternal life would come after death. Such theories utterly ignore the meaning of eternality at the same time that they claim to teach it.

"Postponed eternality is no eternality at all. Creation is not something that begins or ends. When the Bible is read spiritually instead of materially it unmistakably shows that the only thing which ever begins is not creation, but a human being's conception of it. Eternal life is unquestionably to be attained by enlightenment and demonstration. Life is the basic principle of being, which needs to be, and can be, humanly proved through Christian Science by eliminating the destruction fears and beliefs called sin and disease.

MRS. EDDY

"Enlightenment is the essential feature of true prayer. Mrs. Eddy's discovery of Christian Science involved this prayer, which is its method or modus operandi, and by which divine power becomes available to mankind. Mrs. Eddy was able to discover this science because she was clearer than anyone else in the world. That mental clearness was prayer with her, and is prayer with anybody who attains it. It signifies the abilty to distinguish between spiritual truth, that is permanent, and the errors of human existence,that are always temporal and always to be resisted and overcome through proper education.

"Mrs. Eddy was a genius of the very highest order. Since the early Christian era there has been no instance equal to it. The recognition of that genius will ultimately be universal, because it will be seen that the quality of it, being spiritual, far transcends every other form of genius known to the world.

"She established the cause of Christian Science and gave to the movement the church organization for the protection of humanity and for the purpose of perpetuating this science of Christ unadulterated. This church which she named the Church of Christ, Scientist, is an organization with no ulterior or hidden motives or designs. It has no political purposes or affiliations, no system of rewards or punishments. It is purely Christian in all its activities, for its founder saw that when men shall demonstrate the pure science of Christ, no good thing should be wanting in their lives. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.' (I. Cor. ii. 9.)

"Seeing the grandeur of Christian Science, therefore, fulfilling as it does the mission of any adequate definition of both science and religion, it is not strange that it should be encircling the globe, because it is greater than the globe or anything else. It is the science of that divine and infinite Cause upon which everything depends and in which everything that is true in the universe originated, and by which everything which is true is sustained and perpetuated. It must eventually control the world. It could not do so as personal influence or desire, and any tendency upon the part of human beings to so restrict Christian Science would be to delay its full demonstration of blessing and peace for humanity. Its divine contral humanly illustrated can only be proved and experienced through the unselfish recognition and demonstration of its divine Principle in human hearts and lives. Manifestly such a science can form no adjunct to ordinary education and knowledge. It is not less than anything else, but greater than all things. It is necessarily basic to all right knowledge, and must be so recognized by those who would demonstrate it."

"BUT ONE McCORMACK AND HIS NAME IS JOHN"

The above caption refers to John McCormack, the words being spoken by Mason, critic for the San Francisco Examiner. McCormack comes to Oswego on April 13th, under the auspices of a committee of citizens —music lovers.

So much has been said and written in praise of McCormack that to add more might appear to the reader as superfluous—but when a critic acknowledged of acknowledged ability chooses tog ive an ipinion without bias, and yet so generous as contained in the Chicago Tribune, the public will pardon any additional comment. The Tribune said recently in part as follows:

"John McCormack has become an institution with the music-loving public of America, His song recitals, like the laws and customs of the time, as Webster would say, 'are persistent elements in the country's social order.'

"The reasons for Mr. McCormack's popularity are by no means catalogued with the statement that he is an Irishman and a tenor. His voice is exquisite. His songs defines every virtue of vocal art. His enunciation —particularly in English —is like music itself. His diction has life and pulse; it is a thing of beauty and of eloquence to sway a multitude. His song, be its burden grave or gay, bears the impulse of a simple, wholesome personality. It sustains the semblance of spontaneity, as though born of an irresistible desire, yet conforms to the measured order of a faultless interpretative intention. In short Mr. McCormack is a great artist, and if there are any other reasons for his success omitted in this list, the reader may supply them for himself."

4TH ST. NEEDS IMPROVEMENTS

No Curb and No Gutters and a Very Bad Roadway Spoil Appearance of Hospital.

The condition of Fourth st., from Oneida to Division, is considered as one of the best pieces of roadway on the East Side, but the street between Division and the point of intersection with the State road in the southern end of the city, is bad, very bad. This statement is endorsed by all users of the street, including the physicians whose business it is to use it almost constantly, sepecially that section upon which the hospital fronts. There, said Dr. S. D. Keller in mentioning the subject at the last Chamber of Commerce meeting, the street should be improved at once. Division street is considered as a jumping-off place by the doctors. Fourth st. should have curbs and a gutter, as it is impossible to maintain a lawn east of the hospital sidewalk, because there is nothing to prevent horses from cutting the sod to pieces; and more than that, inasmuch as the hospital lawn is lower than the mud-road level water from the street floods the grass making of it a veritable quagmire at times.

Another suggestion to be considered by the Chamber comes from Mr. H. L. Paddock who would like to see Fourth st. made in good condition all the way from Division street to the southern intersection with the State road, as in that way a goodly portion of the auto traffic could be diverted from East 1st st., thus relieving congestion and enabling tourists to ride through the city's finest residential district.

LIBRARY INDEBTEDNESS REMAINS AS ONLY $1,000

The interest taken by the Chamber of Commerce in the remaining indebtedness of the Public Library is appreciated by the trustees, who were represented at the recent annual meeting of the Chamber by Mr. E. R. Redhead. At that meeting Secretary Hollenga announced, as a portion of the program, the elimination of the remaining indebtedness amounting to $1,000. This, Mr. Redhead explained, came about through putting the finishing touches on the Library, such as floors, etc. in the basement, and which were not provided for in the appropriation of $15,000 expended on the building originally. Secretary Hollenga's method of meeting the deficit will be made known later.

MUNICIPAL FLAG AND COAT OF ARMS ARE DESIRED

It is his intention to include the acquistions in his program during the next six months.

Washington Teacher Aided Those Who Sought Education.

LIVED MODESTLY TO DO ACT

Used Income of High School Instructor in Moderate Manner, and With Money He Earned by Writing He Was Able to Educate Eighteen Students.

Everett, Wash.—F. D. Mack, teacher in the Central school, has spent about $40,000 in educating eighteen students, seventeen boys and one girl, during the last sixteen years, according to a story he reluctantly told a newspaper representative.

Living on his school salary in a modest way both in Minnesota, his former home, and in Washington, he has earned the money to send students through universities by writing short stories and magazine articles. He has paid out between $2,000 and $3,000 on each of his "children."

Some of the youngsters were orphans, and some had one parent, but all were eager to learn and were handicapped by lack of money.

The thirteen boys who are alive are all actively engaged in the professions in which Mr. Mack has educated them. Two are druggists, one being in St. Paul and the other in Los Angeles. Two are instructors in the University of Minnesota, where they were graduated. One teaches mathematics, and the other is an instructor in German.

This latter young man plans to be a physician and in 1914 married a girl who wished to go to Germany to get her master's degree, so he and his bride sailed for Germany to continue their studies, only to be turned back by the beginning of the war.

Mr. Mack sent him through Normal school, the University of Minnesota and Harvard, where he received his master's degree.

A young man who chose to be a broker received his education at the University of Illinois. He started out to be an architect, but changed his mind and took a commercial course. He was graduated four years ago and is now in Minneapolis engaged in the lumber brokerage business. He is the best money maker of the "family." In his four years out of college he has made $40,000.

A mining engineer who was educated at the University of Minnesota is now working in a mine at Butte, Mont. The banker received a thorough commercial education, and then Mr. Mack set him up in business in a bank in Elgin, N. D. Mr. Mack says that if any of his boys wants to start in business he always gives them enough money to begin. He recently bought an eighty acre farm for one of them.

A dentist lives in Chicago. He had four years at the University of Valparaiso. Mr. Mack says this boy married a rich nurse.

One boy who studied to be a lawyer lost his health after his graduation from the University of Minnesota law school, so could not practice, and is now employed as chief of the Minnesota state fish and game commission, with headquarters at St. Paul.

Self educated and quiet, Mr. Mack would not be thought responsible for one of the most unusual philanthropies in the world.

NO PAINTER'S COLIC FOR HIM.

Bill For "Tint" Makes Bachelor Issue Leap Year Declaration.

Elwood, N. J.—Robert W. Hunt, a retired college instructor, received a letter recently from a neighboring town containing a bill for 40 cents for "tint" purchased by "Mrs. Hunt." Hunt is a good looking bachelor with a steady income, and the inquisitive element of Elwood at once interpreted the post-office bulletin in terms of leap year possibilities.

To quiet the buzzing gossip, Hunt has issued the following statement:

"We have had several offers of marriage, and one or two ladies have assumed we were engaged without making any offer, and it is with fear and trembling we pass each day of this year, which is divisible by four. However, when Mrs. Hunt does arrive she shall come as nature painted her, with eyes like the heavens, with cheeks like the rose and with lips like the damp of crushed strawberry. She shall have no need of 'tint.' When we want a kiss we don't propose to mess through two or three coats of paint to get it."

Dogs Tree Insane Man.

Oregon City, Ore.—Peter Brevio, aged forty-three, an Italian, was treed with the aid of bloodhounds arrested and brought back to Oregon City and committed to the State Hospital For the Insane. Brevio lived in a hollow tree, and his diet consisted of roots, berries and what food he could find around neighboring farmhouses. He stole an ax from a farmhouse and passed much of his time chopping down trees. A number of men of the district determined to arrest Brevio and went to his tree home. The Italian ran away. Dogs were then put on his trail.

When the wars and rumors of wars are over, the torpedo and the aero bomb at rest, and the state department on a vacation, will the monotony of life pall or otherwise?

The year 1915 broke the record for the production of gold; also for the burning up of what gold stands for in the civilized world.

The reported boom in yacht construction, unequaled in number for at least two decades, cannot be attributed directly to the war.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—The Republican Publicity Association, through its President, Hon. Jonathan Bourne, Jr., today gave out the following statement at its Washington Headquarters:

'That the Democratic tariff law was a sledge hammer blow to the American farmer is amply proved by statistics compiled from official figures. The farmer was the pet target of the Democracy when framing this bill. Democratic stump orators had declaimed to the multitude that the Republican tariff was responsible for the high cost of living, and, acting on this theory they placed foodstuffs on the free list, along with other products on the farm. The cost of living went up, instead of down, but what was the result on importations of farm products?

"The records show that, five classes of farm products considered, imports for the first ten months of the Democratic tariff law exceeded those for the similar period under the Republican tariff law of $102,000,000, or nearly 142 per cent, and for the similar ten months with the war performing in some respects the function of a protective tariff, imports of farm products increased 100 per cent over the Republican period. The five classes considered are meat, and dairy products, wood, farm animals (including cattle, hogs, poultry and sheep), eggs, and products of the soil, such as grains, vegetables, hay, plants, etc.

"The Democratic tariff law took effect October 4th, 1913. The war began July 31, 1914. From October, 1912, to July 31, 1913, a ten months' period under the Republican law, our imports of the above-mentioned products amounted to $72,700,000. From October 1913, to July 31, 1914, imports of these products under the Democratic law amounted to $174,600,000. Bear in mind that this was a normal period, not complicated by war. From October, 1914, to July 31, 1915, a full war period under the Democratic law, we imported these products to the value of $149,000,000.

"Notwithstanding the enormous competition to which our farmers have been subjected from without, prices on most farm products have been high. But the agricultural class of the country knows full well that prices have been high because we were feeding the armies of Europe. But so, likewise, have prices been high in Australia, Bermuda, Canada, New Zealand, and the countries of South America. Twenty millions of men are under arms in Europe. They have left the producer and joined the consumer class, and these soldiers must be amply fed.

"Indications now are that the war will cease within a year. Very shortly thereafter the streams of food products now pouring into Europe will be checked. Rigid economies will then be enforced by the impoverished nations; the shackles of embargo will be struck off, the huge surplus of Russian wheat will be set free. Our exports of foodstuffs to Europe will dwindle, and those from other food producing countries will, to a large extent, be deflected to the greatest consuming country in the world, the United States, if we are so unfortunate as to be laboring under free trade on farm products at that time. Farmers had best consider this when they vote in November.

During Course of Evening Generals, Colonels, Majors, Captains and Lieutenants Exchange Greetings—New York Hotel Made Over to Represent Military Reservation on the Hudson.

New York.—From the Atlantic to the Pacific West Pointers recently celebrated the one hundred and fourteenth anniversary of the founding of the Military academy at West Point. In New York more than 300 dined at the Hotel Astor, as many more dined in San Francisco, while about 200 sat about the tables in Chicago. In lesser numbers the sons of the Point gathered in St. Louis, in New Orleans, in Galveston, in San Antonio, while in far away Honolulu and Manila other hundreds assembled and sang the anthem "Hail, Alma Mater, Dear," and yelled the famous "Rah! rah! rah!" of the "army."

Through the courtesy of the American Telephone company the diners in New York, Chicago and San Francisco were linked together, and in the course of the evening generals and colonels and majors and captains and lieutenants exchanged greetings and cracked jokes at one another's expense across the continent. For instance, Colonel John N. Bellinger of Governors Island sympathized with his old cadet chum Holabird in Chicago because of the latter's thinning locks, while Holabird retorted by asking the South Carolina colonel why it was that his forty odd summers did not make him "less noisy than was the case when you were the noisiest youngster at West Point."

Major General J. Franklin Bell, commanding the western department of the army, with headquarters in San Francisco, who was the ranking officer at the Pacific coast function, talked with Colonel J. C. F. Tillson in New York and was surprised to learn that the colonel was not one of the "lucky chaps" chasing Villa. Had the United States kept Vera Cruz and had Frederick Funston remained in command there, General Bell, who was relieved a year ago of the border command by the little Kansan, would probably be directing operations from San Antonio.

Brigadier General R. C. Young, who was also in San Francisco, asked Colonel W. H. Hart, who dined in New York, some very personal questions, while General Charles King, the famous army novelist, who dined with the crowd in Chicago, was overheard by the New Yorkers to tell Colonel W. H. Hunter, who was in Chicago, that he might write a story based on the pursuit of Pancho Villa. Lieutenant Phil Mathews of Fort Totten also got a word in and told Lieutenant A. J. Davis, who was in San Francisco, that West Point was sure to beat Annapolis again next fall.

The grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, in which the New York dinner was served, was made over to represent West Point.

Among those at the dinner were Colonel C. P. Townsley, the superintendent of the Military academy; Major General George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama canal zone; Colonel John L. Chamberlain, inspector general of the eastern department; Colonel Edwin F. Glenn, chief of staff on Governors island; Captain Halstead Dorey, aid on the staff of Major General Leonard Wood; Colonels C. P. Echols, Samuel E. Tillman of the academic staff of West Point; Colonel O. B. Mitcham and Major W. I. (Texas) Westervelt, the ordnance experts from Sandy Hook; ex-Police Commissioners Theodore A. Bingham and Douglas I. McKay, Captain Matthew B. Hanna, Brigadier General H. F. Hodges, commanding the North Atlantic coast artillery district; Colonel John M. Carson, Captain George R. Goethals, Captain H. J. Koehler, Colonel C. M. Truitt, Colonel W. G. Haan, Colonel Beverly W. Dunn, Loyal Farragut, Major W. J. Hawkins, Colonel Delamere Skerrett, Captain G. W. Beavers and William C. Muschenheim, the last named the only diner from civilian life.

Scene from "BONDWOMEN" At the Quirk Theatre Today.

A domestic problem, vexing perhaps a majority of families in this country, forms the basic theme for the plot in "Bondwomen" a George Kleine photo-drama released through Kleine-Edison Feature Service and offered at the Quirk Theatre today. Interwoven with this problem in the story of a husband trying hard to do the right thing for his family, but failing utterly because of his insistence in supervising household expenditures and assuming a major share of domestic responsibilities that most women consider their especial care. A drug addicted younger brother adds to his worries and through his hideous lies he is at last seperated from wife and child. Most of this domestic tragedy came obout as a result of the husband's policy with regard to household expenses and responsibilities. See balance of program in display adv.

"BOBBY" LOST HIS HEAD AND WAS INJURED

In the excitement incident to the Governor's arrival in this city, Robert Neyhart, the diminutive messenger boy, was injured yesterday afternoon in a collision between his bicycle and an automobile owned and driven by William Guernsey.

Bobby was thrown heavily to the pavement, one of the wheels of the auto passing over his right leg, and his bicycle was demolished. Guernsey was turning the automobile around and failed to observe the youngster who was placed in the car and taken to Dr. Haviland's office Later in the evening he was removed to his home. An examination proved that no bones were broken but the injured leg is badly bruised.

Mr. Guernsey has offered to pay Bobby's every claim for damage, including medical attention and time lost by the boy.

SONS OF ITALY RECEIVE CHARTER

Big Celebration Will Usher New Society Into Ranks of Local Fraternal Orders.

Arrangements have been made by the Sons of Italy to hold meetings in the Woodmen's new lodge rooms in the Tucker Block. This was announced at the meeting of theo rder which was held Sunday in the temporary meeting rooms at 114 Oneida street.

It was also stated that the local order has received full recognition from the parent organization, the executive department of which is in New York city. In connection with this action, which was made on Mar. 20th, there will be held in this city a formal recognition of the event.'

Tentative plans have been made for the celebration in connection with the installation of officers. At that time there will be a delegation of Sons here from Oswego to the number of 436, the visitors to be entertained at a banquet, with a program of speaking and music, which will ec- from the Oswego order, including Raffaele Amaraso, Grand Master, will attend the next meetingof the order.

Loggia Umberto II Principe di Piemonte, No. 521, Sons of Italy, is the name taken by the Fulton lodge, of which Frank Zait, is grand master. The other officers are: Angelo Cincotta, 1st assistant master, Salvatore Manitta, 2nd assistant grand master, Michele Louise, speaker Guiseppe Rosetti, corresponding secretary, Guiseppe Collavini, financial secretary, Guiseppe Cincotta, treasurer; trustees, Antonio Trapani, Vittorio Ranieri, Carmelo Colloca, Mi[illegible] Carmelo, Pasquale Ristaguo; de[illegible] Gaetano Mirabito, Antonio Pa[illegible] Agostino V[illegible] and [illegible]

FULTON WOMEN ARE ASKED TO AID

There's an opportunity for some local people who possess a heart to express themselves.

In West 2nd street, number 22, there's a Polish mother with her brood of six little ones, the youngest a mere babe. The father died last winter and the mother is now ill. Yesterday a Polish man visited the city and found two of these children on the street who expressed to the stranger in their baby Polish tongue that they were hungry.

As a result the Vienna bakery was visited and later the two little waifs trudged up the street each bearing a bag of doughnuts, above which their wistful little faces smiled contentedly.

Commissioner Somers has seen that fuel and some food and clothing was supplied. More food, more clothing and the kindly visit of a good woman are all needed in that shabby little home.

PROGRESS MADE ON McGINNIS' NEW HOTEL

An increased force of workmen is engaged on the new hotel building at Hannibal and West 1st sts., on the site formerly occupied by the Royal Hotel which was destroyed by fire several months ago. The first floor of the new structure is of brick while the upper story will be build of wood.

ELKS WILL INSTALL THEIR NEW OFFICERS

The newly elected officers of Fulton Lodge, No. 830, B. O. P. Elks, will be installed at the Thursday evening meeting, which has been designated as "Roll Call Night."

A number of important business matters will be discussed and plans made for holding an Easter ball.

VILLA HEADING FOR THE SOUTH

El Paso—Francisco Villa, unwounded and accompanied by only eight men, was at Satevo, fifty miles south of Chilhuahua City, two days ago.

This informatio wasr eceived here today from Mexican sources which have proved usually reliable in the past.

If this information is correct, it bears out previous reports that Villa is headed toward Parral and is leading his American pursuers by at least sixty miles. The nearest point to Satevo which the American troops are known to have reached is San Antonio, ,sixty miles to the northwest.

Shortly after this information was received today, General Gavira, the Carranza commander at Juarez, flanked by Consul Garcia, declared all lines of communication had been cut.

Villa's plan to take Chilhuahua was rudely interrupted on Saturday night. He was then at San Andres, just forty miles due west of the capital. He learned that a part of Colonel George A. Dodd's column was at San Antonio, just thirty miles further back on the Northwestern railroad. and made a hurried departure.

n an effort again to mislead the lead the American forces Villa divided the force of several hundred men in his command into small bands. He

City in Gala Attire Entertained the Governor, the Speaker of the Assembly and Congressman Mott. 'Twas a Day Long to be Remembered in the Annals of Fulton's Chamber of Commerce

A liberal response was given to the appeal of the Chamber of Commerce by the merchants and citizens in displaying the National colors yesterday, in honor of Governor Whitman's visit. Residents throughout the city, irrespective of whether the parade would pass their homes or not, flung Old Glory to the breezes, and the business section on both sides of the river were brighter for the decorations, which, in many instances, were draped around portraits of the Governor.

Early in the afternoon the Empire United brought into the city a carload of Oswego militiamen who fel linto line behind the Elks Band, the marchers heading for the O. & W. station where the Governor and his escorts, Messrs. W. P. Morin, M. A. Stranahan, Mayor Lewis and L. W. Richardson, were met on the train arriving at 5 o'clock. The streets in the vicinity of the station were filled with people, who seemed to feel the spirit expressed by one man. He asked the people to cheer the Governor, but the only response he met was a little hand-clapping by some newspaper correspondents, and a gruff, inelegant "Wha' tell's the use o' [illegible]'?" The enthusiastic one subsided and went back to his work.

From the O. & W. station the line of march proceeded across the lower bridge, south on West 1st st. to Broadway, over Broadway bridge and north on the 1st st. "bad lands" to the Quirk building where a public reception was held. Once more General Apathy greeted the Governor and his party, for when the troops were lined up and the band was playing an inspiring air the large crowd of sight seers had another chance to hail the chief, but silence reigned supreme. presumably because it is sometimes golden.

The Masonic headquarters were uncomfortably filled by the diners, but at that the first annual banquet of Fulton's Chamber of Commerce is today pronounced one huge success, due in great measure to the indefatigable efforts of the Secretary, D. S. Hollenga.

Mr. Frank Flander made a capable toastmaster, he calling upon the Governor for the first speech. Mr. Whitman complimented the city and the Chamber of Commerce, adding some fine words of praise to the work performed by Thaddeus C. Sweet in the Legislature of the State. Speaker Sweet responded by saying nice things about the Governor.

Congressman Mott's t alk on "Preparedness" brought from Francis E. Cullen, Esq., a denial of the necessity of making haste in creating a greater army and navy. Mr. Mott explained the work being done at Washington from the Federal standpoint and advocated strengthening the army and navy for defense. He said he believed that the Wyoming plan of teaching military tactics in the public schools to be the most feasible.

With the guests, the aides and Reception Committee, at the speaker's table were Congressman L. W. Mott, Francis E. Cullen, Frederick Shepherd, Torrey Ball and Lieutenants Martin and Barnes, all of Oswego; Dr. C. S. Robertson, N. L. Whitaker and L. W. Emerick; John R. Clancy, former congressman, of Syracuse, Assemblyman Edwin Machold of Watertown. W. P. Morin presided.

Music by the Elks Orchestra was furnished throughout the dinner, which consumed two hours.

Governor Whitman's address was as follows:

It is a great privilege and I believe for one placed as is the Chief Executive of this great State, a duty, so far as is consistent with the labor and responsibilities imposed upon him, to meet and to know the various sections and the varied activities in which the ten millions of our people are constantly engaged.

It is impossible for one man to meet personally and exchange views with all of his constituents in this vast dominion which we call New York, but I can testify to the pleasure and to the helpfulness, which I appreciate most highly, offered by the opportunity of attending these gatherings of merchants associations,

FUNCTIONS OF THE GOOD

Adjutant General Stotesbury has registered opposition to the bill to create a State police because, with slight changes in the law, the National Guard could do all the work which the new force would be created to handle. No more mistaken conception of the situation could be expressed. One of the chief arguments for the creation of a constabulary—one of the chief merits of the system—is that it would free the National Guards from the police work which it now is called on to perform. If there is any value in the State militia, it is in its readiness and ability to perform military duties, and military duties alone. That value has indisputely been lessened by the fact that the guard is now a semi-police body. Desirable young men who might enlist for militory training in a body recognized as a secondary army refuse to enlist in a body liable to service in suppressing strike riots and doing police patrol work in emercenies. If by reason of such changes in the law as Adjutant General Stotesbury suggests the militia, or picked companies of it, were liable to assignment to tours of duty in patroling country roads, to service in arresting poachers, in fighting forest fires, in pursuing and arresting post-office robbers in rural sections, in serving warrants for sheriffs, there would be mighty little military character left in it. These and many kindred functions comprise the duty of the State police. These are their daily portion all the year round.—New York Tribune.

"THE REGULAR"

He has no Kipling to sing in verse and write in prose the story of his work done "all in the day." His life and his views on life are to most men a sealed book. To the idle and the careless the uniform he wears and cherishes is too often a thing for scorn, at best a thing for tolerance. And yet when serious business is to be done, business that calls for risk of life in the doing and all that man holds dear, "The Regular" is there.

From your theatres and your dance halls and other places of amusement he and that uniform not infrequently find themselves cold shouldered out. Too frequently his record of splendid service for you and your country is a barrier against employment when he seeks to take his place as a member of your community. But when and where he is needed most in time of need "The Regular" is there.

He is there in Mexico today going about his work and your work in the old familiar way. He is not out after glory, knows that his name is not going to get into the news dispatches, not at all jealous of the officer man whose name does—for he loves those under whom he serves, and they, knowing him best, love him.

He is doing his work well in Mexico, as he has done it everywhere. He is doing it under Funston and Pershing and "Old Dodd" as he did it under Crook and Miles and the many others who might be mentioned, but need not be. The risk he is taking, the hardships he is undergoing, are yours.

Hats off to "The Regular," whatever the color of his shirt.—N. Y. Herald.

THE NATIONAL GUARD AND WORKINGMEN

Senator Elon R. Brown, in a short but pretty sensible speech on preparedness, intimated that we are not a country loving people; that the spirit of '76 is dead in us, and that our young men no longer thrill with patriotic ardor.

As sensible as the senator generally is when he gets away from party politics, he is away off on all of this. The people refuse to get excited when there is nothing to get excited about. But when a real issue is raised and there is need for excitement, patriotic ardor, and devotion to the flag the senator will see as enthusiastic an exhibition of all this as could have been made in any period of our history.

We have not as large a percentage of outdoor people as formerly, but we have all in all a more athletic body of young men than at any time in our history, and a body that will be as quick to enlist and will prove as effective in soldiery as any country in the world can show.

There are good reasons for the National Guard not filling up its rank, Remove these reasons and the ranks will be readily filled and the country will have right at hand material for the best army in the world. As long as a man in the National Guard is liable to be called upon to shoot down other men engaged in a strike, working men will not enter the ranks of the guard. Just take that fact into serious consideration whenever you are considering the task of preparing an army to meet a foreign foe.—Albany Times Union.

AUTO MEN TO MAKE GASOLINE

A group of big automobile manufacturers has decided to go into the business of making gasoline and lubricating oil, to protect their own industry against the alarming rise in prices. It is announced that a New York corporation is to be formed with a capital of $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, and other companies may be organized elsewhere. The leaders of the movement say that their only desire is to eliminate the "selfish interest" which leads present oil refiners to take advantage of world-wide trade conditions and charge virtually what they please for their product.

The whole public is affected by the present situation, and will give hearty support to any undertaking meant to provide relief. It is estimated that the public is paying today for gasoline at the rate of $157,000,000 a year more than it was paying last August. If competition can reduce the price of gasoline as much as one cent a gallon it will save the nation more than $17,000,000 a year. It remains to be seen, however, what competitive effect a $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 corporation can have on the powerfully entrenched Standard Oil Company, and on the independent interests that thrive in the shadow of the Standard Oil, following its scale of prices.

PROFIT IN OLD PAPER

Waste paper is worth money. Its value has gone up enormously. With the paper pulp supply from Norway cut off and the export of linen and cotton rags from England forbidden, American manufacturers find it harder to get the raw material for turning out 15,000 tons of paper a day. And a bulletin issued by the federal department of agriculture is authority for the statement that a very large part of that 15,000 tons could be used over again, for making some kind of paper, if people would save it instead of burning it up or throwing it away.

Twenty-five dollars a ton is the price quoted for old paper in Chicago. It varies in other cities according to local conditions of the paper trade, but it is worth something everywhere—more than twice as much as before the war. The woman who saves her old magazines, newspapers, etc. has the alluring prospect of getting 1 1-4 cents a pound for them.

Various paper manufacturers have established waste paper departments to arrange for buying old paper directly from housewives. Chicago boys are said to be going into the business of collecting waste paper from the friends to pay the expenses of a summer vacation trip. The women of a church in Oak Park, a Chicago suburb, started a paper-saving club and in a little while had cleared $100.

Many Defects Found in Credits Measure

Myron T. Herrick, one-time Ambassador to France, has written to T. E. Monks, secretary of the Cuyahoga County Bankers' Association, attacking the bill introduced by Senator H. F. Hollis, of New Hampshire, and known as the democratic party's rural credits measure, as "useless, defective and dangerous." Mr. Herrick submits reasons why he believes the bill should not become a law and gives his own recommendations for land credit legislation.

He says that the Hollis bill "contravenes the spirit of American government in its plan to enact special as distinguished from general laws and to create a federal bureau clothed with both executive and judicial powers and authorized to establish a system through which, when Congress is not in session, it may abstract money for use of private individuals from the public Treasury."

He tells of the great danger of the abuse of the federal bureau's extraordinary powers and draws attention to many other defects which would be likely to follow the right of such a bureau to utilize the credit of the United States and to borrow money without any limit in amount or time and at a rate as high as five per cent a year.

Mr. Herrick says further:

"The terms imposed by the Hollis bill for borrowing are too severe. A borrower must spend five per cent of the loan in share subscriptions, pledge his shares, and give a mortgage on property of a value two or more times greater than the amount of the loan. If the money comes through a federal land bank, he must live upon and actually cultivate the mortgaged property and use the loan only for a specific purpose. He cannot dismortgage the property for five years, nor freely sell it as long as any of the loan remains unpaid, while foreclosure may be brought at once if he dies, defaults, or dissatisfies some secret inspector. Moreover, he must become a member of a national farm loan association and assume double or unlimited liability for all other loans made through the system. These terms ore more harsh and oberous than now exacted from borrowers."

OSWEGO TEACHERS GET VACATIONS AFTER EASTER

Oswego— The Department of Education has granted the petition of the teachers ni the public schools and the Easter vacation will come a week later than was intended. The date is now from the 20th of April until the fist of May, six school days. The first dates announced brought the vacation into Holy Week and nearly all teachers objected and petitioned for the change, which was made.

The passing of J. T. Trowbridge, the poet and story writer, seems to mark the close of an era peculiar to American letters. A child of the log cabin age who worked his way up by slow stages, he was a representative of a class not, however, confined to literature, which is commonly supposed to have had its day, never to be [illegible]nced. Trowbridge's work outlived its author in popularity. The personality has long been forgotten by the generation for which a new [illegible] springs up every year. And perhaps interest in the new idols will endure because they will continue to appeal as Whitcomb Riley is doing. One lesson from Trowbridge, Riley and the rest is that the day for such development is not done, as so often alleged. Jack London began at the bottom; Cy Warman was a locomotive driver; Masefield, the very newest, a common sailor. The times are not out of joint for growing up in the midst of but in spite of hardship. Widespread wealth and higher education increase the number of the fortunate born, but the toiler of today has advantages not enjoyed by the boy Trowbridge and his contemporaries. All the appliances of culture are at hand and mediums for trying out the genius of the fledgling

The disclosures in the Baff murder case in New York city show up money madness in a most abnormal phase. It was a business competition fight, and when the approach of the holiday season would furnish Baff an opportunity to hurt his competitors they hired gun men to do him to death. This was the spirit of the bandit transferred to the supposed higher walks of civilization. The killing of the gambler Rosenthal a couple of years ago was the result of a quarrel among criminals of whom the worst could be expected, but the responsibility of the Baff murder seems to rest upon scores of dealers who blandly pose before the public as reputable business men.

More and more England is calling upon women to help out in war. In the days of the suffragette outbreaks women were taunted with their inability to go to war. A nation at war soon discovers that the struggle is not confined to the hostile front. The women of England have been drafted into various commercial and manufacturing industries for which they were fit, from the beginning of the war. Then followed their organization into a corps of farm hands, with a distinctive uniform and badge to indicate war service. Lack of a war record can no longer be alleged against the sex in England.

Since the opening of the big war United States exports have increased enormously, 70 per cent being the increase reported for 1915. The volume of exports for 1915 was over $3,500,000,000. For the same period the home trade of the United States, according to reliable statistics, was $500,000,000,000. That is about 100 times the volume of foreign trade in its banner year. These figures indicate that the United States is its own best customer and the foreign trade at its best a mere bagatelle.

If we can't have peace to talk about we can at least talk about the peace we once had in connection with the proposed memorial bridge across the Potomac. It will commemorate the reunion of the sections through the peace of 1865.

Emperor Franz Josef is the only world figure who has died oftener than the crown prince of Germany and his late duskiness, Menelek, king of Abyssinia.

No doubt many Americans would voluntarily quit Mexico if they could hit the trail of an underground railroad through the bandit zone.

The maxim "All's fair in love and war" doesn't seem now to be the same happy retort we smiled over up to a couple of years ago.

Universal training would put numberless home exercise and setting up inventions out of business by making them superfluous.

Should a Man Do As He Pleases With His Own Property

Excerpts from a Forcible Plea for the Protection of Residential Districts, Published as an Editorial Under the Above Heading in a Recent Issue of "Baltimore," Issued by the Municipality of Baltimore, Md.

The community itself gives value to property. The very fact of the community's existence is what multiplies the demands for land. That is why land is expensive in cities and cheap in the country. That is why land in big, growing cities is more valuable than land in small, sluggish cities.

If, then, it be true that it is not the owner himself who gives value to this land, how far should this very important fact modify the owner's freedom of use? In view of the fact that all property, in the midst of a community, assumes a value in harmony with the nature of that community, isn't the community itself entitled to some consideration? If a corner lot, in a given locality, is valuable because of the very nature of that locality—should the whole locality itself be sacrificed to gratify the wish, whim or selfish profit of some individual owner?

Very true, a man has rights. He ought to have rights. But isn't a community also entitled to some rights? As a matter of fact, should not the rights of a community be superior to the rights of a single unit in that community?

There are certain commercial uses to which property is daily being put. All of the uses are important. In many cases they are a necessity. But that doesn't alter the fact that the nature of these issues may be such as to make them ruinous to residential values if placed in such neighborhoods. Should this be permitted without let or hindrance? Is every valuable spot in the city to be subjected to the continuous possibility of commercial assassination? Is every man's home to run the daily hazard of being robbed of its value by the unrestrained actions of some inconsiderate lot-holder? Are residential values to be made the hopeless and unprotected victims of commercial greed?

As a matter of fact, every man who invests in urban property, invests his money in 'the effects" of community influence; not solely in the naked land itself. The land would be valueless without the community effects. That is why it is correct to make the statement that the whole property question pivots on community influence. Why, then, should the community not have some positive, defendable rights? Why should restrictions and regulations be howled down as un-American in their nature when such restrictions and regulations are for the sole purpose of giving peace, comfort and general protection to the "community" at large?

The multiplication of commercial facilities in a city is indispensable. Nobody denies that. But is it necessary to permit mercantile and industrial extension to proceed along ruthless, haphazard, inconsiderate lines? Nobody denies the propriety of making business expansion easy within a city's limits. But is the matter is home life of a community deserving of just a little encouragement?

A city without wise restrictions and regulations is an enemy to its own residential investment.—American City Magazine.

PEARL WHITE

Pearl White, who will star in Pathe's next serial, "The Iron Claw," says the highest compliment of her career was paid by this serial being written for her. It was the result of multitudes of letters from all over the country asking for her to be starred in another serial.

MAKERS OF "HAZEL KIRKE" HAD TO BUILD A STONE GRIST MILL —PATHE'S FAMOUS PLAY DEMANDED A CLASS OF BUILDING NOW EXTINCT.

When the Whartons began to make "Hazel Kirke" for the Pathe Gold Rooster program, they were confronted with the necessity of finding an old stone mill with waterwheel in working condition. They sought everywhere, but the use of steam and electricity had apparently eliminated the picturesque buildings so common fifty years ago. A structure of painted wood or canvas was out of the question, as they wanted realism. The consequence was that at Ludlowville, N. Y., not far from Ithaca, they hired masons to put up a real structure of stone, modelled on an old engraving of a one-time grist-mill in New England. The Wharton mill was put up on the banks of a charming stream, with sufficient power to turn the huge wheel their carpenters installed. The result was a triumph of the picturesque and the scenes showing the mill are among the most pleasing of the picture. A fine cast, headed by Pearl White, Wm. Riley Hatch, Bruce McRae, Creighton Hale, Florence Elmey and Allen Murnane, was used in this picture, which will bring fond memories to play goers the country over. "Hazel Kirke," on the boards, has survived the changes of a generation, a sure proof that the qualities that make a play endure, must include cleanliness, heart interest of the less complex type and freedom from "problem" discussion.

Hatch, as Dunstan Kirke, most ably portrays the stern yet loving, old miller. Allen Murnane, a most excellent actor, is worthy of mention as Carringford, while Pearl White, as Hazel, does some of the best work of her career. This Gold Rooster Play is deserving of being ranked as one of the best features of a twelvemonth.

MACKENZIE DIRECTS A PICTURE WHILE DRESSED IN SCOTCH KILTS — PATHE PRODUCER GIVES THE BIG WOODS A SENSATION.

Donald Mackenzie, who produced Fred Jackson's "Precious Packet" for Pathe, recently directed a scene while dressed in Scotch kilts, and standing barelegged in the snow. "Mac" took his company to Maine and while filming some logging scenes as required by the scenario fell into the icy water three successive times, putting every suit of conventional clothing which he had with him completely out of business. "Mac's" mascot is a complete Highland outfit, sporran, kilts, befeathered hat and all, and this he carries with him everywhere. Shivering in his wet clothes he took to the kilts as a last resort. Probably never before has a Maine logging crew seen the bonnie costume of Scotland worn in an artist's illustration.

PICTURE HELD UP BY AN ASTRONOMICAL RARITY; A PATHE COMPANY RUNS UP AGAINST SOMETHING NEW.

George Fitzmaurice, who produced for Pathe "Big Jim Garrity," adapted from the A. H. Woods play of the same name, ran up against a new kind of an obstacle while down south recently. He took his players—Robert Edeson, Lyster Chambers, Charles Compton and Carl Harbaugh—to a small town a few miles from Atlanta, Ga. The weather was vile, and day after day was passed in idleness at the hotel waiting for the sun to shine. Finally the clouds broke away and all hands made a rush for the open. Work had hardly been started before it began to get dark—too dark for good photography, and yet the sun was still shining. Everyone was mystified until a small boy was seen gazing at the sun through a smoked glass. The mystery was solved—the sun was in an eclipse!

ELDERLY "RED CIRCLE" ACTOR OLD ONLY IN YEARS

Daniel Gilfether Can Beat Many a Younger Man in Athletic Prowess.

Daniel Gilfether, the venerable actor who plays "Circle Jim Borden," in the Pathe and Balboa serial, "The Red Circle," has carried a life insurance policy for over a quarter of a century. Lately he received from the insurance company an inquiry as to his health, and if he were still able to work. Mr. Gilfether replied as follows: "Take a look at the first two installments of 'The Red Circle' and you'll get your answer. In them you'll see me not only riding a bucking horse, but doing a hundred yard foot race in about twelve seconds. If you are still unconvinced, see me in the Pathe 'Who Pays?' series. I carry a woman up a flight of stairs, and am the chief factor in as lively a fight as you ever saw." Despite his sixty-four years the major is as lively as a cricket and always on the job.

"IRON CLAW" ACTORS SHOW NERVE.

Will Plunge in an Auto From Bridge Into the Water.

Edward Jose, who is producing "The Iron Claw," the Pathe serial, is lying awake nights scheming the best ways to get some of the spectacular effects demanded by the scenario. Each episode presents new problems that are handled with the utmost difficulty. The one for this week requires him to drive a motor car containing five persons from a draw bridge headlong into the water. Furthermore, he can't use dummies. The five unfortunates who must make the plunge include Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis. The death-defying dip will be pulled off at Toms River, N. J.

SOUTH SEA ISLAND COLONY IN AMERICA

Strange Community Is Discovered in Utah.

Salt Lake City.—Discovered—the strangest community in the United States.

It is a community of south sea islanders. A thousand in number, they are now settled in the Skull valley in Utah, between the Great Salt lake and the Nevada line.

There are Maoris, Samoans and Hawaiians living and farming in perfect harmony, intermarrying and raising children.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago the older men of this strange colony came from across the Pacific, some as sailors, some as stowaways.

They wandered in small groups about California, and some of them came across the Sierras into Idaho and Utah. They were starving when a group of business men decided to help them.

They secured 25,000 acres of land in the Skull valley, collected all the south sea natives that they could find and established them in a colony which they call Iosepa.

An American farmer was selected as superintendent. Each man was paid good wages at the start, and as soon as they were capable they were allowed to buy half acre lots and cottages at actual cost.

Now there is a new generation growing up. Some of the boys have gone from the grade school and taken full courses at the State Agricultural college. Several of the girls have become stenographers in Salt Lake City. A number have graduated from the University of Utah.

RETURNED BABY'S BANK.

Thief Robbed the House, but Brought That Back.

Sierra Vista, Cal.—A thief with a conscience recently entered the home of Clark Rubido here and after decamping with valuables amounting to $100 returned to the burglarized house and deposited a child's bank containing $2 in pennies, which had been part of the loot, on the front porch.

The Rubido family visited friends in Los Angeles that day, and about noon a neighbor, Mrs. Caroline Martin, saw a well dressed young man carrying a suit case walk up to the front door of the Rubido home, fumble with the lock a moment and walk in.

Mrs. Martin thought the stranger was probably a friend of the Rubidos, and when the young man reappeared some time after, still carrying the suit case, she told him that the Rubido family was passing the day in the city. The young man thanked her and hurried on.

Half an hour later Mrs. Martin saw the young man come back and deposit something on the front porch of the house.

When the Rubidos returned they found that the pleasant faced young man had carried away all their silver, several articles of jewelry and $30. The baby's penny bank, which had been returned, was about the only movable valuable not taken.

"The dog," said the scientific gentleman, "sometimes steers himself with his tail."

"Uses it to guide his wandering bark, does he?" asked the irrepressible humorist.

WOMAN AND BABY HID DEEP IN MINE

"Just Sat There in Dark and Prayed," She Says.

BANDITS PASSED ABOVE HER

Stayed 1,500 Feet Underground For Two Days With Little Food and Waited Until the Danger Had Passed—Men In Community Were Away at the Time.

Mrs. Wallace Rogers of Detroit, Mich., arrived in El Paso the other day with her fifteen-month-old infant. She told how she had hidden with her baby from Mexican bandits for two days 1,000 feet and more down in the shaft of an abandoned mine near Cananea.

Mrs. Rogers' husband is interested in mining property near Cananea, but was away from home when the little colony fled on the approach of the bandits.

"The whole country around where I was living," said Mrs. Rogers, "was filled with abandoned mines, the shafts of some of which had been sunk 2,000 feet or more. Most of the American men were away when we heard of the approach of the bandits.

"We fled to one of the abandoned mines, carrying whatever food we could snatch up. One of the men took my baby, and we crawled down an abandoned shaft by ladders until we reached the 1,000 foot level. Here we remained for twenty-four hours.

Go Down Deeper.

"Finally, as we heard no shooting, one of the men ventured to the surface. He reported everything quiet, and we returned to our homes.

"We had hardly reached there, however, when we again heard the bandits were coming. This time we went down to the 1,500 foot level, where we remained another day. We were in a little spot about ten feet square. We had no lights of any kind, and I had only a couple of cans of condensed milk to feed my baby.

"We just sat there on the floor in the blackness and prayed. At last we could stand it no longer. I think we would have all gone mad if we had stayed there. We crawled up into the sunshine. There was no sign of the bandits, and we made our way safely to Cananea, where we got a train."

Mrs. Rogers declared the Mexican bandits not only had no respect for the American flag, but that it actually incited them to outrages. The only flag that offered any protection at all, she said, was the British flag.

Union Jack Respected.

"I am bitterly ashamed to admit it," she said, "but whenever trouble started we began to hunt for a 'union jack.' It was by no means a bullet proof shield, but it was the only flag I ever saw the Mexicans paid any deference to.

"There was a young Englishman who committed suicide where I was. The Mexicans thought he was an American, and they hurriedly dug a shallow hole and were going to put him away without ceremony when the officer in command overheard some one say: 'I wish we knew where his mother is so we could notify her. She is somewhere in England, but I do not know where.'

"The officer stopped the burial and asked if the suicide was an Englishman. When he learned he was he ordered the body preserved and tried for four days to get in touch with an English consul."

Refugees continue to arrive in El Paso and at other points along the border, but the majority of them refuse to discuss conditions in Mexico in any way, as they fear their property in that country would be destroyed if they aroused the resentment of the Mexicans.

CUTS OFF AIDE'S FINGERS.

British Aviator Performs Remarkable Stunt While Under Fire.

The heroism of two British air men was demonstrated recently when one of them amputated the fingers of another while under fire.

Lieutenant S. and Captain C. D. were being chased by a German aeroplane. The British aeroplane began to descend, and the Germans fired, wounding the captain in the right arm and smashing two of his fingers. While the captain steered with his left hand Lieutenant S. amputated the two fingers.

The air men came down to safety, but as they had no more gasoline in their tank they were unable to set fire to their machine, which fell into the hands of the Germans.

IMPROVED ARTIFICIAL HAND.

Successful Invention to Replace Members Lost by Soldiers.

Two new types of artificial arms with hands are shown at the Academy of Sciences in Paris. One is for heavy work, with fingers like the claws of a lobster. The other has articulated fingers, enabling the hand to reproduce closely the action of natural fingers.

Successful experiments were made in the presence of members of the academy by two men, each of whom had lost an arm. One of them sawed through a beam of wood without difficulty, and the other played a violin.

TAMES WILD DUCKS.

Madison (Wis.) Resident Has a Flock of Nearly 200 of Them.

Madison, Wis.—Wild ducks may be domesticated and raised on the farm as well as tame ones. The plan has been tried by J. C. Halpin of this city for the past three years with success.

Last fall he had a flock of nearly 200, and when the cold weather came on they took their regular "spin" in the skies and then returned to the yards. The wild duck sells for more than the tame variety because of the flavor of the meat.

The first birds were kept in captivity by clipping the wings, but the young ducks are as easily handled as domestic ones.

These domesticated mallards retain many of the instincts peculiar to wild nature. Let one mallard start limping and in less than ten minutes, unless something is done to attract attention elsewhere, a majority will be limping.

TWINS AND BURGLARS.

Latter Left When They Found the Stork Had Come to the House.

Kansas City, Mo.—Because the stork and burglars selected the same time to visit M. H. Brotherson of No. 644 Ohio avenue, Kansas side, the burglars had to withdraw and postpone their visit. The stork left twin boys. Mr. Brotherson now is the father of six children.

Mr. Brotherson hastened to his store next door to summon a doctor at 5 a. m. He hurried in, picked up the telephone, and as he jiggled the receiver nervously he heard a noise in the rear of the store.

"Come quick!" he said over the wire. The noise increased, and something fell. He stepped out the front door, quickly locked it and hurried home.

The twins having arrived safe and sound and the excitement abated, he went back to the store. The back door was open, some sacks gone and a pile of boxes overturned.

ATTRIBUTES HER LONG LIFE TO SWEET DIET

Woman, Ninety, Begins Meals With Dessert.

Melrose, Mass.—Mrs. James Rodie celebrated her ninetieth birthday anniversary several days ago. She is in excellent health and attributes this fact to an astonishing diet that consists largely of chocolates, puddings, fruits and other sweetmeats.

Mrs. Rodie was personally conducting the frying of a batch of five dozen doughnuts when the reporter called at her home. While in conversation with him she ate several hot doughnuts, and upon being asked if she was troubled with indigestion she replied that she had relished dainty foods more in her old age than when she was young.

She is known as the "spry old lady of Melrose," and every morning during good weather she takes a walk of two miles or more just for a "little exercise," as she terms it. Mrs. Rodie is a zealous worker and exhibited for the reporter's benefit over twenty-five fancy woven knit table pieces that she had completed since last fall. She also assists her daughter-in-law, with whom she lives, in the general housework, and twice a week she dusts all the furniture in the house.

Mrs. Rodie has an excellent appetite. Every morning she has cake and coffee for breakfast, sometimes eating a little oatmeal. Her daughter-in-law told the reporter that Mrs. Rodie always eats her dessert first and that if she is hungry she will eat a little meat. She eats on the average a box of chocolates a week.

Mrs. Rodie is a fresh air enthusiast and has not slept in a room with any of the windows closed for over sixty years. She is also a firm follower of the "early to bed and early to rise" rule, for she retires every evening at 7 o'clock and is up bright and early at 6 o'clock the next morning.

TO SCHOOL ON SKIS.

Then Crawl Down to the Door Through a Hole in the Snow.

Ellensburg, Wash.—Coming to school on snowshoes and skis, sliding over the schoolhouse roof and climbing down to the door through twelve feet of snow is the experience of children at the school at Meadow Creek. Mrs. Mary Boedcher, county superintendent, has received a number of letters which tell the children's idea of the situation.

"Our schoolhouse is about twelve feet high on the outside," writes one boy, "but the snow is so deep that a person can walk right over and not know that there is a building there. We have to crawl down eight steps through a hole in the snowbank to get into it."

"We live in a tent," says a twelve-year-old girl in the seventh grade. "The roof is covered with large pieces of bark. All that you can see of the house is the very front, where you go out. I went halfway to school on the skis and crawled a little way so as not to go in so deep."

Mrs. Beech, the teacher, in her report to Mrs. Boedcher, said that in spite of the snow school kept up every day and that only two absentees were noted during the severe weather.

SCIENTISTS TELL OF PANAMA SLIDES

Say Navigation Is Not Likely to Be Stopped Again.

SEVERAL SUGGESTIONS MADE

Preventive Measures Such as Planting Vegetation and Construction of Proper Drainage System Urged. Look to the Future With Confidence.

Navigation through the Panama canal is not likely again to be seriously interrupted by slides, and realization of the great purpose for which the waterway was constructed is assured in the near future, according to the finding of the committee of scientists appointed by the National Academy of Sciences at the request of President Wilson to investigate the problem.

A summary of a preliminary report by the committee was made public at the White House. Excessive rainfall was found to be one of the chief causes for the slides, and control of the falling water was the most important remedy suggested. The committee made detailed recommendations for the prevention of slides in future.

"The committee looks to the future of the canal with confidence," the report declares. "It is not unmindful of the labor necessary to deal with the present slides, and it realizes that slides may be a considerable but not an unreasonably large maintenance charge upon the canal for a number of years. It also realizes that trouble in the Culebra district may possibly again close the canal. Nevertheless the committee firmly believes that after the present difficulties have been overcome navigation through the canal is not likely again to be seriously interrupted. There is absolutely no justification for the statement that traffic will be repeatedly interrupted during long periods for years to come. The canal will serve the great purpose for which it was constructed, and the realization of that purpose in the near future is assured.

Precautions Urged by Scientists.

"The committee believes that some sliding ground will continue to enter the canal for several years to come, though in diminishing amounts. Any relatively inexpensive measures which tend to arrest the present active slides or which promise to reduce the charge against maintenance of the canal in the future are therefore fully warranted."

The committee believes that every available and practicable device should be used to turn rain from ground that is sliding and prevent its entering adjacent ground, and it suggests the following measures:

"The committee believes that threatening ground bordering the slides, quiescent slides and, so far as practicable, active slides themselves, should be sufficiently covered with vegetation to prevent surface wash.

"Before extensive movements of the ground occur warning is frequently given by the appearance of cracks peripheral to the coming slide. As soon as they are formed they should be filled up in order that they may not intercept surface water.

"Undisturbed and threatened areas near the slides should be thoroughly drained both by surface and by the drainage, to keep as much water out of them as possible, for they may become unstable, and they may supply water to the slides.

"A complete system of open drains should be established on the great slides and the water carried away as directly as possible.

"Drainage by means of tunnels might be adapted to a few special cases, but should be tried with caution and extended only in cases which promise results commensurate with the cost."

In summing up the history of the present slides the committee concluded that since the three great slides are all in the Culebra district this is the chief area of danger. This is the natural consequence of the fact that by far the deepest part of the canal cut is in this district, and that the weakest of the geological formations, the Cucaracha, is strongly developed here.

ANTHRAX CURED BY SERUM.

Remedy Sent to Newark Case by Bellevue Authorities.

Serum furnished by Bellevue hospital, New York, to the City hospital in Newark is said to have brought about the cure of Maty Wilba of 108 Chambers street, Newark, who was admitted to the Newark institution suffering from anthrax. Dr. Max Wegman made the diagnosis and a messenger was sent to Bellevue at midnight to obtain the serum. A similar case was cured at the Newark hospital about a year ago through aid of the serum. It was said that the quick diagnosis and prompt application of the serum were responsible for the recovery in both cases.

LONG DISTANCES ARMY MUST COVER.

Some idea of what it means to patrol the Mexican border and the distances that must be covered in an invasion of Mexico is gained in the accompanying table. Of course an army traveling along the easiest routes would in some instances cover about twice as many miles as the distances given below.

From the eastern to the western end of the Mexican border the straight line distances are:

| | Miles. |
|---|---|
| From Brownsville to Laredo | 2[illegible] |
| From Laredo to Del Rio | [illegible] |
| From Del Rio to El Paso | [illegible] |
| From El Paso to Bisbee | [illegible] |
| From Bisbee to Yuma | [illegible] |

Starting from El Paso the invading Americans would cover the following distances to Mexico City:

| | Miles. |
|---|---|
| El Paso to Chihuahua (by rail) | [illegible] |
| Chihuahua to Torreon (by rail) | [illegible] |
| Torreon to Zacatecas (straight line) | 270 |
| Zacatecas to Mexico City (straight line) | [illegible] |
| From Mexico City to Vera Cruz (by rail) | 264 |

GERMAN ARMY FACES BRITISH

London—In describing a journey to the Verdun front and predicting a big battle soon on the British front, the military correspondent of the London Times this morning writes:

"The Germans have their army distributed in two great masses—one in front of the British army and the other around Verdun. The first group numbers thirty-four divisions and the latter thirty divisions. The rest of thel ine in France is thinly held.

"From this distribution one must suppose either that the Germans intend to attack the British or expect the British to attack them."

The correspondent pays an enthusiastic tribute to the French commander at Verdun, General Petain.

"Although an infantry commander by training," he says, "General Petain has made a special study of artillery. He was quick to understand the value of barrie rfire as a tremendous instrument of modern artillery and one peculiarly suited to French genius, and also the destructive powers of the famous 75-millimetre gun.

"The highly developed telephone service of the Verdun front enables the barrier fire to be turned on at any point in forty seconds, and a single battery of '75's' can then render impassoble a zone of considerable length and breadth.

"In the use of the heavy artillery General etain also excels. He has rendered it supple in an extraordinary degree.

"General etain is fighting this battle with great patience and dogged resolution. He sells every inch of ground dearly and for the moment rests content that the German continue tactics which injure them most. It is considered improbable that the Germans can abandon the attack in which their military reputation is involved, but every day, though General etain has his difficulties, the obstacles which confront the Germans become moore formidable and the cost of success much higher.

"There is little doubt that the Germans expected to win Verdun in four days. We must acknowledge the importance of the artillery positions occupied by the Germans and the range and the number of their guns. But General etain holds firm, and much interesting news is yet to come from Verdun."

WESTERN BLIND COUPLE EASILY RUN BIG FARM

They Are Musicians and at One Time Traveled All Over the Country.

Jet, Okla.—Despite the fact that both are totally blind, Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. Hubbard successfully operate the farming part of a half section of land they own just west of Jet, in Alfalfa county. Both are retired musicians and expect to spend the rest of their days on the farm enjoying life. They have traveled extensively all over the United States giving concerts, but three years ago settled down to the rural life near here.

Mrs. Hubbard was blind at birth, and her husband was made so previous to their marriage. Curiously enough, they use different systems of reading, and each reads a great deal, especially the books that are sent to them on the "round robin" plan from the blind schools. Mrs. Hubbard is an adept at reading by the raised letter system. Her husband uses a more modern way of reading and one considered by those who know it to be faster than the raised letter system. It is a series of holes cut in the paper at intervals. They are located from one to six, both above and below a standard line, designating a character. Reading occupies a great part of their time when they are not at work doing one of the many chores about the farm.

To the casual observer the farm is no different from the usual well arranged farm in the community. It is a noticeable fact that all of the machinery and implements used are kept in sheds and out of the way.

Time was when these two people were on the road all the time. Blind musicians with the ability they are able to show are in demand in the musical circles of the country, and they found no trouble in getting all of the engagements they could fill. Playing practically every instrument made, the two of them composed an orchestra, one of their program numbers being a duet in which seven instruments were played at the same time.

CLOSE BOWLING SCORES LOOKED FOR THURSDAY

Before dropping winter sports, another championship affair is to be staged, this one to decide the best bowling team in Fulton. The All-Stars, captained by Van Buren, have challenged the All-Fulton team, captained by Powell. The game will take place on the Onyx alleys Thursday night.

Powell, Stauring, Rear, Cole and Painter have been named as the players to represent the All-Fulton quintet, while the All-Stars will have Van Buren, Page, McCollum, Feeley and Hill in their line-up.

That the match will be a close one is evident from the fact that the ten men are about evenly matched in bowling ability. Barring misfortune there should not be a wide difference in the scores. All-Fulton has represented the city in practically every match this season with out-of-town teams, but the All-Stars have disputed their claim to superior bowling ability.

A large crowd is expected to witness the match.

The Fulton Fish and Gun Club will meet tonight. A number of important matters are to be taken up, chief among which is a campaign for increased membership among the business men of the city and to secure other support.

VILLA HEADING FOR THE SOUTH

is declared to have taken a personal escort of only eight men with him.

The railroad operator at San Andres is said to have been killed to mhake certain he would not give information when the pursuing column reached that point. Scouts were also sent back along the railroad between San Andres and San Antonio to burn any bridges, through fear that the Americans were making use of the line.

The route said to have been taken by Villa is one with which he is thoroughly familiar and which, indeed, is known among the peons as "Pancho5s Road."

From Guerrero it leads across the continental divide through the Bachiniba Pass into a broad valley which runs east to San Andres, Villa's old headquarters. Thence it leads south to Santa Ysabel, the scence of Villa's massacre of eighteen American mining men, and then southeast through Satevo and aPrral.

The man who brought the story of Villa's arrival to Satevo hereg ave a circumstantial account of Villa's manoevres and plan of campaign. While his story is impossible of verification his own credibility is vouched for by reputable American business men here, who have employed him for several years.

Concentration.

"My daughter," says the first mother proudly, "is the most popular girl in town. Why, we counted them up one day, and she has no less than fifty-three gentlemen admirers. Isn't that splendid! It must seem so very different to have a daughter like your Irene, who has but the one suitor."

"Yes," crisply retorts the other mother, "but I would beg you to remember that my daughter has landed her one beau, while your daughter is wondering which of the fifty-three is coming to the point."

Sedalia, Mo.—Mrs. J. T. Albertson, wife of a Sedalia painter, has received a check for $500 from Daniel C. Jacklin of San Francisco as a recognition of kindness extended to him years ago when as an orphan he worked on the Albertson farm near here.

Jacklin was left penniless when his parents died, but he worked his way through the Warrensburg Normal school and the Rolla School of Mines. He then went west and as a mining engineer has accumulated wealth.

His earnings run into the thousands yearly, and he receives large dividends from eighteen mining corporations in which he is a stockholder. He wants Mr. and Mrs. Albertson to join him on an eastern trip.

He found a strong and substantial strong box. It was locked. The burglar carried the strong box to an empty box car, pried it open and found some unsigned checks and a copper cent.

WILL TRY TO ABOLISH OFFICE IF HE GETS IT

Platform of Alabama Man Who Seeks Election.

Birmingham, Ala.—Dr. John S. Gillespie, who was court clerk in this county for twenty years, is out as candidate for county treasurer, announcing as the chief plank in his platform conviction of the uselessness of the office and declaring his purpose to do everything in his power for its abolishment. It is the first time in the history of the country, so far as known here, that a candidate for public office has run on a platform to abolish it.

Mrs. Floribel Brown Ohme, one of the best known educators in the state, is a candidate for membership on the Jefferson county board of education. She is the first woman in the south, so far as known here, to become a candidate for an elective public office. Women cannot vote in this state. She is relying on the men to elect her, and her prospects for success are generally regarded as highly favorable.

James A. Mitchell, a prominent lawyer of Birmingham, recently published an article severely criticising the state supreme court for its ruling on a case he had conducted before that tribunal, and strongly intimated that the court was unduly influenced. For this he was cited to appear before the court and show why his license to practice before it should not be canceled. He answered this summons by announcing himself a candidate for chief justice of the supreme court, which is filled in this state by popular election.

WOLVES CHASE MESSENGER.

Duluth Youth Breaks Record When Pursued by Wolves.

Duluth, Minn.—Simon Morgan, nineteen years old, a telegraph messenger boy, recently broke all messenger boy speed records.

Morgan lives at Duluth Heights and gets through work at 1 a. m. When within a block of his home he heard a patter of feet on the frozen walk behind him. Two gaunt timber wolves with blazing eyes were following him. Morgan speeded for the woodshed and slammed the door shut as the night prowlers dashed against it.

A friendly dog, hearing the disturbance, interfered and was considerably chewed up, so much so that it was killed later. Clarence Johnson, a neighbor, raised his window and emptied both barrels of a shotgun at the wolves, putting them to flight.

Papa and Great-grandfather.

Lafayette, Ind.—Not many great-grandfathers can boast of having a bouncing baby daughter, but Fred Landes, a farmer northeast of Lafayette, holds this record. Landes, who is a civil war veteran, seventy-four years old, was for many years a widower. A year ago, however, he married a young woman he had known for years. A baby daughter was born to them. Landes has a great number of grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

SHE TRAVELS FAR TO BE MRS.

Young Woman Popped by Mail, Bought Ring and License.

Des Moines.—After traveling over 600 miles Miss Augusta Knies of Lansing, Mich., became the first leap year bride of this city by leading Harley Decker of 1299 East Twenty-sixth street to the altar.

She managed the whole affair. She popped the question, named the wedding day, paid her railroad fare, purchased the marriage license and bought the ring.

Miss Knies, who is twenty-five, was strolling along the streets of Detroit with a girl friend last June. Her companion greeted a young man, and fifteen seconds later she was introduced to her future husband. It was Decker, then employed in a Detroit automobile factory.

He was called back to Des Moines by the illness of a sister in February. Three weeks ago Miss Knies popped the question by mail, and Decker, who is twenty-nine years old, accepted. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Frank W. Mutchler of the Great Park Church of Christ.

The Nursery Bib.

Away with the bib and its strings that will knot or the buttons that will not button! Here is the dearest little eating apron that ever covered dainty ruffles or Dickens suits, and when mother realizes what a very simple matter the making of such an apron can be she will hasten to fashion one for the littlest girl or boy in the nursery. A Turkish towel or a simple huck affair can be turned with a snip of the scissors and a few stitches into a comfortable, easily managed apron. At about two-thirds of the length of the towel cut a hole large enough for the little head to slip through. Bind this with tape or scallop it if you wish a little extra fanciness. The shorter side is then gathered or plaited into a belt, made from wide tape or a piece of old toweling, which passes around to the front and holds the apron in place. Cross stitch may make the little apron still more attractive, especially if the design be the favorite nursery chicks, bunnies or kittens. While the linen or huck toweling is prettier, the the Turkish toweling is really more practical because of its absorbent qualities. It saves crying over spilt milk.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Some Interesting Information For Boys and Girls.

BIRDS AND THE WEATHER.

Our Little Feathered Friends Not So Wise as We Give Them Credit For Being—Making the Most of Opportunity—Portrait of a Little Girl.

That birds are not such good weather prophets as they are generally believed to be is one of the assertions of Frank M. Chapman, the well known ornithologist, in an article on "Birds as Travelers" in St. Nicholas. Birds make as serious miscalculations as the rest of us, according to Mr. Chapman. "Sometimes," he says, "encouraged by an unusually mild period, birds come so far ahead of their usual time that they are trapped by the sudden return of cold weather. Then if they do not retreat they may suffer for lack of food. I have seen geese on the coast of Texas migrating northward in large numbers, urged onward by a warm wave. The next day, to my surprise, they all came flying back. But the day following that a severe 'norther' suddenly arrived. The geese had evidently encountered this storm and were driven back by it."

Make the Most of Opportunity.

Don't wait for your opportunity—make it, as Lincoln made his in the log cabin in the wilderness. Make it, as Henry Wilson made his during his evenings on a farm, when he read a thousand volumes while other boys of the neighborhood wasted their evenings. Make it, as the shepherd boy Ferguson made his when he calculated the distance of the stars with a handful of beads on a string. Make it, as George Stephenson made his when he mastered the rules of mathematics with a bit of chalk on the sides of the coal wagons in the mines. Make it, as Douglass made his when he learned to read from scraps of paper and posters. Make it, as Napoleon made his in a hundred important situations. Make it, as the deaf and blind Helen Keller has made hers. Make it, as every man must who would accomplish anything worth the effort. Golden opportunities are nothing to laziness, and the greatest advantage will make you ridiculous if you are not prepared for it.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Stars In the Sky.

Man may never know how many stars there are. The best we can do is to figure on the number that can be seen with the largest telescopes that have been invented, for you know there must be many millions of them which to us are invisible.

We have counted the stars so far as we can see them, or, rather, so far as we can photograph them. Astronomers have found that a photographic plate exposed to the stars will show more of them than can be seen with the naked eye. By this method, the "Book of Wonders" tells us, man has been able in a way to count the stars he can see. It adds up to more than a hundred million of them. Astronomers found this out by taking photographs of the heavens at night, devoting one picture to each section until the entire heavens had been covered and then counting all the stars shown in the pictures.

joy herself, and, judging from her happy expression, she finds that an easy and pleasant occupation.

Betty was caught among the palms, where she and a number of her little friends were at play. She is a member of a prominent New York family, and this is her first winter at the famous winter resort.

WRONGDOING.

If society is to be further uplifted, if it is to be kept from slipping back, it must hold firmly to the right of saying that wrong is wrong, no matter who commits it or how guilty others may be. If there can be no responsibility and no condemnation till we get a perfect world there can be no way of holding the world up to the level which it has already reached.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Fine white net, not wired, but gathered so copiously that it falls in billows about the figure, is used for this charming frock. Stitched about the deep hip-yoke are bands of narrow insertion. The bodice opens over a vest of taffeta and is trimmed with insertion to correspond with the skirt. The collar and cuffs are of chiffon taffeta, both edges with narrow lace ruffles. The combination of net and taffeta is unusually chic. The design, in medium size, requires 7 yards 40-inch net, 6 yards inch wide insertion and 1 yard 36-inch taffeta. If edging is used on the flounces, 12 yards will be needed.

Imitative Monkeys.

Monkeys never wash or bathe, though they have, as a rule, every chance to do so. Possibly experience has taught them to be afraid of crocodiles, which are pretty generally distributed on monkey haunted rivers. It is said that a number of Indian monkeys watched a party of Europeans in a boat who washed their hands and brushed their teeth. Next day the monkeys were seen to come to the river side and go through the form of washing their hands and of brushing their teeth with bits of stick.

Here's to Your Spring Bonnet

While the average woman is very well content in the appropriate season to wrap herself in furs and clothe her body in velvet or wool, she is not at all inclined to be consistent and cover her head in some suitable heavy material. No; a straw hat she hankers for, and a straw hat she wears. The incongruous combination of fur and straw is to be seen a great deal, for, though the thermometer registers winter weather in many places, the spring hat is here.

"Adorable" is the name best applied to some of the newest models. There is such a diversity of style shown in the latest millinery models that almost every woman will find something to suit her particular style of beauty. The picturesque broad brim, the high crowned toque, the flat hat of medium size—these are but a few of the attractive styles from which to choose.

The milliners are using a great deal of chip and satin straw in combination with panne, taffetas, satin and tulle. Tulle may be said to be the most popular material of the present season. Tulle hats and toques are now shown in all the best millinery shops.

The high crowned toque, composed of brown tulle and brown straw, is a very popular model. This is an effective combination of materials, especially when a band of dark fur and a rose or two complete the scheme.

It frequently happens that some one model becomes a general favorite at the beginning of the spring and autumn seasons. All sorts of hats and toques are worn, but the special favorite is always in view. Well, this spring the special favorite in the millinery world is the brown tulle and straw model, a delightful close fitting shape which is generally becoming.

Of course this model could be copied with the best results in mirror velvet and satin straw or in taffeta and soft chip. The plain brim is composed entirely of straw, and a band of fur hides the meeting of straw and tulle. A full crown made of velvet, taffeta or tulle should be invisibly supported with fine wires covered with slightly stiff net.

The idea of lining velvet or satin hats with straw is very Parisian. And it is a real boon to amateur milliners, for straw linings are very easily made.

Almost all the best satin straws are provided with an invisible running string in one edge, which makes it easy to shape the straw to the hat brim.

SO SPRINGY!

One of the Ribbon Effects So Popular This Season.

A tall hat is accentuated by a huge rosette of blue and white polka dotted moire ribbon, matching a ruff of the same novelty. The ends of the neck piece are handsomely finished with white silk tassels. These sets are very chic for young ladies, as the cut proves.

Smart Sports Coat.

Among sports garments is a most practical, comfortable and smart blanket coat. Indeed, if you have an extra steamer rug at home it would be just the thing for the making of the garment. The plaids are usually large. The coat is made very loose and along tailored lines. There is also a hood attached to it, so that if one is in the mountains or aboard ship upon a cool day the head can be snuggled into the hood for comfort. These coats are not usually lined, being very practical in this respect for knockabout purposes. Such a coat can be made without a hood, of course, or the hood can be made in detachable form, fastening to the neck and shoulders of the coat with buttons and buttonholes.

Crab Meat, Indienne.

Two tablespoonfuls of butter, a teaspoonful of finely chopped onion, three tablespoonfuls of flour, two-thirds tablespoonful of curry powder, a cupful of chicken stock, a cupful of crab meat, salt. Cook butter and onion three minutes, add flour mixed with curry powder and chicken stock. When boiling point is reached add crab meat and season with salt.

A POPULAR DESIGN.

Jersey Cloth Is In the Lead Both For Street Wear and Sports.

SMART AS THEY COME.

This silk jersey suit is in deep tan color, with brown glaced leather for cuffs, collar and pocket lids. The stringy belt and novelty buttons give a natty finish. A simple tan straw sailor goes with the suit, which is one of the spring's successes.

A CASE OF NERVES?

Is Crossness a Mood or Inherent In Just Things?

Every woman, young and old, knows what it is to have cross days—days when, from the rising up of the sun to the going down of the same, every mortal thing seems to go wrong, no matter how hard one tries to have them go right. For that matter, one always does try harder on such days than on the happy go lucky ones when life flows on smoothly and harmoniously, like "a grand, sweet song." Goodness knows, there is enough conscientious effort wasted on a single cross day to balance half a year of ordinary days.

Why is this? Is crossness a disordered state of the mind or an overwrought condition of the nerves or simply the reflection of an inexplicable but unanimous "crossedness" on the part of things in general? And if it be any or all of these is there any way of preventing or overcoming it?

Crossness, like most other conditions of life, is the inevitable effect of a perfectly natural cause. Good humor, like fine weather, cannot possibly last forever. If it could it would inevitably become an intolerable bore. Being eternally pleasant and agreeable is all right theoretically, but it is a terrible strain on the nerves.

It is dreadfully wearing, too, on other people. Did you ever have to live in the same house with somebody who was always placid, always even tempered, no matter who else was worried and distraught? And were you not sometimes seized with an unholy yearning to do something perfectly awful and fiendish, that you might for once startle that placid being out of his or her maddening imperturbability?

Dates With Lemon Jelly.

Soak one-half a box of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold water for about twenty minutes. Dissolve in two and one-half cupfuls of boiling water and add one cupful of sugar and the juice of two lemons. Strain and half fill a mold and set on ice. When almost firm, drop on the dates, which have been stoned and stuffed with blanched almonds. Add the rest of the jelly to fill the mold and chill. Serve with whipped cream.

Waffles With Maple Sirup.

Two cupfuls of flour sifted twice with one teaspoonful of baking powder and the same of salt, three eggs, one tablespoonful of butter and two cupfuls of milk. Beat the yolks smooth, add the milk and turn this upon the prepared flour. Whip lightly and quickly for one minute, add the stiffened whites and drop by the spoonful into heated and greased waffle irons.

A Jabot From a Collar.

Another use for the flat Dutch collar of value is to make it into a jabot. This will require no cutting at all. The collar should be gathered or plaited at the center of the back and the two pointed ends turned directly underneath. It is then hung from the front of a stock collar. Of course a soft collar of lace or lace trimmed batiste will fill this purpose best.

$50 FOR SEVEN WINKS.

Following a Custom of Greece Looked Like Mashing Out In Missouri.

Kansas City, Mo.—George Stamatois, twenty-six years old, 510 Main street, has not forgotten the customs of his native Greece. There it seems to be the fashion to wink at any woman you want to become acquainted with. The Greek custom brought Stamatois to grief in staid Kansas City.

Stamatois entered a department store the other afternoon. He winked at six pretty girls to no avail. He winked at a seventh, who promptly seized him by the arm, showed him a store detective's star and escorted him to a crossing patrolman.

Stamatois answered a charge of "mashing" before Justice Charles Clark, acting judge, in the north side court here soon after.

"That winking trick's a favorite over in Greece, judge," Stamatois said. "That's the way we meet all our nice women. I thought it was all right here too. I've got to show my appreciation of the girls some way."

"That's a poor way," Judge Clark answered. "The wink is not favored in Kansas City. You're fined $50."

Some Nautical Facts.

A knot is 6,080 feet long. The distance from New York to Liverpool is 3,064 nautical miles by the northern track and 3,139 by the southern track. The former course is taken by vessels bound for New York, the latter by vessels bound for Liverpool. From Liverpool to New York the distances are respectively 3,089 and 3,109 miles.

In estimating records the points taken on either side are Sandy Hook and Daunt's rock, Queenstown harbor. The first light sighted on the British coast is the Bull, Cow and Calf, Ireland, and on the American coast either Nantucket or Fire island.—New York Globe.

Origin of an Old Saw.

"A feather in your cap" arose from a custom of woodcraft enthusiasts, and in Scotland today the one who kills the first woodcock plucks out a feather and proudly wears it in his cap. Oliver Cromwell gave it dignity of thought and diction when he declined England's offered crown. "Royalty is but a feather in a man's cap," he said. "Let children enjoy their rattle."

Impossible Feat.

Irate Father—Don't you think, young man, you can walk into this house and hang up your hat. Timid Suitor—I know I can't, sir. You're sitting on it.—Baltimore American.

COURAGE.

Let the man who has to make his own fortune remember this maxim: Attacking is the only secret. Dare and the world always yields, or, if it beat you sometimes, dare it again and it will succumb.—Thackeray.

The President's Daughter Is an Advocate of Suffrage.

MISS MARGARET WILSON.

Miss Wilson always has been a suffragist at heart, but it was not until last year, after her father had announced his own views on the question of votes for women, that she permitted herself to come out and work for the enfranchisement of her sex. She had for several years attended as a silent spectator all the mass meetings of the suffrage societies. Even now she seldom makes speeches, since she needs to save her voice for her chosen career as a vocal artist.

Recently Miss Wilson was one of the hostesses at a suffrage tea given in New York, where Miss Julia Lathrop, head of the national children's bureau, spoke about the relation of suffrage to child welfare. The children's bureau is another one of the humanitarian interests of Miss Wilson, whose unaffected love of humanity has led her to ally herself with many philanthropic movements.

It is said that she always gives the proceeds of her concert money to the work for the blind, for, while she is an enthusiastic lover of her work, she does not sing to enrich herself, but to help mankind.

Pneumonia Swifter Than Bullet.

Passaic, N. J.—Charles Uhlermann of Clifton, who attempted suicide recently, is dead from pneumonia. The boy wrote a note to his parents telling them they "soon would know the reason" for his act, then shot himself. The wound was not serious, but pneumonia developed soon afterward.

This Kimono Is In One Piece.

An irresistibly pretty kimono of lavender crepe. The back extends over the shoulders to form the sleeves and yoke effect.

A kimono in lavender cotton crepe is irresistibly pretty, and this design is made in one piece, making it an added joy to the home dressmaker. In medium size the kimono requires 3⅝ yards 36-inch crepe, with 2½ yards of ribbon 3 inches wide for the sash.

The kimono is very graceful if carefully made. First fold the front and back section, which is cut in one piece, matching the double notches, and close the seam to the double "oo" perforation; finish the opening for an armhole. Gather at armhole edge on small "o" perforations (which form a semicircle), draw gathers and finish with a tassel. Close center-back seam from single large "O" perforation to lower edge. Close seam of band having single notches, sew to front and back, notches and center-backs even. Tack a straight strip of material 3 inches wide and 1⅛ yards long; or ribbon on the front of kimono with the back edge of ribbon at small "o" perforation in kimono front. If desired with plaited sash, fold on line of large "O" perforations, join the notched edges and press. Pleat upper edge, placing single "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack, catching plaits through both sides of material. Gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations and on line of small "o" perforations; draw gathers and finish lower edge with a tassel. Adjust to position on kimono with plaits turning backward and stitch to position from single large "O" perforation to front seam.

The sash may be of either plain or figured ribbon. The nosegay silks also make attractive sashes. Finish the ends with silk tassels, after tieing the sash at the back.

A Modish Coat of Gabardine.

A dressy looking coat of tan gabardine trimmed with buttons. Provision is made for pockets and belt, but these are a matter of choice.

The light tan coat makes a very smart addition to a spring costume and is more dressy in effect for separate wear than any other color. An attractive model in gabardine is illustrated here, the coat being finished at the neck with a "funnel collar." The collar opened and rolled back to form revers is equally fashionable. Pockets and a belt are provided in the decorative scheme, but these may be omitted.

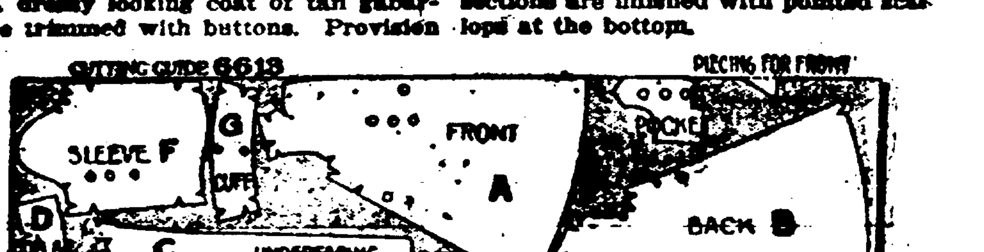
In medium size the coat requires 3⅝ yards 54-inch gabardine. To cut the coat, fold the material in half first, then place the collar on the lengthwise fold. To the right of this lay the underfacing, but on a lengthwise thread. The back is laid on the lengthwise fold. On the second row, near the selvage, place the sleeve, the cuff, the front and the pocket, all on a lengthwise thread of material.

The waist-line is indicated by line of large "O" perforations. Deep turn-back cuffs finish the long one-piece sleeves. The length of the coat at center-back from neck to lower edges is 42 inches.

Buttons of self-material or of fancy design may be used to trim the front of the coat. They should be repeated on the pockets, collar and sleeves.

The lines of this coat are so splendid that it would be attractive developed in serge, silk or any other springtime material.

Decidedly smart is this coat in wide wale cheviot. The skirt is a two-piece model pleated at the sides and with or without pointed hip yoke. The yoke sections are finished with pointed scallops at the bottom.



Pictorial Review Coat No. 6612. Sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

SCHOOL FIVE TO CLASH WITH TENT MEN IN GAME FOR CHAMPIONSHIP

The students at the High School are preparing for the second basketball game in the series with the Maccabees, and they will turn out enmasse tomorrow night to witness what promises to be a more hotly contested game than the first one in which the High School team was victorious.

Although the Maccabee lineup will be changed for the encounter, no announcement has been made as to who will replace Keeler. Keeler was not seen at his best last week owing to an operation which he had undergone in the early part of the winter. The Maccabee team practiced last night, but used a changed lineup at different periods.

That the next encounter will be for revenge is not doubted by anyone who attended the first match which was marred considerable by rough tactics and other actions which are bound to develop in a series of this nature. Practically all of the lodge quintet are former members of high school teams and the youngsters who now represent the school are anxious to show their superiorty over the "old timers." On the other hand, the supposed "has beens" feel confident that they excel Coach Merrill's proteges in every way; that they can demonstrate this if not handicapped by injuries and other causes.

The Maccabees feel sure that the high school forwards, Martin and Reynolds, will not score baskets as easily as they did in the preceding game. Ward, although not a finished player is, nevertheless, the hardest man on the Maccabee team to evade. His knowledge of athletics, principally football, stands him in good stead in diagnosing the plays of the high school boys. He has shown that he is as good at guard as any man in the city.

Captain Ives has recovered from the injury to his ankle, appearing in excellent form in the practice session. Crockett who will oppose Wallace, will undoubtedly have an interesting tussel with the high school player as both are evenly matched in height and weight.

The High school team, with no floor to use, have not held practice sessions since the last game, but all the men are pronounced to be in fit condition and will give a good account of thefselves.

Baseball Season Here Gets Its Impetus From Activity of Big Leagues

With the big league teams returned from the south and holding practice sessions on their home diamonds, the baseball is again occupying the attention of the sporting world, —basketball and other winter sports having been given the final taboo. The vacant lots and cther open spaces in the city which have in other years afforded the youngsters opportunity to engage in the national pastime are already being occupied in increasing numbers, and by next week it is expected that the baseball season in Fulton will be in full swing.

Grammar schools and the High School teams have elected captains and managers for the season. The Erie st. boys have organized— State st. school has elected William Fivaz, captain and Edgar Hill, manager, and the Phillips st. school team will have William Dingle as a leader with Henry Lundy manager. In addition to the representative teams there will also be other nines in theg rammer schools. The Pre-academic team which had a successful season last year will organize. At the high school there is a big squad out for the first team which consists of O'Brien, Reynolds, Lynch, Martin, Barnes, Green, Hunter, Woods, Pooler, Kraus, Palmer, Tyrell, McKenna, Wallace, Johnson, Pickett, Dingle, and others.

"Don" O'Brien is captain of thefi rst team while "Jack" Reynolds is manager. The schedule has already been made up, announcement of the dates having been made last week. In addition to the first and second teams at the High school there will also be a "fresh" nine which is expected to perform in stellar style. The player on this team will represent the best of the lot which played in the grammer school series.

The Woodmen and Maccabee lodges have already completed arrangements for launching their nines. The Maccabees were inconvenienced last year by a lack of teams to compete with in this city, but with the announcement that a number of club nines are also to be organized, baseball "fiends" are certain of getting a full measure of amusement during the coming season.

Top-Notchers Will Contend for Big Honors

There is much interest evinced here in the outcome of the deciding game in the series between the Y. M. H. A. and A. C. U. teams for the basketball championship of Syracuse which is to be played on the University court Thursday night.

Edward Dollard, coach of the University team and a former resident of this city, says that fully 2,000 people will attend the game. Dollard will referee the game, I. Paul Steinberg, former coach of Cornell's basketball team, will also officiate.

The Pastimes, the third contenders for the title, were eliminated from the series by four straight defeats. The Y. M. H. A. and A. C. U. met twice, each scoring a victor yon the visiting court. The chief mainstay of the Y. M. H. A., Herman Feinberg, has not been able to get into the practice sessions during the week owing to an injured ankle, and it is doubtful whether he will play in the contest.

Torney, the brilliant center of the A. C. U., is expected to be seen ath is best on the University court, as he has played college basketball on regulation sized courts for five years opposing Torney will be Silverstein who is without a doubt one of the best centers in the State.

Langford and McVey Battle at the Arena

One of the most interesting of ring matches ever staged in Syracuse is slated for April 6th at the Arena. Sam McVey and Sam Langford, colored heavyweights, will battle for ten rounds in what promises to be a hard-fought match.

The men have met time and again. The yare evenly matched and depend on victories by the k. o. route. On their last meeting in Boston McVey made Langford look like a novice. McVey, according to George Lawrence, the Australian boxing promoter, who manages his affairs, is the greatest borer in the world today. "He is Willard's superior in everything but size. As a boxer or fighter, the champion could not be compare dto the colored athlete, whose uncanny ring skill has been the wonder of two continents," says Lawrence.

A number of interesting preliminaries will precede the main bout, chief of which is the go for the lightweight championship of Syracuse.

WHY GASOLINE PRICE IS HIGH

Tracable Indirectly to Decreased Production, Result of War's Interference With European Produ.tion.

Edward L. Doheny, president of the Mexican Petroleum Co., in yesterday's New York American says as follows:

I have given a great deal of study to the causes which brought about the increase in the selling price of gasoline. The opinion which I now hold is, that of all the staples the retail price of which has been greatly augmented with in the last year or two there is no other staple the producers of which have such an undeniable right to the increase exacted of consumers.

For instance, fifty-three articles of merchandise connected with the production of petroleum have increased in price within one year an average of 199 per cent. It is obvious that those which have increased in price within one year an average of 109 per cent. It is obvious that those which have increased most in price are articles largely or exclusively imported from Europe. A great number of the items, however, are derived almost exclusively from United States production and manufacture.

There is no doubt that the war in Europe has cut off the supply of many things needed in the ordinary affairs of industry, and that reason alone has been sufficient for not only a great increase in the selling price of such merchandise, but an increase in the cost of production and selling price of all merchandise.

Oil Yield Decreasing

It is also evident that the cessation or partial cessation of production in Europe has caused a lessening of the world's supply of many staples, the consumption of which has not been lessened, but in many cases has been increased. Among these are certain forms of steel goods, copper goods and petroleum goods. The greater demand for these articles has been one of the causes for higher prices.

In the case of gasoline, however, the causes are different for the increase. The yield of oil is decreasing, in the first place. New districts may be discovered that will temporarily increase the potential daily production, but the old districts have lost the volumne of their daily yields of a year ago.

A little over a year ago the great Cushing field in Oklahoma, together with the new Healdton field in the southern part of that State, yielded oil at the rate of nearly 300,000 barrels daily. Today the production of the same fields has decreased to a very little over 100,000 barrels daily. The other fields have decreased in similar ratios.

Half Normal Supply

In brief, then, the supply of gasoline in the United States, as evidenced by the present daily production and last year's diminished supply, is only about one-half as great as was available last year, and storage oil must be relied upon to make up the deficiency.

It is true that gasoline is high, but only the optimism of the petroleum prospector and producer and his proverbial improvidence has prevented him from taking adavntage of the rising tide of opportunity and of holding his oil until he gets a price which shall make up for disastrous results of over-drilling and over-production of recent years.

Gasoline should and will go very much higher unless one of two possible things is satisfactorily accomplished in the near future.

First—The development of some process for getting a larger percentage of gasoline from crude oil than can now be obtained by known means.

Second—The invention of some improved carburetor or other mechanical device which, when attached to the existing form of motor engines, will permit the use, without carbonizing or other bad results, of a much lower gravity of petroleum distillate than is now used for the manufacture of gasoline.

Wade E. Gayer Will Enter Race as H. W. Kandt's Successor

WADE E. GAYER

Wade E. Gayer, East Broadway druggist, announced today his candidacy for the position of treasurer of Oswego county.

While the announcement is not a surprise it comes at a time when the candidate's many friends were least expecting it, for it was believed by some of them that he had turned a deaf ear to their importuning, which has been the case for about one year.

Mr. Gayer was born in Watertown in 1879. He attended the public schools and later when his family removed to Skaneateles, he attended the Elbridge Collegiate Institute—graduating with honors. He took the full course at the Buffalo School of Pharmacy, and graduated among the first in a large class.

In 1900 he came to Fulton and in company with Ralph C.

NEW WAR BUDGET OF BILLIONS

London—Mr. McKenna's new budget of $2,545,060,000, which necessitates heavier taxes on incomes and new taxes on luxuries, such as automobiles and amusements, and on necessaries, such as matche, sugar, coffee, cocoa, and railway tickets, has had a curiously mixed reception.

The wealthy classes, through the Daily Telegraph, object to a further lopping of their incomes, and the workers, through the Daily News and Daily Chronicle, object to the imposition of heavier duties on foodstuffs, but all agree with the Daily Telegraph that money must and will be provided by all classes to carry on the war to a victorious conclusion.

All the newspapers indorse the Chancellor's demand that serious economies must be enforced in order that every pound required may be supplied to make the assurance of a final victory doubly sure.

By imposing new taxes on amusements, railway tickets, matches and mineral waters, and raising a number of the old taxes, including those on excess war profits, incomes, sugar, cocoa, coffee and automobiles, the Choncellor estimates that he will be able to raise about 65,000,000 pounds.

Explaining his financial methods, Mr. McKenna said he was aware of no other historical parallel in other countries for thew illingness displayed by the peopleo f Great Britain to submit cheerfully to the tax gatherers' exactions, but it would be a mistake, he added, to drive this spirit of public sacrifice too hard.

For instance, he said he had resisted suggestions for an excessive increase in the tax on excess war profits because he considered this would have the effect of restricting trade enterprise. He reminded the House that firms carrying a large business accepted great risks and responsibilities and needed to build up good reserves of capital, because after the war they would be called upon to meet strong opposition abroad.

WEATHER FORECAST

Probably fair tonight and Wednesday. Moderate west winds.

Laundrymen Seek Protection of City Ask for Licenses

The receipt of a communication requesting that laundries pay a yearly license fee, the renewal of grievances against the taxicab license fee and the proposed building of the Fulton French Cleaning & Dyeing Company, the report of the committee which conferred with the Police & Fire Board, and reports from the City Chamberlain, City Sealer and Commissioner of Charities made necessary a lengthy session of the Common Council last night.

Resolutions were adopted to purchase twenty gas mantles, which had been placed on trial in the various rooms in the City Hall, to refer the grievance against the taxicab license fee to the Ordinance Committee; to accept the report of the grievance committee in regard to the Fulton French Cleaning & Dyeing company; to refer the suggested laundry license to hte ordinance committee; to purchase signature stamps for several of the city departments; and to pay interest on bonds and other city bills. The city Sealer was granted permission to attend the convention of State sealers oof weights and measures, to be held in Elmira in May.

J. R. Sommers, Commissioner of Charities, gave a verbal report relative tot his department, particularly in connection with the bills incurred by city charges in hospitals, orphan asylums and county institutions. Mr. Somers said that his department was a very important one in city's affairs and should not be overlooked. About $700 indebtedness was handed down to his department by the former administration. This indebtedness will have to "hang fire" for the present as there is now but $182 remaining in the fund, which is insufficient to meet the charges for the current month.

Mr. Somers stated that $530.25 was expended by his department during the month of March and that 46 people had been assisted. He called attention to apparent impositions, citing the case of one woman whose house rent the city has been obliged to pay throughout the winter. "This woman has been ill," Mr. Somers stated, "but I predict her recovery about the time Long Branch opens for the season." The Commissioner also stated that he, with Judge Wilson and all county officials are planning to eliminate entirely wife desertions and within a short time every possible effort will be made to learn

STRANGE SOLICITUDE

In these days of automobiles making a new implement for crime as well as opportunities for reviving the trade of the Jack Turpins of stage coach days, a state constabulary for guarding country roads may be desirable. But just why New York city should be so anxious for the safety of the rural districts is hard to discover. Upstate is not crying in any large voice for a state constabulary; the whole outcry seems to come from the metropolis. The metropolis has no use for it, and upstate has little or no need of it. Up-State people must thank the metropolis for its tender devotion to rural safety.—Watertown Times.

FATHER AND THE BABY

It is easy to poke fun at the rules for fathers laid down by the doctors as part of the law and the gospel of baby week; but there is common sense behind the recommendations. It is an exploded notion that the applied science of nursery hygiene is the mother's business, and hers alone. Modern prophylactic medicine does not mince words in bringing home to the conscience of every man his responsibility for the health of his offspring. Society is on the defensive against the man who does not care how his selfishness reacts upon posterity, and the nation-wide observance of baby week is intended to teach a few plain truths, however unpalatable to those who can not defy with impunity either the natural retribution for sin or the awakened conscience of the era whereby they stand condemned.— Philadelphia Record.

THE REFORMED BLUEBERRY

There are some new things under the sun. At a co-operative plantation in the pine barrens of New Jersey, where the government's experiments are now making, blue berries as large as the Concord grape, not dissimilar in appearance and of a flavor greatly superior to the specimen which grows wild in our New England fields, are now ripening in considerable quantities. Frederick V. Coville believes that the acid soils of New England, admirably adapted to blueberry cultivation, will yield a crop of extraordinary commercial as well as dietetic.

Our own state experiment station last year sent an expert to investigate the work in New Jersey. He saw in it so much of promise for the poorer lands of Massachusetts that he promptly arranged with Mr. Coville for the institution of a similar experiment at East Wareham, where in the coming Summer the work will be undertaken. This is a study to which Mr. Coville has been giving years of research, with results that seem likely in a few more seasons to prove sensationally important. The transformation of the blueberry of the fields to a beautiful fruit of the size and quality already indicated will prove an achievement of huge importance to New England agriculture besides adding to the resources of the American table. And the experiment will have its economic advantages, too, in the utilization of great stretches of land, at present valueless but which seem particularly to meet the chemical needs of blueberry culture.—Boston Herald.

GREAT BRITAIN ASSAILED FOR LAWLESSNESS

As has happened frequently since the beginning of the war, Great Britain once more seizes the opportunity when German lawlessness at sea is particularly outrageous to commit itself to new aggressions upon the rights of neutrals. The order in Council just issued authorizes the capture of merchant vessels bound from one neutral port to another, whether their cargoes are contraband or not. By this decree a blockade which is not a true blockade of Germany becomes effective as a long-distance blockade of neutral ports in Holland and Scandinavia.

There never has been a formulation of law as to blockades that did not confine them to enemy coasts and harbors. No doctrine of continuous voyage ever laid down in the United States or elsewhere has upheld the claim now asserted at London. Britain makes its own law, as Germany does, and American property to the one becomes as negligible as American lives to the other.

In 1812, when the Napoleonic wars had produced a situation equally intolerable to the United States, Nathaniel Macon, speaking on the question of war in defense of our rights at sea, was hardly able to decide where our blows should fall. "The devil himself," he said, "could not tell which was the worst, the government of England or that of France."

If we are more exasperated by German assassination than by British robbery, it is for the reason that the one crime is more atrocious than the other, and not because either offense lacks anything in premeditated disregard of neutral rights.—N. Y. World.

JUST KINDNESS

The 200 persons who heard Bicknell Young's lecture in this city last Saturday night will long remember the magnificence of the message. In a language as simple as a child's, brilliantly punctuated with wit, he explained the possible transformation of man by the renewing of the mind. The logic expressed relative to the governing Principle of Life was certainly brimful of commonsense with its possible application in every day life. He showed how it is feasible with intelligence to pass untouched thru the dark strips in life, to give kindness for unkindness, and peace for strife. This, however, warned the speaker can be accomplished only thru intelligence, for how else can we accomplish anything. Ignorance of the principle of music does not beget harmony. Neither does ignorance of the principle of art bring forth harmony, and so in Life itself. We may fight Principle; we may ignore it; we may ridicule it; we may beat out our very existence against it, but we cannot change it. The blessings of music or art may be ours if we avail ourselves of their principles.

In the course of human events, in the needless hustle of the daily routine, it is so easy to lose sight of our real motives. Take in the instance of kindness—How great is the need in the world of ordinary kindness. We applaud kindness in great emergencies, as when after the cruelty of battle the devoted nurses minister to the suffering, supplying their needs without asking on which side in the conflict they stood—just ministering to them all as to men in need of friendliness.

But in the daily battle of life there are also the wounded and suffering, yet a kind inquiry, a friendly look, a hearty greeting is often enough to redeem a man from loneliness and heart exile, and remind him that he belongs in the circle of humanity.

If men were ordinarily kind, deferential, considerate of others, how many agonizing problems would cease to exist. No positive results whatever seem to be achieved by unkindness. A quarrel or a war between two nations may embitter the lives of men for generations. The resentful feeling may be like a tree producing poisonous fruit year after year, whereas an international courtesy may send a thrill of kind feeling thru a nation and produce patience, consideration, and good will for many years.

The ability to recognize kindness is the measure of how much one knows of it.

CARELESS PASSENGERS

The Pennsylvania railroad is taking justifiable pride in the fact that in the past two years it has carried 362,000,000 passengers without the loss of a single life in a train accident.

That is a better record than the passengers themselves have. For the railroad's statement does not mean that no passengers were killed; sixteenof them lost their lives—through their own fault. While the road was doing its best to safeguard them, they nullified its efforts by stepping in front of trains at stations, climbing on and jumping off moving trains, standing too near the edge of platforms, etc.

Likewise, while the road has greatly decreased the mishaps among its own employees and cut down the number of persons killed in walking along the track, it has not been able to eliminate such accidents, and never will. Train hands and tramps, like passengers, will take chances which a well managed railroad itself will not take.

It is well to remember this when criticising the railroads. Some lines, of course, are much to blame, even yet, for their lack of safety devices and neglect of proper precautions. But it is doubtful whether, in the case of the average railroad, the general public itself does not deserve at least half the blame for the high casualty rate.

Common Laborers Are Cetting Scarce

Track labor efficiency must of necessity receive more attention in this year's railway construction and maintenance programmes than ever before, according to the Electric Railway Journal.

The colossal struggle in Europe has depleted the ranks of the American army of common laborers, and since these losses cannot be replaced entirely, in so far as cheap track, labor is concerned, greater efficiency and an increased number of labor saving tools appear to afford the only solution of thep roblem. Added to these difficulties is the fact that the wages paid for ordinary labor in this country have been greatly increased, particularly for that class of labor capable of assisting in the manufacture of munitions and other war materials.

This has had a demoralizing effect on other industries to say the least, and when construction work opens this spring the indications are that the labor situation will be as critical as the delivery of some classes of materials. While this is a very satisfactory condition for labor, it presents a prospect for those requiring labor which will be difficult to surmount. Not only will increased efficiency and a reliance on more labor saving tools be necessary, but it will be difficult to hold the labor obtained if competition is keen.

If the greater use of machinery this year means a larger outlay for tools than has been necessary heretofore it is well to become reconciled to the fact immediately. Otherwise, those who fail to recognize existing conditions will doubtless be delayed in supplanting a shortage of labor with labor saving equipment, because prompt deliveries will be out of the question in the height of the construction season.

ONE DAY IN SEVEN FOR REST GAINS GROUND

The man who works seven days a week and who thus becomes so absorbed in himself and his work that he can talk nothing but "shop" was characterized as a "superbore" by former Judge Alton B. Parker in a paper prepared by him to be read at a meeting of the Republican Club of New York city.

"Socially," said Mr. Parker, "we need our old-fashioned Sabbaths more than any of the institutions or functions to which the social pages of our daily newspapers are devoted. What we DO when we meet socially does not count for so much as what we ARE. Who wants to meet a man whose nose is down on his work seven days a week?

"We have no name to describe such a man, and we need a name for execration after we have undergone the affliction of even brief intercourse with him. We must coin a word with which to anathematize him."

James M. Lynch, New York State commissioner of labor, said the movement for a weekly day of rest is gaining ground and that it is being accompanied with a markeed improvement in the laborers, in both their social and political relations.

Others who declared a weekly holiday is a necessity were Dr. E. G. Martin, professor of physiology at Harvard Medical School; Edward J. Gainor, president of the National Letter Carriers' Association, and Raynal C. Boiling, general counsel of the United States commissioner of labor, said the movement for a weekly day of rest is gaining ground and that it is being accompanied with a marked improvement in the laborers, in both their social and political relations.

Others who declared a weekly holiday is a necessity were Dr. E. G. Martin, professor of physiology at Harvard Medical school; Edward J. Gainor, president of the National Letter Carriers' Association, and Raynal C. Boiling, general counsel of the United States Steel Corporation.

TALKS ON THRIFT

No. 8.—SHE DIDN'T RAISE HER BOY TO BE A LOAFER

One of the most important lessons that a child can learn is that money is the representative of labor; a reward for services rendered; compensation for doing something, and not a gift to be had for the asking. The penny that is earned has a vastly different aspect from the one that is solicited. When the child grows up he will find that the world will not hand out money for the asking, but only in return for value. The growing boy or girl can have no better lesson than to be compelled to return something for their spending money. Even though the service rendered be trivial, such as carrying wood, washing dishes, dusting, etc., the value of the lesson remains.

After earning money by labor, it becomes necessary that it should be well spent in order that the benefit, both morally and financially, be lasting. If the child is merely taught to earn in order to spend, he is acquiring spendthrift habits which will enlarge as the years go by, and be disastrous. Every parent owes a duty to the child in training it first to earn largely and then to spend wisely.

The Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia employs over 50,000 boys in selling their publications in odd moments. Such training inspires them with the instinct of salesmanship to a very creditable degree. The Company offers to secure good positions for all those who show marked ability. A boy in Passiac, N. J., is earning $5 a week out of school hours, and has $100 in the bank. Such opportunities are on every hand for the boy, particularly, to profitably use his spare time, which might otherwise be frittered away to a damageable degree.

The selling of papers, running of errands for a store, and work of this order does not reflect on the standing of the parents—it is simply good training and those whose regard is worth having will recognize this fact.

A certain mother in Staten Island whose boy used his out of school time in delivering packages for a dyeing establishment and earned $1 a week, had the right idea. She insisted that he put a part of his earnings in the bank. As his earnings increased he increased his savings. He thought it hard at first to bank rather than spend his money, until he got the habit, but now he is glad his father was strict. He has recently bought an automobile out of his savings, which might appear extravagant, but with such training he is sure to turn it into an earning power.

A boy reared in such surroundings must be thrifty. This mother did not raise her boy to be a loafer, spending his time in the pool rooms, or on the streets wasting time, and learning bad habits; she helped him capitalize his spare moments for substantial results later on in life.

On the home training depends largely whether or not the boy is to be thrifty or spendthrifty; a saver or a waster; a soldier in the great army of those who work, or a loafer straggling in the rear.

Asquith's Refusal to Let Relief Reach Poland

American public opinion should insist upon our right to come to the relief of the wretched Polish war sufferers.

The conditions in that country are heart-rending.

While the Belgian people are clothed and fed by American charity, with the active aid of the German provisional government, the Polish people are dying by thousands of sheer hunger.

THERE ARE MORE THAN FOUR MILLIONS OF MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN who are suffering from hunger, cold and exposure at the very moment you are reading these words.

When the Russian armies were being driven from Poland the savage Cossacks were ordered to lay waste the whole country, and they performed their inhuman task with cruel thoroughness. The villages were destroyed, the crops were destroyed, the horses and cattle were destroyed, the farm implements were destroyed, and the poor people were driven like herded animals along the roads, or compelled to flee into the woods and swamps.

The devastation and cruelties committed by the savage Russian soldiery, under the orders of the Grand Duke Nicholas and the personal direction of Russian officers, are unparalleled in the history of all the world's tragedies.

These inoffensive, helpless creatures are literally starving to death. Thousands of their kin in this country and other thousands of Americans not their kin are willing and anxious to send to the poor starving Poles the same help we have extended to the poor Belgians.

But the British Government refuses to let clothing and food be sent through the sea blockade to alleviate the awful sufferings of the Polish people.

The British Government will not even permit RED CROSS SUPPLIES for the use of surgeons and nurses in the hospitals to go through the blockade.

The German Government has offered to pay gold for two shiploads of wheat to be taken to Poland by American commissioners and distributed by American agents to the starving Polish women and children, and Mr. Asquith, on behalf of the British Government, HAS JUST REFUSED TO PERMIT THIS RELIEF TO BE SENT.

The excuse for this inhuman refusal to let Americans feed these poor Polish sufferers, as we have been feeding Belgian sufferers, is that the food supplies would relieve Germany of the task of feeding this starving population, and so leave Germans with more food at home. We doubt if anything to equal the cold-blooded inhumanity of this action has ever stained the Government policy of any nation calling itself Christian and civilized.

The German people are forced to economize their own food supplies in order to get through from harvest to harvest. They are feeding am illion and a half prisoners of war, among then nearly two hundred thousand British captives.

The German Government CANNOT feed these three million suffering Polish People, deliberately reduced to staravation by England's ally, Russia, and Mr. Asquith knows that these people must perish unless American charity is permitted to succor and save them.

Then why are these miserable ones to be refused aid and to be left to suffer and die?

Why, THEY ARE JEWS.

It is the deliberate plan of the cruel Russian autocracy to let these people perish, BECAUSE THEY ARE JEWS.

Besides this, the British Government is naturally anxious to conceal as much as possible from the neutral world the real truth about the horrid and wholesale barbarities and cruelties of its half-civilizeda lly. A detailed account of the awful atrocities committed by the Russian soldiery, if given to America by AMERICAN Red Cross agents and AMERICAN charity commissioners at work in Poland, would excite a great revulsion of feeling in this country.

It is high time that all American newspapers told you this truth. It is high time that American public opinion was brought to bear upon Mr. Asquith's Government to compel recognition of American right to succor these starving millions in Poland, whose suffering are a hundred times more severe than any endured by the Belgians, whom we HAVE succored.

The fact that these miserable ones are Jews will not lessen the sympathy of Christian Americans.

Jew or Gentile, they are human beings, men and women like ourselves, children and babies like our own little ones, and our souls revolt against the thought that they should be left to perish in their agonies when we are so ready and so able to provide them the means of life.

The American press, the American people and the AMERICAN GOVERNMENT should insist upon the right of Americans to take medicines and clothing and food to the suffering, starving, perishing millions of inoffensive non-combatants in Poland.

The law of nations holds that food for non-combatants is exempt from seizure as contraband, and the law of humanity demands that we send food to these poor Polish war victims, without any regard to illegal and high-handed orders not to do so, no matter whether from London, Petrograd, Berlin or an yother capital.—N. Y. American.

MILITARY TRAINING FOR SCHOOLBOYS

Youngest Army Ever Called Mobilized in New York.

OFFICERS TALK TO YOUTHS

Preparations Being Made by Association to Accommodate 15,000 Boys at a Camp During the Summer—Many Prominent Men Have Their Sons Enrolled—General Wood Co-operates.

New York.—The youngest army ever called together was mobilized recently. One thousand New York schoolboys, aged twelve and up, met at national guard armories in Manhattan and Brooklyn to enroll for the big summer camp which is being organized by the National School Camp association of 1 Broadway.

The regiment which answered the call to the colors is but the first group of what is expected to be the largest schoolboy organization in the city. Preparations are being made by the association to accommodate as many as 15,000 boys at the camp during the summer.

The meetings were held with the approval and co-operation of Major General Leonard Wood, who detailed officers under his command to be present at the armories and talk to the boys enlisting.

The largest and most enthusiastic meeting was held at the Twenty-third Infantry Regiment armory on Bedford avenue, Brooklyn. Fully 600 boys enrolled and cheered Captain T. E. Murphy of Fort Wadsworth, who spoke to them. The officer told them of the advantages of preparedness. He narrated the military history of the country, giving examples of how heavy a price was paid for lack of preparedness.

Many prominent men attended the meeting to enroll their sons. Colonel Chamberlain of General Wood's staff brought his boy to stand in line with the sons of Colonel Mitcham, also of General Wood's staff, and of Lieutenant Commander Jessup of the Brooklyn navy yard.

A number of the faculty of the Brooklyn Polytechnic institute also was present. There is a plan under way to organize a battalion in the institute to attend the camp.

The idea of a great camp within trolley distance of New York has proved a most popular one. Hundreds of boys have had their applications filed a considerable time, while hundreds of parents have also written the association asking permission to enroll their boys.

The camp will probably be located on Staten Island, though the site has not yet been definitely picked. It will be a gunless camp; but, aside from this detail, the work will follow closely that done in grownups' organizations. Any boy over twelve in public school, high school or college is eligible to join. It is expected that a corps will be formed of medical students, who will have a splendid opportunity to study the important subject of camp sanitation.

The camp will open July 1 and will be held for two months. Boys may remain there from two weeks to the entire two months if they choose. The entire cost to each boy will be about 20 cents a day. Each young soldier will have to supply his own uniform, which will be similar to that of the boy scouts.

The incipient soldiers will be put through a stiff course of training in general field work, open order work and the other regulation army drills. In the meantime, before the camp is opened, the enrolled members of the camp will drill several days every week in the city armories.

Why Neponset Shingles Make a Good Roof

They give you a spark- and weather-proof covering over all the roof. As many a single-ply roof of this material is in perfect condition after 12 to 18 years' exposure, you can judge for yourself as to its durability when in a roof of several layers.

NEPONSET SHINGLES

are handsome (gray, dull red or green). They can't rust, decay, warp nor rattle. They cost less and weigh less than slate or tile, are more satisfactory than the best grade of wooden shingles and, being double width, cost less to lay.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS MUST BE LICENSED

A bulletin announced by Commissioner Wilson and available at the Department of Agriculture contains a list of the licensed commission merchants in the State. It gives the name of the firm and addresses of more than 300 commission concerns in New York City and the commodities each one deals in. Each firm is required to give a bond of $3,000. It is pointed out in the bulletin that if shippers of farm produce will make shipment of their farm produce to the firms listed they will be assured of having the protection of the law for the regulation of the business of commission merchants. It is suggested that such shipments be marked "To Be Sold on Commission."

Suggestions relative to the shipment of produce follow:

Sales of farm produce to commission merchants at a fixed price or a price to be agreed upon, are not sales on commission, and the above named law does not authorize this department to collect the amount due in case of non-payment; nor does it provide a penalty for such non-payment.

Many changes are liable to take place in this list due to death, retirement from business, discontinuance of commission business, change in business organization, revocation of license, bankruptcy, etc.

It is therefore advisable, before making a shipment of produce, that the shipper should ascertain if the party to whom he intends shipping same handles that kind of produce and in what quantities, and whether or not such party is duly licensed as a commission merchant and is still engaged in the sale of farm produce on commission.

It will greatly assist the commission merchant in hanndling produce expeditiously and in finding a good market therefore if the shipper will advise him of the kind, quality and approximate time of arrival of goods shipped or to be shipped.

DIPPEL'S OPERA A HIT IN FOREIGN CITIES

In "Princess Tra la-la" to be seen at the Richardson theatre Thursday evening, is promised a distinct treat in the way of operettas. The opera, which is under the management of Andreas Dippel, formerly connected with the Metropoliton and Chicago Grand Opera companies, has a score by Leo Ascher, the Viennese composer, which si said to be the most melodiously tuneful since the famous and never-to-be forgotten "Merry Widow" which captivated all music lovers several years ago.

The present opera, which ran with huge success in Paris up to the beginning of the war, and which has been an unqualified and continuous success in Vienna and Berlin for nearly two years, in spite of the European imbroglio, is unique in that it has a plot in which is woven two distinct love stories, both equally charming, which are woven though the opera in such a way as to produce moment after moment of unusually comic and dramatic worth.

HUNTER DEFENDS BATTLE ISLAND

Refutes Assertions Made by State's Attorneys That Water Power Had No Value.

Syracuse—Attorneys for the state, defending the $1,875,000 claim of the Battle sland Paper Company for damage to land and water rights, yesterday attempted to prove that the water power at the mill was of so little value that the company never had made money.

Monthly and annual reports made to the Board of Directors by Robert Hunter of Fulton, for several years manager of the comanpy, were read by Deputy Attorney-General Edward J. Mone, in charge of the defense, to prove this point. Most of these reports told of the difficulties encountered in the operation of a pulp mill. Some of the annual reports showed that the mill had made a profit. Befoore the state rests its case, it was said yesterday, and effort will be made to show that these profits were fictitious because the company failed to charge any depreciation of its property against its earaing.

Engineer to Testify

The case is being tried in the Court of Claims before Justices Ackerson and Fennell. The state probably will consume a week in submitting its defense. Today Edward M. Ellis of Minetto, an assistant engineer employed by the state in barge canal construction at the Battle Island site, will be on the stand.

Evidence submitted by the state shows that the water power rights were purchased by the paper company in 1902 from the Solvay Process company for $8,000.

Three residents of Fulton, each of whom was more than 70 years old, recalled surrounding facts in answer to his questions. They were Amos Youmans, Otto Scholz and Thomas McCormack. They said that a starch factory was located above the present Battle Island dam, to pave the way for the State to show that some of the company's power was taken by the starch factory.

Mr. Youmans said that in 1885 a large starch mill, one of the most important in the country, was erected on Battle Island. On the mainland there was a hamlet known as Bradstreet, where most of the mill employes lived. In January, 1861, a disastrous fire wiped out the mill and part of the village.

In 1867 the state built a dam in the Oswego river just below the island. Two years later Martin Chrysler, who claimed title to the island and the riparian rights, sued the state because he claimed the dam had destroyed the water power. He was awarded damage.

Robert B. Hunter was the most important witness placed on the stand by the defense. He identified the monthly and annual reports made by him to the Board of Directors and they were admitted as evidence.

Neither Charles E. Spencer, George W. Driscoll, nor William Nottingham, counsel for the company, cared to closely cross examine the aged witnesses and their testimony stood practically as it was given. The witnesses weren ot very definite on detail, but told generally what plonts were operated just before the Civil war. The starch factory was later burnt down and the old wooden dam which supplied the powerwasreconstructed in 1867, this time of stone.

According to the State's counsel, the State reimbursed the mill owners on the river for destruction of the riparian right through various constructions that took place in the years preceding 1867.

Much of the testimony of the aged men was apparently humorous and questioning brought little enlightenment. They couldn't remember details very well and attempts to refreshen their memory failed.

STATE WILL PAY FOR SLAUGHTERED ANIMALS

Announcement is made by Commissioner of Agriculture Charles S. Wilson that an appropriation of approximately $235,000 is to be provided for payment of claims for diseased cattle and glandered horses slaughtered by the State. All claims submitted and proved in the Deportment up to March 1st will be paid. Governor Charles S. Whitman was informed by Commissioner Wilson that in some cases the slaughter of diseased cattle or horses worked a hardship on the owner since the funds to pay claims were not immediately available and that as a result the owner is often affected disadvantageously especially if he is without money to replace the cattle killed.

In order that the cause of agriculture be not retarded in any way Governor Whitman gave his immediate approval of an appropriation from which the claims will be paid. The Governor was insistent that provision been ade for the payment of every claiim to March 1st.

The price and terms of the sale remain confendential, but it is asserted that Miss Crysler whose father at one time owned the island is satisfied with the sum realized.

Gayer Will Enter Against H. W. Kandt

Briggs, opened a drug store in East First street. Subsequently he purchased his partner's interest and removed to the Brooks block.

In 1909 his friends insisted that he become a Republican candidate for supervisor in this city for the Second and Third wards. He was elected in two close wards by a good majority. He entered upon his duties in 1910 and has been re-elected to this office—each time with increased majorities. In the election of 1915, when the Democratic candidate for mayor carrie dthe Second ward by 96, Mr. Gayer came through with a majority of 150. His own ward— the Third—gave him a walk away with 201 majority, making his total 351.

He has served several terms on both the city annd county Republican committees and has been one of the best campaigners and vote getters in the city of Fulton. Working with his friends in his home ward they have made the Republican pluralities increase each year, both for local, county, state and national tickets.

As a member of the board of supervisors, he has been a consistent worker. He has served on several important committees, among them might be named the ways annd means committee and the special committee to settle with the county clerk.

As a nominee for county treasurer he would give added strength to the Republican ticket. He is a man closely identified with everything to make Fulton bigger and better. He has a host of friends and supporters, who, were he nominated, would ignore all party lines and vote for him.

In the selection of candidates for the offices of the county, it might not be out of place to mention that no voter of the city of Fulton has ever been nominated for the office of country treasurer; and further, that no resident of this city is at present holding an elective county office. with one exception, G. M. Fanning, who is special county judge.

Fulton and this part of Oswego county present Mr. Gayer's name for consideration as ac andidate for the office of county treasurer on the Republican tickeet, requesting a united support of the members of the Grand Old Party.

the whereabouts of men who have deserted their families for the purpose of prosecuting them.

The committee which conferred with the Police & Fire Board advised that there is only money enough in the two departments to last until May 1st. It was stated that the appropriation made for the departments was sufficient. The Finance Committee was instructed to relieve the situation. $375, the quarterly library installment was ordered paid. Communications from the Directoyou Company and H. H. Bristol claiming erroneous assessments on personal taxes were referred to the Finance Committee. The Directoyou Company claims it is assessed by the State for personal taxes. Mr. Bristol stated that the Steam Pressing Machoine Company, which had no property or assets, had been assessed for $200 for the year 1916.

City Attorney Hillick advised the Board that if out-of-town laundrymen should be obliged to procure a license, the city laundries would be subject to the same requirement. It was stated to the Board that visiting laundrymen take about $60 worth of business from this city each week. The ordinance committee will report at the next regular meeting upon the findings. It is probable that another meeting will be held this month, when the board will listen to suggestions offered by the State examiner who is investigating the city's accounts.

Harry M. O'Brien, City Sealer, has been placed on the membership committee of the state organization of sealers. He cited an instance ofo where acquaintance with the sealer in Rochester resulted in a local man receiving a consignment of seeds to make up for a lot which he had found to be short.

EXPERTS IN HOMES

What Does Household "Efficiency" Mean to You?

MOSTLY INDIVIDUAL VIEWPOINT

Is It Running a Home Well or Inexpensively or Easily, or Is It, Rather, the Mental Attitude Women Maintain Toward Their Special Work?

What is your idea of household efficiency? To every woman the phrase means something different.

Perfect efficiency cannot be entirely a matter of book accounts, of time and labor saving devices—in fact, of physical work. Efficiency is as much a matter of mental attitude as anything else. Does this seem absurd to you on first thoughts? Think it over a little further, and the more you think into it the less absurd it will seem.

It has often been said that every single thing in the universe has first been built in mind before it has taken visible shape. The buildings have been planned in architects' minds; the streets have been all thought out by contractors; books, painting, music—all have had birth in mind first. So it is with every one of our successes, it is said. The success is thought of long before it actually arrives.

Now let us go back to this question of household efficiency being a mental attitude first and foremost. You may bring up in argument that a housewife may think efficiently as much as she likes, but if she has had no practice in running her home along the most approved lines she cannot very well put her thoughts into demonstration. You may say in proof that the girl who has spent her time in a business office cannot be as practical a housewife as the girl trained in domestic science no matter how efficient a mind the former may have.

Your theory, if you follow this line of reasoning, as so many women do, has some good points, but, on the whole, is without backbone. As a matter of fact, the business girl very often makes a much better housewife than the girl trained in all the homely arts. The business girl brings business methods to bear on the running of her home. She has an efficient mind and she uses it. For instance, she is quick to detect that many steps are lost in going from icebox to stove or from sink to china closet, and she seeks a remedy at once, whereas the home girl takes such things as a few extra steps here and there quite as a matter of course and would never think of trying to change things.

The woman of another type looks on housekeeping as the most stupid thing, to be hurried through and got rid of as quickly as possible. Still another type is fond of one particular branch of housework and neglects the rest of the work for its sake.

Now, how can such women run a well organized home? They may have all the practical knowledge on earth, but their attitude toward housekeeping is so very wrong that their homes will never be efficiently managed until they change their attitudes. When they have learned to look on housekeeping as an all-engrossing scientific study which requires all concentration and interest they will begin to show efficient results, not before.

out with lace and pink rosebuds. The model is so simple that any clever girl can make one for herself and any number for Easter brides.

Styles In Sleeves.

All the new tight bodices have long tight sleeves, but on the picture blouses there are sleeves which recall the leg-o'-mutton outline and also sleeves finished off with voluminous frills of fine lace or embroidered tulle. For morning blouses the simple bishop sleeve holds its own bravely. For washing blouses this is the best of all sleeves. It is as practical as it is becoming.

Potatoes Stuffed With Sausage.

Potatos bercy are raw potatoes tunneled with an apple corer and with the cavity filled with sausage. Pare the potatoes, brush them with butter and bake. Serve with chops, steak or as an accompaniment to cold meat for supper or luncheon.

A GRACEFUL FROCK.

King's blue meteor satin develops this original frock with winged panels on the sides of the skirt, which is shirred three times across the back. A charming feature of the bodice is the beaded cape, done in different shades of blue beads. The high collar takes the line of the cape in the back.

There are many tempting ways of serving dates besides plain and as a sweet. Use them as a filling for sandwiches. Take two cups of dates, put them through a meat chopper, then add a cup of peanut butter and blend them together. Then spread the paste between slices of white bread.

Another woman also uses dates in baked custard, in tapioca and as filling for cookies, pies and cakes. Mixed with apples, celery and nuts they make a delicious salad. To use dates as a pudding cooked with rice, add to a quart of milk a cup of stoned dates and a quarter of a cup of rice. Sweeten and bake in a slow oven.

Cook keeps in her cold closet an assortment of pastes and butters that are used so much in preparing relishes for the tea, after dinner suppers and bridge parties. She has them ready in small, labeled glass jars and tidbits and sauces can be made at a moment's notice. Here are a few of her best recipes:

Sardine Butter.—Rub skinned and boned sardines to a paste and then gradually blend. A little lemon juice may be added to butter to give it very desirable sandwich flavors. Orange butter for afternoon tea sandwiches can be mixed with chopped nuts and figs or any other sweet filling. Grated orange rind may flavor the butter.

Olives may be ground in a vegetable chopper, mashed to a paste and creamed into butter. Capers are chopped and creamed with butter, and either of these can be used on broiled chops or beefsteaks, as sandwich butters or on green peas or string beans to improve the flavor.

Make Your Own Fernery.

You can have success with grapefruit seeds by taking a few precautions. When planting these seeds do not keep any that have been cut. Then, before planting, the seeds should be soaked for one day or at least half a day. Fill the receptacle up to within three-quarters of an inch of the top with dirt mixed with a little sand, on which place the seeds so thickly that no soil can be seen. Then cover with dirt and keep in a warm, sunny place, wetting with warm water, but not too wet. The seeds sprout in about five weeks. They are both beautiful and hardy and need practically no attention.

Prune Gelatin.

One heaping tablespoonful of powdered gelatin, two cupfuls of water, half a pound of good prunes, three tablespoonfuls of sugar and the strained juice of one orange are required for this dish. Take the stones out of the prunes after soaking them. Cut the prunes in halves, put them into a saucepan with the water and sugar and cook very slowly until soft; then add the gelatin, first dissolving it in hot water, and the orange juice. Pour into a wet ring mold. When set serve with whipped and sweetened cream in the center. Decorate with lady fingers.

The Strange Case of MARY PAGE

The Great McClure Mystery Story, Written by FREDERICK LEWIS In Collaboration With JOHN T. M'INTYRE, Author of the Ashton Kirk Detective Stories. Read the Story and See the Essanay Moving Pictures

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Page, actress, is accused of the murder of James Pollock and is defended by her lover, Philip Langdon. Pollock was intoxicated. At Mary's trial she admits she had the revolver. Her maid testifies that Mary threatened Pollock with it previously, and Mary's leading man implicates Langdon. How Mary disappeared from the scene of the crime is a mystery. Brandon tells of a strange hand print he saw on Mary's shoulder. Further evidence shows that horror of drink produces temporary insanity in Mary. The defense is "repressed psychosis." Witnesses described Mary's flight from her intoxicated father and her father's suicide. Nurse Walton describes the kidnaping of Mary by Pollock.

STAGE ASPIRATIONS

NOT since the famous trial that sent the expression "brain storm" spinning down through the years, has the testimony of an allenist so greatly stirred an excited world as did the phrase "Repressed Psychosis," with which Dr. Foster summed up the temporary insanity of Mary Page.

It spread through the court and the throngs in the corridor; it sped over the telephone wires to the waiting newspapers of the city. It even reached the zenith of publicity and became the inspiration of the cartoonists, but all this was after that day when Dr. Foster, once more upon the witness-stand, told with technical brevity of how prenatal influence, increased by fear and suffering, re-acted upon the delicate brain tissues under the strain of a great shock.

Much of what he said was entirely unintelligible to the excited audience. It was therefore with a little rustling sigh of relief that they heard Langdon abruptly change his line of questioning and say:

"How long after the night at Dr. ——'s sanatorium did Miss Page remain in your hospital?"

"It was nearly three weeks before she was able to go, and even then it was with some trepidation that I consented to her leaving."

"Did you fear a return of—her—illness?"

"Yes. I knew that excitement or a nervous strain of any sort would have an injurious effect, and I warned both Miss Page and Mr. Langdon to protect her as much as possible."

"Did you fear a return of—her—illness?"

"Dr. Foster, did you ever see James Pollock after the night he took Miss Page to Zellar's?"

"Yes. I saw him again on the day when Miss Page left my sanatorium."

"Will you tell us the circumstances of that second meeting, please?"

"Miss Page and her mother and Mr. Langdon were just about to leave, in order to take a train to New York when Mr. Pollock drove up to the sanatorium in his motor. I was very indignant at his daring to come to the hospital after what had occurred, and asking the Pages and Mr. Langdon to go into my office and wait, I went to the door myself and peremptorily ordered Mr. Pollock to leave the grounds. He refused to go, saying that he had something of great importance to say to Miss Page. He would not, he said, ask to see her alone, but it was his right to see her if he wished, because their engagement had not been broken. I [illegible] it was best to let him see Miss Page and receive his dismissal. So I took him into the office."

"Did Miss Page show any distress at sight of him?"

"Yes. She gave a little cry almost of fear and clung to her mother, and would not answer his greeting."

"What did Mr. Pollock say?"

"He said, 'You have no reason to shrink from me like that, Mary. At worst what I have done has been because I loved you. You have promised to marry me, and so far that promise has not been taken back, and now I have come to know what you are going to do. It seems to me that we ought to be married at once—as—as—I have information that your father's death has left you—without—well, without the comforts that I will be glad to give you. I have waited for three weeks for some word from you, and now I have come to claim my fiancee!'"

"Did Miss Page reply?"

"Yes. She went up to him boldly and said without any signs of nervousness of the moment before, 'If I have not taken back my promise, James, it is because I have been too ill to think of it. But I do take it back now. I will never marry you so long as I live, and I never want you to speak to me again. I detest you, and since you can no longer harm my father, the reason for my promise to you is gone. That is all I have to say. Good-bye.' At that Pollock got very white and said hoarsely, 'Does that mean that you are going to marry Langdon?' 'It means,' she said, 'that after what has happened I shall never marry anyone. We are going to New York, where I hope to secure a position.'"

"Did Mr. Pollock show any surprise at that?"

"No, but he was obviously chagrined. And then I interfered and reminded Mrs. Page that they would miss their train if there was any further delay, and they left, Pollock driving away in his machine almost directly back of them."

"Did Miss Page seem calm and collected?"

"Yes, outwardly; but there was a look in her eyes that made me fearful for her future, and her hands had resumed their nervous twitching when I put her into the automobile.

"It made me realize that the great influence to fear for her was Pollock, and it is my decided opinion that if, as I have heard, he continued to persecute the defendant, the result would—"

"I object!" stormed the District Attorney, leaping to his feet. "Dr. Foster's last assertion that the defendant's mental ailment was aggravated through the continued persecution of James Pollock, is hearsay evidence, and a direct maligning of a dead man."

"I sustain that objection," said the judge sternly, adding to the doctor, "You must restrict yourself to answering questions, Dr. Foster. Let the answer be stricken out from the words, 'into the automobile.'"

The doctor, a flush of annoyance on his face, turned questioningly toward Langdon.

"No more questions," said Langdon.

But the prosecutor had. He got to his feet with the alacrity of a fighting man going into battle. With a tongue steeped in vitriol he attacked the testimony of the alienist; he held Mary Page up as a hysterical girl who had sought notoriety; he flung doubt upon the possibility of a "temporary" mental derangement, but though he tortured Mary until with shuddering horror she sank forward in her chair, her hands pressed against her ears to shut out the sound of his voice, he could not shake the smiling imperturbability of Dr. Foster.

Cross examination meant nothing to the latter, and much as he regretted the strain upon the pitiful little prisoner, he really enjoyed pitting his power against that of the prosecutor.

So his answers came with cool deliberation, and a hint of insolence that won the admiration of the spectators who were divided between zest in the stirring battle and pity for Mary. But it was the sympathy that came uppermost.

At last, unable to bear any longer the brutal wrangle over her sanity, Mary leaped to her feet, a little moaning cry of protest wrung from her white lips. Langdon was at her side in an instant, his hands drawing her down into her chair again, his lips whispering encouragement and comfort, till she smiled up at him—a wavering, pathetic little smile.

To the prosecutor in his present savage humor it seemed a carefully planned bit of by-play, yet he could so plainly see its effect upon the jury, and could read so clearly the antagonism growing in their eyes when they looked at him, that with an abrupt shrug he swung upon his heel and sat down with a curt "That's all."

That released Dr. Foster, and sent him back triumphantly to the witness-room. There were two newcomers there now, a sweet-faced matronly looking woman of middle age, rather old-fashioned in her dress, and a young girl of about twenty-five who was divided between nervous fears and youthful zest. She was destined to be the next witness, and Dr. Foster smiled involuntarily when he saw her. Most people smiled at Amy, for that matter, for she was bubbling over with youth and laughter, but for all that, her gaiety was backed up by the shrewdness of the modern girl who fights her own battles promptly and successfully.

Her tailored suit and soft blouse open at the throat were smartly cut, and her hat was a hint daring in its shape and the way it was tilted over her little nose, and when the bailiff called her name, "Miss Amy Barton," her agitation led her to tip it at an even more dangerous angle as she tried to powder her nose and kiss her mother at the same time.

"I'm scared blue!" she confided to the other witnesses in a shaky voice. "A first night is a cinch to this. What do I have to say?"

"You have only to answer questions," said Dr. Foster, "and there is really nothing to be frightened about."

"I suppose not," she answered as she went through the door, "but I wouldn't care anyway. I'd go be hanged if it would help Mary."

Under the careless words there was a sudden deeper note of sincerity, and the moment she was on the stand she turned to the judge and said:

"I don't know what I am supposed to do, your Honor, but I want to tell you right here, that Mary Page is the best and the bravest and the truest girl in the whole wide world."

For the first time the judge smiled; then he leaned forward and said kindly:

"The Court appreciates your admiration for the prisoner, but you must confine your remarks, while on the stand, to the answers to questions which will be asked you."

"Oh, yes, I was told that," she answered readily. "But I forgot." Then turning to Langdon she added cheerily, "Fire away, Mr. Langdon, I'm all ready."

A little gust of laughter rippled through the court. Then Langdon coming close to the witness stand, said quietly:

"Miss Barton, you know the defendant, Mary Page, do you?"

"Why, of course I do, you goat!" she answered with a bubbling laugh that found an echo in the room. But Langdon frowned, and his voice was more harsh as he said, "Please answer yes, or no, and remember that if you want to aid Miss Page, you must make your answers short and to the point. Now will you please tell the court just when and how you first met Miss Page?"

"It was some years ago, and she and her mother came to our apartment with a note from Cousin Alice Cowes, who lived in New Town. Cousin Alice had sent them to us because she knew we had an extra room we wanted to rent, and she thought that I could help Mary land a job."

"What sort of—er—position?"

"In the merry-merry—that is, on the stage. I'd been across the foots myself for a couple of seasons and Cousin Alice said Mary wanted to become an actress and thought I could show her how to make the rounds. It's a tough proposition getting a job in New York with no friends and no pull."

"Will you tell the court, please, Miss Barton, about the first position secured by Miss Page and of the events that led up to it?"

"Well, it just happened that the day Mary hit the big town I had a date with Webster, the real boss of the musical comedies. Of course he isn't the sort that you'd want to send your little sister from the country to see, but too much hedging don't go in the show business worth a whoop. You've got to trust to a sharp tongue and a hat-pin till you show them where they get off and once they're wise, they treat you all right. Webster was like that, but if he promises you a part he plays fair so I never was afraid to buck his office-boy even on a busy day. So off we went.

"I had an appointment with the old man, but he was scrapping with one of his 'romantic leads'—you could hear them clear out to the front hall—and it was a long time before I could persuade his little cerberus to go in and tell him I was waiting. At any rate he came out at last blowing blasts of red fire after the actor—and then he saw Mary. Talk about lions and lambs. Why, he purred when he saw her, and he was so sweet to me I almost got a leading lady's contract out of him before he woke up, and began to ask me questions about Mary. Then he tried to kiss her and I put an inch or so of my hat pin in his arm just above the elbow. Mary and I beat it while the going was good, and Mary was so upset we decided to go right home instead of calling on any of the other managers. That was how we happened to run into Jim Pollock."

"Where did you meet Mr. Pollock?"

"Oh, he was on the job at the apartment when we got home. Playing the humble but persistent swain—wanted to lay his fortune at her feet and give her a life of gilded ease. He pleaded all that sort of soft-music stuff, and told her she didn't realize how cruel the world was to a girl (men always say that) and how she would suffer to see her mother growing old and lacking the comforts she could not earn for her. Then he pulls out his wallet and taps it, saying, 'All that I have is yours, Mary, even if you don't marry me.' Business of soft music!"

"Were you in the room while this was going on?"

"No," she answered, winning a gale of laughter from the court-room, "but you can't brush your teeth in a New York apartment without the people in the next door flat hearing you, and everything that Mary said or Jim Pollock said, might as well have been shouted through a megaphone."

"Did Miss Page seem touched by Mr. Pollock's offer?" said Langdon, repressing a smile with difficulty.

"No, she stood up to him spunkily and told him flat where he got off. 'I'm going to get work,' she said, 'but even if I didn't my mother and I would never accept any help from you. I have only one thing to ask, and that is that you leave here at once and do not come again.' He came out in the hall where I had the door all nicely opened for him. I told him sweetly that I'd opened it for him to get out, but I'd be shot before it ever opened to let him in again. I ran back to the sitting-room, to find Mary in a dead faint. It was such a long time before she came round, and then she was so dazed and terrified that we were all scared to death, and I swore a solemn vow then and there that I'd be the busiest little stage mother and chaperon and advice giver to Mary that any girl ever had."

Her voice suddenly trembled, and the quick tears filled her eyes as, turning to Mary, she cried eagerly:

"And, Mary, I've kept my word, haven't I? Haven't I?"

Mary nodded, smiling through her own tears, and the spectators who throughout the breezy testimony of the young actress had been in gales of laughter, suddenly sobered. They saw the brave heart under the butterfly exterior, and realized the wisdom and the goodness behind the vulgar words.

Langdon, seeing the judge frown at this shattering of legal precedent, asked his next question quickly.

"You and Miss Page did secure positions in the same company, did you not?"

"Oh, yes, in 'The Blue Feather.' Mary took to it like a duck to water, and made a hit with the stage manager before he'd got through calling the rest of us all the names in his vocabulary. So when it came to one bit where the fat tenor had to choose a girl out of the chorus to sing an encore with him, Mary got the chance, and made good, too. But that was afterwards."

"She told him flat where he got off."

"Well, suppose you tell us what occurred on the day 'The Blue Feather' opened."

"Oh, the day was the same as any other opening day. We'd rehearsed half the night and started in at eight-thirty in the morning, and we were all tired to death and wished we were dead. It's always like that a few hours before the overture on an opening night, so Mary and I were mighty glad to slip out home and rest an hour before going back to make up. We didn't dare stay long, though, for being late is the worst sin in the box at a show-shop, so it was round about seven when we got on our lids and were ready to beat it back. Just when we were leaving, though, mother came running in and said, 'Oh, Mary, Philip Langdon is here and he wants to see you just a minute before you leave.' At that Mary lights all the lamps in her eyes, and went into the sitting room with me a close second.

"Mr. Langdon was there talking to Mrs. Page and when we came in she called out, 'Mary, Philip has given up his practice in New Town and has come here to live.' At that he came over and took Mary's hand in both of his and said, 'Please be glad, Mary. I heard that Pollock had gone into business here and I worried so about you. I felt I had to come. Let me be your friend and protector, even if I can't be anything more, won't you, Mary?' 'Oh, but you oughtn't to give up your practice, Phil,' she said, beginning, just like a woman, to kick against the thing that pleased her most. 'You—you—may not like it here.' But he laughed at that, and they began to talk so much that I got worried and butted in by reminding Mary that she was an actress now and had to hustle. Then Mr. Langdon had to be told all about it, and the result was we had to run three blocks to get in at the stage door before they began to keep tabs on the late comers. Mr. Langdon was to go with mother and Mrs. Page, and I soon spotted them up in the balcony, for the management doesn't hand out boxes for the families of its front row of the chorus, but in one of the boxes I did see a familiar face—that of Pollock. He was all gotten up in soup and fish, but he was alone, and I could see that he was taking Mary all in, and then some. Mary had told me a lot about him, and the piker way he'd acted, and she'd also told me a lot about Mr. Langdon, so I decided that I wouldn't put her wise to the fact that Pollock was there, but would let her play to the balcony, which she did. She was so pretty and so happy that she got a silly song over big, and even the tenor had the decency to make her go on and take a curtain with him. Everybody just made a fuss over her till Mary fairly cried, she was so happy. And the part that seemed to please her most was that she had seen Langdon applauding his hands off up stairs."

"Mary lights all the lamps in her eyes."

"Did you join your mother and Mrs. Page after the show?" interrupted Langdon warningly.

"That was the big idea," she said. "But it hit the rocks, for when Mary and I hustled into our glad rags and started for the door we bumped squarely into the stage manager and Mr. Pollock—the latter all done up to kill, even to a top hat. 'Oh, Miss Page,' sings out Ecky (that's the manager) 'here's a gentleman from your home town, that wants to take you out to supper and see you home in a buzz wagon.' He laughed nastily as he spoke, and I could feel Mary's hand go cold as ice as she grabbed mine and says, 'I have no desire to take supper with Mr. Pollock, either now or at any other time to come, Amy.' But that made old Ecky sore, so he began to roar like a bull and shouts, 'What's this? Are you crazy?' But Pollock interrupted him—there was a quick business of being hurt to the heart; the misunderstood soul—and the chivalry stunt was pulled off without a break. Then he says, 'Miss Page is quite within her rights. I do not wish an unwilling guest. Perhaps my moment of renewing her acquaintance was inopportune,' and he stalks away for all the world like the heavy in the third act. But old Ecky was up in the air, and he began rowing Mary for fair. He told her, the dog, that it was her beauty, not her talent, that 'got the house,' and added, 'It's your business here to be civil to your admirers and go to supper when they ask you. If you're goin' to ride a high horse I've got no use for you in this show.'"

"Did Miss Page answer him?"

"No, I think she was too horrified, and old Ecky, thinkin' that silence meant consent, told her to stay there till he brought Mr. Pollock back. The minute his back was turned I gave Mary the cue to get away quick, but we didn't have to, for just then Mr. Langdon came in, and we beat it for him. We didn't have time to tell him what had happened before old Ecky came back with Mr. Pollock and they both stopped short when they saw Mr. Langdon with us and then Mr. Pollock drawls out, 'You see this Miss Page is not so virtuous as she pretends. She's not even particular in her choice—everybody knows that.' He must have intended us to hear, but what he didn't give any high sign for, was for Mr. Langdon to make a jump and grab him by the throat, shouting that he'd have to eat his words or he'd kill him. Old Ecky is deathly afraid of a fight and began to holler for the stage crew, but I got out my little old trusty hat-pin and promised anybody that came near two or three inches of it, so the men just stood around swearing and grinning behind their hands till Mr. Pollock was licked to a standstill and asked Mr. Langdon to let up. Then Mr. Langdon ordered him out of the theatre, and he—went! But while he was on his way I'd spied a pen and some ink on the prompt desk, and made Mary write out our joint resignation which we handed to old Ecky with business of much pomp as soon as the stage crew had gone back to work. It was a knockout for old Ecky. You see, he knew Mary had made a hit, and that the show had got over good, and to have to train in two new recruits for our parts before the next night was some job. So he turned on the soft soap, but we beat it towards the door, and Mr. Langdon marches up to Ecky and hands him his card, saying calmly, 'These girls are quite within their rights because of what has happened. Added to which I understand that you told Miss Page you did not need her if she wouldn't accept the attentions of men obnoxious to her. Well, I'm a lawyer and I'll look after their interests. You can send your attorney to me at any time.'

"So we got away and went home—jobless but happy. Of course when we told them at home Mrs. Page said Mary must give up her stage career, but she was too spunky for that."

"She said no, that the mistake she'd made was in getting a chorus job, and that if I was willing we might try for some small road company and work our way up in the 'drama'. I would have followed Mary any place, so I said I was on, and we even talked Mr. Langdon down before he left."

"That is all, thank you, Miss Barton," said Langdon with a smile as she finished, and Amy, looking around bewildered, asked the judge confidentially:

"What do I do now, your Honor?"

"You answer a few questions for me," said the prosecutor with a honeyed sweetness. "Miss Barton, you are a very good actress, are you not?"

"Go ask my press agent!" she answered pertly; and he flushed.

"Well, at any rate you can be very convincing in saying things—let's call it reciting lines—that have nothing to do with events that really happened, can't you? Especially in a sympathetic role?"

"If you're trying to put anything across," she said slowly, "you've come to the wrong shop. I took the oath and I don't swear to tell the truth and then lie. I'm an actress, not a lawyer."

A burst of laughter swept the room, and the judge's gavel came down sharply, though the corners of his mouth twitched as he said to Amy:

"You must confine your remarks to answering the questions put you, Miss Barton."

"I am," she replied imperturbably, and the prosecutor flushed as he asked sharply:

"Isn't it true that you said you would do anything in the world to save Mary Page?"

"Isn't it true that you're doing everything in the world to ruin her?"

"That is not answering my question," roared the prosecutor. "This is contempt of court—you have sworn to tell the truth—tell it."

"Tell it to a policeman!" scoffed Amy. "I have told the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and there isn't any more to tell, unless you'll let me tell you what poor business I think you have for your part of the show."

"Silence!" roared the judge and the prosecutor in unison, and now Amy,

"I do not wish an unwilling guest."

looking up at his Honor, smiled and brought into view a dimple, as she said quietly,

"Your Honor, I don't mind answering questions, but I'm so used to being hollered at in rehearsals that the usual line of chatter just slips out."

Again a gale of laughter swept the room, and the prosecutor, realizing that the pertness of the actress was a shield behind which he could not penetrate, and feeling that her testimony was after all unimportant, dismissed her with a shrug.

At her glad, "Oh, can I go?" the laughter broke out afresh; but it died away when she ran straight to Mary's side, and before the bailiff or Langdon could stop her, had leaned over and impulsively kissed her cheek.

"You darling!" she cried, and suddenly burst into tears—the genuine childish sobs of one whose heart is overflowing with pity. When she was led back to the witness-room she was no longer an obscure little actress—she was famous. For the time at least she even overshadowed Mary—so much does the old world love those who laugh and yet have tender hearts beneath the gaiety.

A beavy of beauties with "THE ONLY GIRL" at The Quirk, Tuesday, April 11th.

In the dainty and bewitching musical comedy, "The Only Girl," which comes to the Quirk one night only, Tuesday, April 11th, there is an enticing song and story, beautifully told, harmoniously blended possessing consistent continuity of the romantic kind. tI is well laden with clever satire and it can truthfully be stated that it is one of the most seductive and dainty plays that has been offered to thep ublic for a number of seasons. It stands to reason that it should be attractive because it is written by two of the cleverest writers for the stage conspicuous before American theatre goers. Victor Herbert is the author of the music, and Henry Blossom has contributed the book, therefore the joint work of two gentlemen of unchallenged reputation in their respective lines of endeavor. Mr. Herbert's music, as everybody knows, is delightful; he has never written anything that has not been well received by the public. As a writer of satire and clever wit, Henry Blossom has never been excelled. There is a quaint vein of humor in Mr. Blossom's writings that is most delightful. It never offends but has never failed to bring forth peals upon peals of laughter. "The Only Girl" had its bringing out at the Lyric Theatre, New York, last season where it remained on view constantly at that one playhouse for a period of about ten months, with two exceptions the only play that had a run of any particular length in New York during the seasons of 1914-15. The play was brought out by Joseph Weber, of Weber and Feilds fame, conceded to be one of the best judges of theatrical material in the country. "The Only Girl" came up to every expectation andn received the plaudits of the multitude, as well as the highest enconiums of the best dramatic writers who saw it. It was universally praised as a theatrical presentation, far above the average and one worthy of the best thought and attention upon the part of theatre goers. Proper attention was given to every detail of the production especially to the costuming of all thep articipants. There are hosts of pretty girls in the cast. The scenes of which there are three, are located in New York.

30 VILLISTAS KILLED IN FIGHT

El Paso, Texas—The Tenth cavalry engaged a band of Villistas near Aguas Calientes, south of Bachiniba, last Saturday, killing between thirty and forty of the bandits and capturing an equal number of mounts, it became known here today.

Despite this news there was marked depression in military circles here today when reports arrived tending to confirm the belief that Villa and eight of his followers left San Andres Saturday, apparently headed for south of thel ine of the Northwestern Railroad. It is realized that if Villa has got well south of the railroad and is unwounded the task that the American expedition undertook nearly three weeks ago has got to be done all over again, in the face of obstacles farg reater than any that have yet been faced. The cavalry made a gallant drive after the bandit, but without a railroad and without the co-operation of the Carranza forces that had been promised, and expected, and they could not catch up with their man.

No motor truck supply train can help out a cavalry force that undertakes to follow Villa south from San Andres along the route that he has taken. A base established on the Northwestern, at Santa Isabel, might provide for a column which tried to operate thirty or even forty miles south.

But Villa by this time is either in Satevo or far south of there, headed for the mountains of the Parral district, or the almost inaccessible tablelands of Durango. And with only eight men to burden his retreat in a territory where everybody is friendly to him and fresh mounts are plentiful they can travel swiftly. Military men acknowledge privately tonight that the United States is squarely facing the problem either of withdrawing the punitive expedition from the country and admitting it has failed of its object, or furnishing it with the means to continue the chase.

REYES ASKS AMNESTY; VILLA RUSE SUSPECTED

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—All Staatsburg turned out and, headed by the village cornet band, serenaded Timothy Herrick, eighty, who returned from a visit to Syracuse, bringing with him his bride, formerly Miss Martha Wallace, thirty-nine, a schoolteacher of that city.

Herrick, who for fifty years has been superintendent on the William B. Dinsmore estate, recently refurnished his cottage. Nothing was thought of this, however, until his arrival with the bride.

Herrick has six children, all married. His first wife died four years ago.

GERMANS HURLED BACK FROM VAUX

Paris—A powerful German attack against the first lines of the French south of Douaumont was repulsed yesterday and the Germans were driven back in thed irection of Chauffour Wood, which lies to the northwest. The French artillery concentrated their fire on the retiring Germans, who, according to the official statement issued by the French War Office last night, suffered considerable losses.

On the west of the Meuse a German attack against Haucourt failed.

No infantry attacks were made on Monday night by the Germans in the Verdun region, the War Office announced in the afternoon.

The French continued their heavy bambardment along the Douaumont-Vaux front, northeast of Verdun. The response was feeble. There were violent artillery exchanges near Avocourt and Malancourt.

ARMY MEN WORRY OVER R. R. SITUATION

El Paso, Texas—The news that the Villa forces had suffered a second defeat at the hands of the American troops, this time at Aguas Calientes, thirty miles northeast of Guerrero, was received here in a markedly sober manner compared with the elation over the first blow struck by Colonel George A. Dodd last Wednesday.

Confirmation of the news that Villa himself is far to the south, approaching Parral, has materially lessened interest in the actual pursuit of the bandit and has diverted attention once more to the railroad problem, which, army officers here admit, is becoming acute.

There is frank skepticism is army circles here over General Pershing's ability to push much farther into Mexico without the aid of the railroads. It is pointed out that the numbeer of men required to guard the present 300 miles or more of communication is out of all proportion to the total number of troops at General Pershing's disposal. Even if General uFnston is able to get the reinforcements he has askedf or, the problem will still be a serious one.

Word. is awaited from Washington as to the outcome of the negotiations pending with General Carranza, as it is felt that some solution must be found to the situation without any great delay.

VETERAN WAITED DEATH, BUT NOW LIKES LIFE

After Digging Own Grave He Falls In Love and Is Hoping He Will Live Longer—Notes Cause Happiness.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Out in Forest Home cemetery there is an open grave waiting for Francis Marion Collins, an inmate of the Soldiers' home in this city.

Five years ago, after Collins had been denied permission by the cemetery authorities to dig his own grave, he went to the city of the dead one dark, rainy night and by the light of a lantern prepared it. Collins is aged eighty-nine. He had a tombstone, inscribed, as he had directed, with everything but the date of his death, erected.

But, though Collins is nearly four score and ten years old and ready to die, he doesn't want to give up the ghost just yet. After making preparations for the last act of the long drama of his life he turned eagerly to life and love. In fact, he has a sweetheart now. Her first name is Annette. He won't tell the rest. She is keeping the veteran interested in life by writing him interesting love letters and visiting him at the home several times a year.

Collins served four years during the war in Company I, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Pennsylvania infantry, Army of the Potomac.

"Sam" Massaro Returns from Mexican Service; Employed by Villa

Bearing a bullet mark over his eye and claiming to have been shot twice in the body in a battle with Carranbistas, "Sam" Massaro, who is visiting his brother Frank, in this city, gave an interesting account of the six months he spent in the employ of the Mexican bandit, Villa, for whom he acted as chauffeur.

Mr. Massaro had his own car, a big six National in which he carried Villa and his staff in the early part of 1915. During that time, Mr. Massaro says, he never witnessed a display of villany on the part of the bandit for whom U. S. soldiers are now combing the desert wastes of Mexico. He does not deny that Villa has not persecuted those who opposed him, but at the same time Villa is acknowledged to be a "good fellow" by those with whom Mr. Massaro was associated.

Mr. Massaro in giving an account of his services with the Mexican furnishes all the thrills found in the "thrillers." He tells of his flight in an aeroplan; of seeing an American bound and ready to be executed on the following morning, and how he indulged in a hair-raising getaway over the desert to Douglas, Arizona.

"Just before making my departure from Villa's camp," Mr. Massaro stated, "an American named Miller who had committed an offense, was taken captive by Villa' ssoldiers and directed to be shot. The night before sentence was to be imposed, I and a fellow named McMann, of New York City, who was flying the only aeroplane possessed by the camp, arranged for our departure (French leave, so to speak), figuring on taking Miller with us. In this we were successful. I managed to evade the guard and cut the bounds on the young fellow and in the big car we "beat it." This fellow McMann was supposed to get $50,000 a year for operating the aeroplane, but he was lucky to pull down $3,[illegible]

Mr. Massaro says that concentrated at Masicale, Mexico, he saw 10,000 Japanese soldiers who were constantly at drill. United States officials were aware of this, he says as one was present at the time Villa's band was in the neighborhood. While he was acting as Villa's chauffeur, the entire army moved through the State of Chihuahua and lower California. Near Douglas, Arizona, the most important battle ensued. It was there that Massaro received his bullet wounds.

Mr. Massaro left the city at noon today, to return Friday.

Villa Maintains Lead In Flight of Endurance

El Paso, Texas—The race between Pancho Villa and the picked troops of the United States cavalry has become a straightway endurance test of both me nand horses.

The Mexican chieftain is reported nearly 100 miles southeast of Chilhuahua city. He was at Soucillo, east of Satevo, and a short distance west of the Mexican Central Railroad early Tuesday morning.

The pursuing force, believed to be two squadrons of the Seventh Cavalry, is still many miles to the rear, in the vicinity of Satevo. They are riding hard through a country said to be infested with outlaws.

The Americans are so far ahead of the advance base that the reports fail to tell whether they are gaining or losing ground in the race.

This information was received today by courier from Chilhuahua.

Villa, according to this information, is leading his small bodyguard of ten or a dozen trusted men on a handnsome charger owned by William Benton, the Englishman he is said to have personally put to death in 1914.

The Benton ranch is near Santa Ysabel, which place has been made the extreme southern base for the advanced forces.

A motor truck train a mile long left Columbus at dawn with supplies and fresh horses consigned to his new base.

If Villa was in full possession of his health and traveling at his usual speed of forty or more miles a day he should have reached and passed Parral by this time.

"General Pershing has been convinced the Mexicans are not going to help catch Villa whether they be Carranzistas or not."

The situation along the border has not improved.

Clean-up, Paint-up, Brighten-up and Live-up Campaign will soon be started. A few things to look over:

If your store front is dingy, paint it!

If your awning is ragged and old, get a new one!

If your walk is an eyesore to those traveling over it, repair it or have a new one!

If there are old, unsightly traps in front of your property or in your alley, move them!

If there happens to be paper blowing about your street burn it!

If in your back yard there are old, unnecessary, tumble down sheds, tear them down. The ground is too valuable, and such things detract from the beauty of your homes—and, the town.

Clean out all back yards and stables at once—don't give the fly a chance to breed.

Clean out the alleys back of the business houses at once.

Take away all rubbish from your back yard immediately.

FRENCH RETAKE OLD STRONG HOLD

London—The strong French counter-offensive northeast of Verdun continued all night long, according to official statements issued by the French War Office. The French made further gains.

Determined, apparently, not to let the Germans remain in possession of the Caillette wood, captured in their Sunday drive, the French have entirely recaptured that imporotant position between Douaumont and Van and aren ow pushing further to the north.

The Berlin War Office statement today, reporting the fighting of the previous day, says the French assaults all broke down and that the Germans are still in possession of the northern portions of the Caillette wood. It further asserts that the French were repulsed southwest of Fort Douaumont and an attempt to recapture the hill at Haumont was broken up by the German fire.

This statement deals entirely with the fighting of yesterday, so it is likely the advances reported during the night by the French were made in later fighting than that reported by the Berlin communication.

The four days battle has apparently exhausted both sides. The artillery fire also diminished considerable from the intensity of previous days.

MARCONI INVENTS NEW AERO DEVICE

Rome—Senator and Air-Lieutenant Guglielmo Marconi has perfected a special apparatus based on a new principle which is a war secret for the employment of aeroplanes and dirigibles.

The invention is expected to produce sensational desults.

Signor Marconi will also introduce an enormously important wireless improvement. Both inventions are to be tested in the Italian army, and then communicated to the allied army ies if they prove satisfactory.

Garbage Collecting System on Modern Lines Suggested

Whether or not the city should institute and maintain its own system of garbage collection was one of the matters up for discussion at the Board of Health meeting last night. It was stated by Mr. Clark, and is acknowledged by the populi, that the present lack of system should be made obsolete. Mr. Clark would have the city maintain a department , as do other cities, for this branch of health service. He was there with figures showing what is being done in cities where garbage collecting is done by the government. Mr. Clark stated that the city could operate the department at an approximate cost of $1 annually to each taxpaper, whereas residents are now paying anywhere from $4 to $8 per year for the same service and in some cases as much as $10. It was apparent that the Board viewed the idea favorably. Further investigation of the subject will be made before decisive action is taken.

A resolution was passed to the effect that all milk hereafter distributed in the city, with the exception of large quantities sold to

Prior to the meeting Dr. F. W. Sears, Sanitary Supervisor of been fixed, must be bottled. The Board also fixed the license fee for peddlers at $15 and $1 for storekeepers and other retailers of milk in the same classification. Limitations were placed on the latter fee conditional on the source of the milk supply.

Several complaints were received from residents of the sixth and Third wards relative to flood conditions, but no action was taken.

Prior to the meeting Dr. F. W. Sears, Sanitary Supervisor of the State Board of Health am d a number of city officials were the guests of Dr. A. L. Hall, health officer, at a dinner in the Lewis House. Dr. Sears offered suggestions as to the conduct of the City Health Department, recommending the establishment of a county laboratory for the analysis of milk, water, etc. Mayor V. C. Lewis, H. W. Adkins, chamberlain; C. M. Allen, city clerk; Clayton Hill, city engineer; W. W. Kennedy, milk and meat inspector; J. R. Somers, commissioner of charities and the members of the board of health, were guests of Dr. Hall.

Peace Wanted, Says German Diplomat

Christiania, via London—"Germany is ready to make peace, and the Chancellor has officially said that any peace proposal will be considered," says Dr. Michahelles, the new German Ambassador to Norway, in a morning newspaper. "It is our antagonists who want to fight to the bitter end."

Discussing the recent developments in the submarine warfare Dr. Michahelles says:—

"From the point of view of the neutrals there has been no change in Germany's submarine policy. It is still Germany's aim to make proper allowances for the rights of neutrals."

The newspapers commenting on the Ambassador's statement with regard to submarines, says he thus seeks to allay the anti-German feeling which has been rapidly rising in Norway recently owing to the losses to Norwegian shipping. According to the newspapers eleven Norwegian vessels have been torpeded without warning in the last few days and twenty Norwegian sailors have lost their lives.

The following editorial from (name of newspaper deleted by censor) is characteristic of the utterances of other leading journals:

"Germany in thel ast year has received numerous notes from President Wilson. It is evident that she has no more fear of little Norway than of great America, and feels safe in her encroachments upon our small nations, which only wants to live in peace.

"She may be making a mistake, however, for it may be of importance during the last desperate struggle whether neutral nations look with trust or spite toward Germany."

JEKYLL AND HYDE

Waite, the poisoner, claims that he is another one of those Jekylls and Hydes. The defense is rather old; that's what they all say. Nevertheless, there is undoubtedly considerable truth in it, for everybody has a little of the Jekyll and Hyde pecularity in his disposition. Everybody is a Jekyll when everything is going smoothly, when his liver is working well and the sun is out; and everybody is something of a Hyde when his coffee comes on the table cold, when he is suffering from last night's effects and when the home team is losing.—Rochester Union.

HIDEOUS CRIES

Colonel Roosevelt is not going to leave to his wonderful Trinidad bird a monopoly of hideous cries. Those which he emitted in this morning's furious attack upon the president may please the small-fry politicians with whom he now surrounds himself, but will make his judicious friends grieve. They will see in this outburst new proof that Mr. Roosevelt's worst qualities are strengthening in him with the years—that he is growing more coarse and violent. And they will question the expediency of his railing accusations against Mr. Wilson, the whole being obviously a political bid in his own behalf. It may be doubted if the American people approve of trying to play politics with the Mexican trouble; or of the new style patriotism which consists in denouncing the navy as rotten; or of reviling the president when he is doing his best in a difficult situation. It is certain that, whatever they may think of Mr. Roosevelt's policies, they will not approve of his bar-room manners. — N. Y. Post.

A STATE POLICE IS HERE URGED

The Appropriations Committees of the Legislature are scheduled to vote this week on the Horton-Wells Bill for the creation of a state police. This measure should be reported favorably to the two houses and adopted. It embodies a policy which would represent a long step forward in the ability of New York State to enforce its laws and protect its citizens.

Chief among the objections raised to this bill is the question of cost. Obviously, the creation of a Department of State Police, the equipment and maintenance of the force, would involve considerable expense. The bill calls for an appropriation of $500,000 for the initial cost of equipment and the maintenance charge for the first year of its existence. That sum would be well spent, if the experience of Pennsylvania with its state police is any guide for this state.

Mile on miles of suburban and rural territory go unpatrolled by any officer of the law, and, for all practical purposes, are unprotected. This is an invitation to criminals. In Pennsylvania, with its four troops of constabulary quartered in different parts of the state, patrolling thousands of miles of rural roads in the year, the criminal has no such immunity from speedy pursuit by specially trained and equipped skilled officers of the law. A suspect there, when caught, has no good chance of beating the prosecution if he happens to be guilty, because the evidence against him is obtained by policemen who know the law and the rules of evidence, and prepare a case which will hold. The high percentage of convictions to arrests established there proves that.

Objections to this measure from the professional labor element may be dismissed as based largely on misinformation or bias. It is yet to be proved that the work of the Pennsylvania state police has been influenced by any class feeling or by politics. There is no reason for belief that the members of the force take sides in any strike for or against the employers or employes. Their duty is to preserve the peace and suppress disorder, wherever it originates. They are not half so likely to precipitate riots and killings as the militia, unused to police duty, or the private guards hired by corporations.—N. Y. Tribune.

FINE PHILANTHROPY

News columns of a date quite recent told of a man called by many critics the greatest of American painters, who is confined in an insane asylum in Middletown, this state, and whose family live in poverty. The artist's mind is growing clearer, and now he is doing some painting with rudely improvised brushes, on odd pieces of brown paper or wood, with ink for paint. The pictures are said to show a return of the man's old-time mastery. He has friends and they have undertaken to help him by raising a sum of money to take care of him.

It is a fine bit of philanthropy, but it comes sadly late in the artist's career. He is 69 years old and has been out of the world for sixteen years. Strange to say, his fame has developed during this period—that is, his pictures are greatly prized and sought after. The people having his pictures and those who want them care nothing about the artist—and he himself has been beyond their caring.

There was a time in the life of the man when this present fame would have meant much to him. It was when he used to wear himself out painting pictures and hawking them about a great city—when he was forced to sell for a few dollars paintings now worth thousands. His struggle with poverty drove him insane. Two weeks ago one of his early efforts sold for $20,000—but what good did it do the artist in the asylum to learn the news?

There is something wrong in the world when genius is treated in this way. There is something wrong with the way society treats other men who are not looked upon as geniuses. Sometimes we find brave men pioneering movements of uplift, either this way or that way—but always with their purpose firmly fixed. They are like the artist in one sense only—that they are builders of life's richness. Society is better for having them, but too often society is blind to their works. They are not recognized as worth something to the community until it is too late to do them any real permanent good.

Philanthropy when men are helpless through work and worry is better than no exhibition of it at all, but the finest example of it comes at the crucial time, or while the deserving ones are yet in the world.

PUBLICLY—OWNED MAYORS

Last fall there were a surprising number of Socialist mayors elected in American cities. If there are not so many next fall, it may be the fault of the Socialists themselves, for failing to support their own representatives in public office. Such a case as that of Mayor Lunn of Schenectady, N. Y., plainly tends to prejudice the public against the Socialist party.

Mayor Lunn is in the peculiar position of having pleased the general public, and at the same time displeased his own party to such a degree that it has repudiated him. The mayor maintains that he is as good a Socialist as he ever was. The trouble appears to be that he has filled city offices with competent men regardless of politics, instead of appointing orthodox socialists at the dictation of the party organization.

The question at issue, he says, is "whether elected Socialist officials should be publicly or privately owned. I stand for public ownership."

Public ownership of mayors is a platform easily accepted by citizens of any faith. Socialists themselves should be the last to antagonize it. And after all their lofty professions of disinterested public service, it seems odd to see them splitting on the same rock of party regularity and succumbing to the same lust for office that have often descredited the older parties.

PROTECTING THE GAME

The Conservation Commission appears to be adept to catching game law violators by the wholesale, Wilmurt was the first place to learn this, when a summer-long visitor last year turned out to be a game warden and arrested a large section of the town.

It wasn't many weeks ago that a whole lumber camp in northern Herkimer county had to knock off work, because it had been individually arrested and haled before a Poland justice of the peace on the charge of having fed itself on venison, instead of on beef.

Now the Adirondack town of Gloversville is witnessing John Doe proceedings which involve 30 or 40 men who are charged with having killed does and short-horned bucks, all in violation of the law.

At the same time, there seems to be the usual number of arrests of persons. What is it that Commissioner Pratt has done to the game warden force, to wake it up to get busy with the violations which every one has known about for years?

It looks as though those who go into the woods this year had better go slow about violating the game laws. The laws are being enforced. —Utica Observer.

WHY GASOLINE IS HIGH IN PRICE

Edward L. Doheny, president of the Mexican Petroleum Co. writes in The New York American as follows:

PART II

The oil producers of the West and especially of California, but also of Kansas and Oklahoma, although not to such a great extent, were sufferers until recently because of starvation prices for petroleum. In California, where the percentage of gasoline oil is small, the increase in the selling price of the crude oil per barrel is equal to all of the increase in the selling price of the gasoline contained in each barrel of crude oil.

In other words, the oil producer in California, who was really on the verge of bankruptcy, is getting all of the benefit of the increase in the price of gasoline on the Pacific Coast.

The decrease in production has hit the refiners of light oils more heavily than it has the average crude oil producer. The largest refining company on the Pacific Coast, by reason of a decrease in thep roduction of its light oil wells, found its net profit for the year ended December 31, 1915, to be less than 50 per cent of its net profit for 1914, notwithstanding the increase in the selling price of gasoline.

The selling price of gasoline is too low today as compared with its price of a year ago, when both are taken into consideration in connection with the respective yields last year and this year of the light oil producing districts of the United Stotes.

New Process Adopted

The oil producer will be more greatly benefited than the oil consumer when some way is discovered either of producing a larger quantity of gasoline from the crude oil or of consuming satisfactorily a larger proportion of the crude oil in forms heavier than the gasoline of commerce.

Oil producers and refiners are spending enormous quantities of money in the effort to produce from crude oil a larger percentage of the gasoline of commerce which is so greatly in demand. My own company, the Mexican Petroleum, is spending $150,000 now at New Orleans on a special plant with the hope of utilizing successfully what is known as the "Iroline" process, which process on a laboratory scalem akes it possible to multiply many times the percentage of gasoline that can be extracted from crude oil.

One thought that must be borne in mind is that the gasoline of commerce is obtained from oil by the simple means of distillation. Any further percentage that can thus be obtained will result from expensive processing of the oil, which will add to the cost of production of theg asoline.

The lightening or lessening of the gravity of petroleum distillate, in order to produce commercial gasoline, lessens the fuel power of the distillate, so that the production of larger quantities of gasoline from crude oil may be regarded in one sense as an economic waste, provided that the heavier distillates so processed and lightened could be used in their original form.

Auto Device Needed

If the automobile manufacturers and users would give as much time and incur as much expense in the effort to develop some satisfactory mechanical device, which could be atquarters of the order, praying that a protest against the iniquitous order of Premier Asquith shall be revoked. This order forbids succor of any kind from reaching the starving people of Poland, and is receiving the condemnation of the civilized people of the world.

"EXPERIENCE" AT THE WIETING NEXT WEEK

Ther eserved sale for "Experience" called by the critics the most wonderful play in America which comes to the Wieting Opera House for the entire week commencing Monday, April 10th, with a bargain matinee on Wednesday and the regular matinee on Saturday afternoon opens Wednesday, April 5th, and as reservations by mail are larger than they have ever been known before in the history of Syracuse it is advisable for those wishing to secure seats to do so as early as possible. If reservations are made by mail it should be accompanied by a check or postoffice order made out to F. P. Martin, Mgr. Wieting Opera House, with self addressed stamped envelope for return.

A notable feature of this engagement of "Experience" at the Wieting in Syracuse, is that the original New York-Boston organization comes to Syracuse direct from its phenominal nine months run in New York and its sensational five months success in Boston. This engagement was made by Mgr. Martin by insistent public demand of the people of Syracuse and vicinity.

In "Experience" youth is taken as a central figure and woven into a connected story of all of Youth's adventures in quest of fame and fortune. There are 82 notable players in the cast and the ladies of the company are said to have set a new standard of fascinating girlish lovliness for the stage. Modern music and delightful dances form a romantic part of the story of "Experience."

The play starts in a little country village when Youth bids farewell to his sweetheart Love; it shows him meeting Pleasure at the gates of the city and then idling his time away in the Golden Cabaret on the Primrose Path of Pleasure with Passion, Intoxication, Beauty, Frivolity, Excitement and other alluring maidens. Then successively is shown Youth's downward glide through the gambling dens, to the house of Lost Soul where he becomes the intimate of Dope Fiend until crazy for more of the treacherous cocaine he leaves with Crime to kill a man but on the street of forgotten days he hears, coming out of Church, the strains of the hymn "Lead Kindly Light" and then comes the never failing miracle of a mother's love which brings about his regeneration.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—The new Senator from Indiana announces that he intends, "in his humble way," to stand by the President.

The President, however, regards the announcement with mixed emotions. It is well known here that Senator Taggart, despite his high position in Democratic councils, has never been a "fairhaired boy" at the White House, whose doors he has darkened just twice in the more than three years that Mr. Wilson has been there. Taggart was not a Wilman man at Baltimore and Wilson has not been gart was not a Wilson man at Baltimore and Wilson has not been tion of fealty to the administration is regarded here as a part of the "bunk" which Democratic politicians are handing out very profusely just now, in the hope that the remaining months of the Wilson regime may bring to them some of the few loaves and fishes which have not yet been distributed.

Certainly Senator Taggart has no illusions as to the political future. He knows very well that his state and the country are going Republican next November. He knows, too, that Wilson will be renominated and that it will not do to take open issue with him—not on his own account but on account of the party. Thus, while Mr. Taggart's public utterances will probably continue to harmonize with what he has just said, it is also altogether likely that his remarks in the cloak room and other private places will be on a level with those of most Democratic leaders here—namely, they will speak of Wilson as Bryan did, with a "God bless you," in the reverse English.

Taggart's entrance to the Senate also serves to show the Democratic subserviency to the bosses of the party. Taggart has ruled the Democracy of Indiana with an iron hand. He is of that type of leader whom Woodrow Wilson is supposed to abhor but with whom he has to do business because they can undo him. Taggart as a boss at home was no small load for the Democratic party; and Taggart in the Senate is no lighter burden. His appointment will help neither at home nor elsewhere.

The completed figures of railroad earnings in 1915 further emphasize the contention that this barometer of prosperity has been chiefly affected in the eastern territory where war orders have produced a temporary activity in business. The railroads in this section almost doubled their net earnings per mile over the income of the year previous, namely, from $307 to $609, while in the West the increase was only from $187 to $217.

The only vote which has thus far been taken on the subject shows that only twelve Democrats in Congress favor anything like a genuine measure of preparedness for the army. The test was taken on Representative Kahn's amendment to provide a force of 220,000 men.

The sinking of the Silius produced only a near-crisis at Washington. At any rate those were the surface indications. Soon after the news was received, Secretary Lansing started on a ten-days' vacation. But, as the President did not take a week-end on the Mayflower, it is perfectly evident that no genuine "Crisis" existed.

Consul James S. Benedict reports a large increase in imports of cotton goods, especially fleece-lined manufactures, to St. Johns, Newfoundland, since the outbreak of the European war. The Democrats will use this item to pad their prosperity accounts.

In Organdy and Taffeta.

Fashioned from organdy and taffeta in the new shade of blue called jay bird, this frock answers all purposes of dressy wear for misses.

The combination par excellence for summer frocks is organdy and taffeta. This frock has a skirt and underblouse of the sheer material, while silk faces the wing pockets, forms the bands about the lower edge of the skirt and the little overblouse. Tiny little buttons of blue silk ornament the front of the underblouse and the cuffs. In medium size the frock requires 5¼ yards organdy and 2 yards 36-inch taffeta, with ⅜ yard of lace or any other desired trimming for the collar.

In beginning with the blouse, first close the under-arm and sleeve seams as notched, then turn in and stitch the hem. Gather the lower edge to waist measurement and adjust stay to position. Sew collar to neck, notches even, and roll back. Close sleeve seam, gather lower edge, then close the cuff seam to large "O" perforation. Sew to sleeve and trim in any desired way.

Next, fold the pocket and stitch trimming along the outer edge. Adjust on skirt; stitch the edge of pocket having seam, along small "o" perforations in skirt. Turn under edges of front and back gores on slot perforations and baste. Gather upper edges of gores between double "TT" perforations. Form inverted pleats in drapery, bringing the "T" perforations together on small "o" perforation and tack. Adjust on side gore, small "o" perforations at side edges; and the upper edges even; bring the edges of drapery together at the line of small "o" perforations in skirt.

Lap the folded edges of front and back gores on the side gore and drapery, notches and edges underneath even; stitch 1 inch from folded edges, leaving edges to the left of center-front free above large "O" perforation in front gore for a placket. Adjust skirt stitching upper edge, over upper row of gathers in blouse.

Finally, pleat under-arm edge of front of jumper, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Close right under-arm seam as notched; finish left edges for a closing. Lap the upper pointed end of front, on the back matching small "o" perforations and close with buttons and buttonholes.

The bands on the skirt may be omitted, but they give stability to the sheer material.

GUN TOTING DAYS AGAIN ON BORDER

People Are Tense, Alert, Expectant, but Not Aflame.

NEWS SPREAD BY COURIERS

Everybody Ready For Any Emergency. Even the Railroad Brakemen Are Armed—Funston Denies That Censorship Is Imposed to Test Sentiment For the Future.

The Rio Grande and the west Texas border district is tense, expectant, armed and alert, but to say that it is aflame over the Mexican situation is to exaggerate, writes one correspondent there. He sees Americans and Mexicans standing peacefully together on the station platforms. The Mexicans hold aloof and are silent, but appear neither terrified nor menacing. The Americans seize the papers as they are flung from the train, eager for the latest news of developments across the line. The Mexicans merely stand there.

Everybody is talking Villa and little else. The Columbus episode has quickened the pulse of the border and worked out a paradox. It has brought a new life to the frontier by bringing back the old. Remington died too soon. He should have seen his southwest today. Men such as he so loved to draw, spurred and booted and with six shooters on their hips, clumped along the station platforms or waved hats from behind a barbed wire fence. It is men of this type who are piloting Pershing's expedition in Mexico.

In the Pullman smoker of the Southern Pacific train speeding toward El Paso the brakeman, C. D. Lassiter, a Texan, flung back his coat and with pride displayed an old single action Colt 44.

"Babies hereabout used to be born with one of these on," he said, "and the fashion's comin' back."

This man's wife was in Columbus the night of the Villa raid, and four bullets pierced her dress. Her brother-in-law was killed.

...nt For a Souvenir.

"...was there right afterward," said the brakeman, "and I got a souvenir."

He took something out of his pocket and passed it around for inspection. It was about an inch square, and it was bone—a bit of skull from one of Villa's men.

Close to, yet far from that strip of northern Mexico into which the expeditionary force has thrust its way, the border towns from El Paso south know less of developments across the line than do others in the rest of the country. Without daily newspapers, except those that arrive from El Paso or San Antonio, they hear of events only through cowboy couriers or from train passengers.

General Funston himself, directing the expedition from San Antonio, is nearly 700 miles from the scene of action, a distance that is increasing daily if the columns push westward. Kitchener, in the war office in London, was far closer to the British front in Flanders, and to reach the trenches from England was vastly more simple than travelling from Fort Sam Houston to Columbus, N. M.

General Funston denied the report that in clamping a censorship on news from the front he was feeling out the American public with a view to determining how far the army could go in the future in the matter of exacting journalistic discipline.

General Funston said the censorship would be no more rigid than that imposed at Vera Cruz at the time of the American occupation.

EX-TRAMP A MILLIONAIRE.

His Ambition Once Was to Buy $1,000,000 Worth of Beefsteak.

Leslie R. Drake of Central America walked past a Los Angeles (Cal.) park and, pointing at the benches and fountains beneath the trees, said:

"Twenty years ago I sat in that plaza on a bench, and I had neither a place to sleep nor anything to eat. I was a tramp, and as I sat there looking up at the sky I planned on how many beefsteaks I would buy if I had $1,000,000."

Mr. Drake neglected to say that, according to Dun's and Bradstreet's he is today rated at more than $1,000,000, but he did say that now he had enough money to buy all the beefsteaks he would want for the rest of his life.

Mr. Drake has made his fortune in Central America, but he does not advise others that they may hope to do likewise.

Mignonette.

Water in which mignonette has been placed should be changed often since it quickly becomes foul.

The Kansas Cyclone

They never have to ask him if he needs a bigger force;
They don't nag him for estimates of men and guns and horse;
They don't inquire if he would like to have some one explain
The methods planned in Washington for making a campaign.
But when the flag's insulted and there's any one to "get"
They merely say, "Go on the job!" and Funston says, "You bet."

He doesn't ask for seasoned troops; he takes 'em as they come.
He knows that they'll keep up with him, and that is going some;
He doesn't need the books that treat of fighting as an art;
He doesn't bone on tactics much; he knows 'em all by heart.
But when they warn him solemnly that there will be a fight,
And not an easy one at that, he grins and says, "All right."

He wouldn't make an ornament that any one would mark,
Carved out of bronze and mounted on a statue in the park;
He isn't any Washington in presence or in size;
He wouldn't be a hero in a matinee girl's eyes.
But we've not had a fighting man for many a long, long day
Like General Frederick Funston of the U. S. A.

GENERAL TOO BUSY TO SEND DOCTOR TO HIS DYING SON

Verdun Chief Did Not Stop When Told of His Boy's Wounds.

A most pathetic incident of the battle of Verdun has just been reported. It begins with the following telephone conversation:

"Hello! Is that the farm? Who is speaking?"

"This is the post commander talking."

"How many men have you there?"

"Fifteen."

"Leave your senior sergeant in charge of the redoubt. Take eight men and cut off a strong German patrol which has just entered the wood, but look out for a cross fire. Report to me immediately on your return."

This conversation occurred at midnight. An hour later the German patrol had been annihilated, and the picket returned to the redoubt, carrying a lieutenant mortally wounded. The post commander sprang to the telephone:

"Hello! The coup succeeded, but Lieutenant X. is dying. Can you send a doctor?"

An exclamation of grief came from the other end of the line. There was a pause, then an impassive voice was heard saying:

"Never mind the doctor. Run immediately to the dugouts. The Germans are about to attack. I am sending you three platoons of re-enforcements."

A pause ensued, and then the same voice resumed in broken tones:

"Hello! Are you still there? Kiss Lieutenant X. for me. He is my son. Goodby."

JAIL BETTER THAN HOME.

Kruse Paid to Stay There Rather Than With His Relatives.

Chicago.—August Kruse, who for five years has been a voluntary inmate of the Du Page county jail at Wheaton, Ill., rather than live with relatives, who doubted his sanity, told the sheriff he was going west to live on a farm.

Kruse paid the county $1 a day for the privilege of living in the jail. In 1906 a petition to have him declared insane was heard in the county court. He was found to be sane, but would not return to his home, and after five years' absence returned to Wheaton and arranged for quarters in the same jail to which he had been taken years before.

"I want to get back to the farm," said Kruse. "I sit here and think of what I used to do, and I'm going to begin over again. I'm going away off, though, not back to the old farm."

FALL CORRECTS HIS VISION.

Broker Hits His Head on Sidewalk and Doesn't Need Glasses.

Pittsfield, Mass.—Henry Travers, Jr., insurance and real estate broker, fell on an icy sidewalk recently, striking on his head and neck.

For several years Mr. Travers had worn glasses, but upon returning to his office after the fall he discovered he could see better and could read without them. Mr. Travers does not urge this method of treatment for failing eyesight.

ELECTRICITY IN A PUDDLE.

Believe Shoe Dealer Adopted Novel Method to Sell Rubbers.

Whether one of the department stores of Waukesha, Wis., is trying a scheme to stimulate the sale of rubbers has not been made known, but suspicion points a questioning finger.

A puddle of water which completely covered the sidewalk became charged with electricity, and every "unrubbered" person who passed received a sharp shock. Women appeared to be better conductors of the current than men, and screams frequently could be heard for a block or more.

A dog which innocently stepped into the water jumped three feet into the air and then before skulking away with its tail between its legs snapped at several newsboys who had gathered to watch the fun.

Chief of Police Don McKay arrived after the pool had been exposed for a half hour and warned pedestrians, while linemen shut off the current.

with Gutzon Borglum and Frazer, two leading Americans. Successes have come easy to Miss Wright. She took the St. Gaudens prize and later the Gutzon Borglum prize.

During five years spent in Paris many of Miss Wright's sculptured pieces were in the salons of France. Since her return home they have been shown in the academies of Philadelphia and New York and at the Panama-Pacific exposition. Smith college visitors will especially remember Miss Wright's bronze relief of President Seelye, which now hangs in Assembly hall at Northampton.

CONVALESCENT CHILDREN.

How to Amuse a Child Doomed to the Bed Awhile.

A child recovering from an illness is apt to be fretful and peevish, demanding any amount of patience on the part of a mother or an attendant.

If the child is a boy modeling in clay will be found entertaining, and by helping him form different animals and houses many an irksome hour will be whiled away. If a girl, try paper flowers or paper dolls. Children also enjoy making scrapbooks. Cut attractive pictures from old colored magazines, for it should always be remembered children like bright colors. Young children can cut if they are not competent to paste.

Never let a child who is recovering from an illness sew, for it will prove tiring, the work being too intent, whereas paper clothes for dolly are sure to be enjoyed without fatigue.

A pair of toy scales and supplies, in the shape of rice, sugar, raisins and salt, to keep shop, will please a small child, and mother, of course, will do the buying.

Expensive toys are not necessary to make a child happy, for nine out of ten will prefer some simple homemade affair or an amusement they create for themselves.

That Untidy Top Drawer.

Much is gained if, instead of making linings or pads for the bureau drawers, the drawers themselves are made dainty and ready for the receptacles of articles.

First give the inside as many coats of white paint as are necessary to give a clear white tone, and then a coat of white enamel. This gives a perfectly smooth surface, which is fresher than any other lining could be.

The drawers look neat and attractive, and when cleaning is desired a simple wiping with a damp cloth produces perfect cleanliness.

The same idea could be carried out with all shelves, cupboards and drawers in the house, whether for linen, china or kitchen utensils. They are more easily cared for than when arranged with other covers. This process makes a good substitute for the highly recommended glass shelves.

Salad Supreme.

Arrange lettuce hearts on individual plates and place in the center of each one sections of oranges and celery, cut in Julienne strips. Garnish the top with chopped English walnuts and dates cut in small pieces and serve with a light mayonnaise.

SHOOT AWAY $24,000,000.

Tremendous Cost of War Illustrated by the Battle of Verdun.

If the estimate of 2,000,000 shells is approximately the number fired in the great Verdun battle the financial outlay to the contending armies for artillery ammunition alone has been at least $20,000,000 to $24,000,000.

This estimate of army ordnance experts is based on the theory that the bulk of the fighting has been done with 75 centimeter field guns. Inasmuch as the Germans have made use of a considerable number of large fieldpieces and siege guns, the cost in artillery ammunition probably has been considerably more than $24,000,000.

As the caliber of a gun increases the cost per round multiplies rapidly. The huge German guns which demolished the Liege fortifications and shelled Dunkirk from a distance of twenty miles or more hurl projectiles that cost many hundreds of dollars, the exact figures not being known.

In addition to the enormous cost of artillery ammunition used in the Verdun fight, many millions of rounds of small arms ammunition have been consumed, the outlay for hospital service has been excessively high, while the loss of effective fighting units has been enormous on both sides.

VALUE OF BABY IS $90.

"Aged Person Becomes a Negative Quantity," Declares Professor.

What is a baby worth?

Professor Irving T. Fisher of Yale, urging the adoption of a bill for compulsory social insurance for workmen, told the committee on social welfare at the statehouse, in Boston, that he estimated the value of a baby to be $90.

"And I estimate the value of an adult to be $4,000," said the professor. "The value of an aged person, by computations under the proposed system, becomes a negative quantity.

"The proposed bill will bring preventive medicine into every home. Last year there were 630,000 unnecessary deaths in the United States. The bill also will distribute the enormous burden of sickness so it will not entirely overwhelm a worker when it comes."

Credit Given In Ohio.

By taking bath, brushing teeth and going to bed early, pupils in Logan county (O.) schools get nine credit marks, six of them for the bath.

USE ARMORED AEROPLANES.

New Machines to Have Steel Plates on Their Bottoms.

If new aero squadrons are organized for service they will be equipped with armored aeroplanes, according to word received from Washington at the army aviation school at San Diego, Cal.

Aeroplanes to be supplied to the war department hereafter, it was said, were to be fitted underneath with a thick plate of steel to protect the pilot, observer and engine from rifle or shrapnel fire. The new machines will be of the same type as those which American manufacturers are sending to Europe for the French and British flying corps.

Military aeroplanes ordered by the war department will be of two types, according to the Washington advices. One type will have a speed of ninety miles an hour and will carry two passengers. The other will be capable of flying at the rate of ninety-five miles an hour, carrying pilot, observer and bomb thrower. Provision will be made on the latter class of machines for the installation of machine guns on a movable base.

AMERICANS WASH TOO MUCH, SECRETARY REDFIELD SAYS

As a Result the Old Rags Are Not Good For Making Paper.

No one ever accused a man with side whiskers with being afflicted with a sense of humor, but when Secretary of Commerce Redfield announced that American rags were of little use to the manufacturers of paper because the "American people wash too much" there was a burst of laughter which ran country wide.

It appears that the raw material for the manufacture of paper is running extremely low—so low that the manufacturers are becoming seriously alarmed. The secretary some time ago issued a call to the country to save its old rags. This call met with considerable response, especially when it was explained that the European war had virtually shut off the importation of rags into this country.

When the first consignments of American rags, principally linens and cottons, reached the manufacturers there was a discordant wail of despair. The product would not do at all, the manufacturers said. They had been used to the rags of Europe, which were filthy and contained much of their original component parts.

"The American rags are too clean," they said. "The American people apparently are addicted to washing their clothes to an extent that destroys the usefulness of the remnants, so far as paper making is concerned."

Secretary Redfield thereupon issued a grave warning that citizens of the United States were washing too much for the good of the paper makers' industry. He followed it later with a call, however, for such material. More than 1,080,000 copies of the announcement have been sent broadcast throughout the United States and will be posted in postoffices and other public places. Chambers of commerce and other commercial organizations also have been enlisted in the crusade.

MILLIONS IN GEMS IN NEW YORK FIRE

New York—Fire last night swept the three top floors of the six-story loft and studio building at No. 630 Fifth avenue, opposite St. Patrick's Cathedral. The two upper floors were destroyed. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

The first floor of the building is occupied by the jewelry firm of E. M. Gattle & Co. Diamonds and other precious stones worth $1,500,000 were stored in a safe in the rear of the room, according to Mr. Gattle. The flames did not descend to the jewelry store, but the damage by water to the expensive fixtures was great.

The building is owned by Henry Clews, the banker. Next to it, at No. 632 Fifth avenue, is the building occupied by Joseph, ladies, tailor. There were gowns worth $250,000 in the Joseph establishment. One $25,000 garment, stored in the basement, was removed before water seeped in.

RED MEN WILL PARADE WITH BIG BAND IN LINE

The rapid growth attending Utoka Tribe, I. O. R. M., is not to be passed unnoticed—not if the membership can help it. It is therefore announced that on next Wednesday evening a street parade of the braves will be held, the line to proceed through the city's leading streets, and to be headed by Phillip's famous band of Oswego.

As evidence that the order has something to celebrate, it should be noted that twenty-five candidates received the Adoption Degree at Tuesday night's meeting. These same candidates will be given the Warrior's Degree next week—Wednesday instead of then ight preceeding which is the regular meeting night.

A dinner will be served in the West Broadway wigwam at the conclusion of the parade.

VERMONT'S SUGAR CROP GREATEST IN YEARS

Owing to unusually favorable weather conditions, officials of the Vermont Maple Sugar Makers' Association say that the largest maple sugar crop in years is expected this spring.

According to the latest statistics there are 9,700,000 sugar maples in the state and it is probable that three-quarters of them will be tapped. Last year, owing to the light snowfalls, less than 60 per cent of the trees were tapped.

The total production for the 1915 season was 7,510,334 pounds of sugar and 605,939 gallons of syrup, together valued at $1,353,000.

YOUNG ITALIANS LEAVE FOR ARMY EXAMINATION

About one dozen Italian residents of the city, who have seen service in Italy's army in the years 1886-1892, have answered the call of the Italian Consul to appear for examination in New York City. If found efficient they will prepare immediately to leave this country.

Frank Zaia is the Consul's local agent and he has been engaged in the work for a month. An Oswego contingent will accompany the Fulton complement. The men who left today for New York are between 30 and 40 years old, some of them leaving families in this city.

THE QUIRK

Muriel Ostriche, who won a large following as the star of "A Daughter of the Sea" is adding to her fame in "A Circus Romance," the next Equitable release, which is coming to the Quirk theatre today. The little star appears this time as the shining light of a big southern caravan show, who accidentally finds her father as the magnate of the town wheer the show is being given, and reveals several o[illegible] interesting family facts. She [illegible]ks to the circus, however, married the boy she loves, and her father, who has a past of his own, and the minister of the town, who rises above prejudice and wants to marry her himself, accept the circus boy as their social equal, and all ends happily. "False Friends and Fire Alarms" in 2 parts; "The Windward Anchor," with Myrtle Gonzales, and "Sunlight and Shadows," with Ruth Paryer and Betty Gray, complete one fine nine-reel show.

D. A. R. FLAGS FOR BELGIAN RELIEF

You Will be Asked to Pay Ten Cents for Miniature Emblem--Scouts May Assist

More aid is needed for the Belgians, is the word coming from relief headquarters, and the cry has been taken up by the Daughters of the American Revolution whose Chapters have been instructed to procure for the purpose of reselling, small American flags that can be worn as boutinieres or as adornments on women's shirt waists. The local Chapter is alive to the situation—announcing accordingly that the next three days— Friday, Saturday and Sunday—it will have offered on the streets of the city the National colors in miniature, either through the agency of Boy Scouts or by the membership at large. The tiny flags will sell at ten cents each, and the purchaser will be expected to wear one to indicate that he or she is "tagged."

It is the desire of the Chapter to make a business proposition to the Boy Scouts, one that will enable them to earn pin money, hence the offer of a ten per cent commission on all sales.

The old cheese factory in Cayuga st. has been selected as headquarters for the distribution of the flags, and there some one competent to administer the office will be stationed to look after the trade.

It is quite likely that the local D. A. R. may include in the movement for foreign relief work the sending of a petition to the American headquarters of the order, praying that a protest against the iniquitous order of Premier Asquith shall be revoked. This order forbids succor of any kind from reaching the starving people of Poland, and is receiving the condemnation of thec ivilized people of the world.

NEW HOUSE

TRUSTEES' APPLICATION PUT BACK UNTIL FALL

Judge Ray yesterday adjourned the application of the trustees of the Battle Island Paper company for fees for their services until October 3rd, 1916.

No specific amount was named in the application. Attorney Frank Hennessey, who made the application for Gannon, Spencer & Michell, said that the amount could not be determined until the attorneys have completed their case in the Court of Claims against the State.

Several soldiers from the barracks at Fort Ontario were summoned to testify against members of the Third infantry, who are charged with selling clothing to outsiders. Police officers from Plattsburg were waiting outside the grand jury room this morning to testify as to the sale of clothing by soldiers at Madison barracks, Plattsburg.

SCARCITY OF LABOR IS FEARED BY CONTRACTOR

Contractor W. J. Hartnett is not sanguine concerning outlook for securing labor on good roads work the coming season. He says labor is very scarce, owing to the return to Europe of many workingmen, called to the colors of the respective countries.

Mr. Hartnett's company, The Pathfinder, has a good roads contract near a Parish and one in Jefferson county. These roads were started before winter set in and will be completed this year. Mr. Hartnett is still hopeful of securing the Daytona, Florida, contract when the matter has been straightened out by the authorities there.

TIME IS NOT TO BE MEASURED

Degeneracy Is Denied by Speaker Who Urges Borrowed Timers to Remain on Guard.

Borrowed Timers who failed to hear the philosophy which fell from the lips of Mr. J. A. Fitch at their meeting on Modnay afternoon, have reason for expressing regrets, as the reader may observe by noting the following lines:

One of the extremely regrettable facts that seems ever confronting us, and the enormity of which I think is lightly reckoned with, is degeneracy. And if we have the proper conception of the term, it is applicative to one who is going backward.

Now this unfortunate mental deterioration takes its initiative when nature becomes insistent and our senses become impaired. This is where lateral help proves a conditional expedient in maintaining our former intellectual standard and also preventing the ravages of time taking us into captivity.

We often hear children spoken of as degenerate. This is a wrong impression; the child may be of feeble mind but never degenerate. Not having made perceptible advancement, precludes a possibility of deterioration; that is, we cannot go backward until first having gone forward, consequently degeneracy is a mental malady that takes its abode with middle-aged people and insists on staying unless otherwise notified to terminate its tenancy.

No one seems to be immune, for clergymen, lawyers, and men in all walks of life are susceptible to its flattering embracements. And one of the contributary causes appears to be the absolute security many people seem to have in themselves. If we can come to realize our dependence on Supreme Power, I believe progression in some form is possible even to the very end.

As man participates in the activities of life he will improve to middle age; growth and development will unconsciously take care of evaporation; but at this period there must be a new method of procedure. We must prosecute all our energies to keep what we have acquired and if possible add to this, for it is only fair to enjoy a margin of profit, for it means perpetual struggle.

Energy must not hesitate. Halting gives the enemy chance to spike its guns; preparedness is the watchword; keep everlastingly at it; greater attainment demands greater effort; slothful methods get poor results; time is holding us acountable. We cannot expect something for nothing. Transgression must abide by the inevitable. If we do not maintain a very urgent standard of improvement the mortgage of decay will take possession of our mental habitation and time will surrender to neglect. Time rests not and never weary grows; time marks no periods and leaves no heights unscaled.

How true—time never hesitates. And never was there mountain peak so high that time was ever known to abandon its midnight vigil. And in the subteraneous depths wherenopulsation of life exists, no throbbing ray of beauteous sunlight ever enters. Time renders a strict account of its presence. Time has no latitude, no limit, and no reserve forces; time participates in all things; it is the leader and follower in every human thought or action; time measures every life with infallible accuracy; it is supernatural and defiant; intangible and indestructible; indiscriminate and deceptive; incomparable and indefinite. Light and darkness are the potential factors that eliminate contention in the measurement of time.

Time is appalling when we reckon with its strength. It is the only indeterminate factor that is able without marshaling its forces to put to silence every living thing on earth that now exists, and blot out every cause from whence it came, and yet it has many attributes of man. It shows its enmity when we disregard its value.

Mis-spent time always comes back laden with regrets. But time is bountiful with its loving kindness if we early attain to virtue. Those who avoid the pitfalls of vice always have a pillow of comfort to console them, should sorrow ever come to crush their hearts.

We must inaugurate a thorough and indefatigable desire for wisdom if we expect time to eradicate all its baleful measures. The garden of thought must be cultivated to keep the weeds of degeneracy from stifling intellectual advancement and encouraging mental decay, and it is my only purpose to present a thoughtful study of the ravages of time and if possible suggest some escape from its direful vengeance.

The three co-operative expedients proven helpful to arrest mental departure are: Observation, meditation and determination. Listen, take an active interest in all things possible; never lose an opportunity to think; be determined to learn something every day, and then we will certainly have something to strive for. A strong mind is augmentative of a strong body and those of you who have lived to three score and ten are a living proof of this truthful assertion. In point of experience you are the leaders today; and yet it is supremely important to you to make the most of your opportunities. You can ill afford to waste your time; it is too valuable. The assurance of abundance is not so flattering as to be deceptive. The maximum value of borrowed time makes it absolutely imperative that we should strive for the highest efficiency obtainable. It matters not how many diplomas or degrees a man has taken, there is one qualification that only time can hope to secure—and that is experience, and your equipment of experience is such a stupendous achievement. It should be regarded with cautious consideration.

Alfred Russell Wallace, that eminent scientist, was more than fourscore when he made public his final conclusion: That all the world is auxiliary to man.

If these gatherings are for social pleasure only they will ultimately bring disappointment without the co-operation of a sincere effort to promote higher development.

Listen! There is nothing but the mind that lives. All other parts of man decay. It is wisdom, then, while we are here to try and improve the mind each day.

Mind you, it is wisdom to seek after knowledge. And a theoretical analysis of knowledge and wisdom gives this resultant conclusion—that there is a potential relationship.

Knowledge is to know how; wisdom is to know why. Knowledge is the product of educational effort; wisdom is the preponderant result of Divine solicitation. For example, knowledge affords the indulgence in verbal communication by telephonic ingenuity, but wisdom alone supplies the inspiratory conception of its immensity. Knowledge is conjecturable; wisdom is not. Wisdom is a revelation. When we accomplish death we surrender knowledge. Wisdom is the vehicle from whence we accomplish Heaven.

Without replenishment of fuel the fire gradually burns out. And a yearning desire for wisdom is the mental fuel that warms and stimulates the activities of the brain. There are, and no doubt of it, some helpful hints promiscuously scattered throughout the various lines of good reading, but an absolute dependence on the minds of others to nourish our own is woefully lacking in helpful results. One may read for years and yet not attain to any degree of mental pre-eminence. But with a few monments' indulgence in energized thought grasp a conclusion of superior magnitude. I do not maintain that the exigencies demand precipitate action, but I do advise for our physical betterment and for our probable future mental existence, that these suggestions are immeasureably consequential and the disastrous consequences of neglect are only emphasized by the ravages of time. There are some viscous causes for degeneracy—the habitual and injudicious indulgence in any discriminate law—physical or mental—only strikes the dagger of ruin to body and mind, and there is one thing I believe is positively true and you will find it wherever you go in all walks of life—in peace or in strife—you will reap just what you sow.

STORY OF THE PASSOVER TO HELP JEWS IN EUROPE

The "Hagadah," the service read on the first two nights of Passover in every Jewish home throughout the world, has been taken as the basis fora special appeal sent out by the Central Committee for the relief of Jews suffering through the war.

Thousands of copies of ab ooklet containing the modern adaptation of the ancient ritual have been distributed. It tells the story of the exodus from Egypt, the significance of Passover as the festival of freedom and applies the story to the sufferings of the Jews in the European war zones."

Passover always has been the season of helpfulness among Jews. Ancient custom decrees that the poor be provided with Matzohs, the unleavened bread eaten at Passover, and everything else required for the celebration of the festival. On "sedar" nights, as the first two evenings are called, the stranger always is welcomed to the table in compliance with the Scriptural injunction "Let all that are hungry eat, and all that are needy come and celebrate the Passover."

Harry Fischel, No. 63 Park row, New York, is the treasurer of the Central Committee. Purses probably will be made up independently in Syracuse and forwarded to the committee, which already has raised more than $1,000,000 in the United States.

METER FOUND IN GOOD CONDITION

It Had Been Hidden, Says Former Employe of Company—Reliability Is Questioned.

Syracuse — Opposing attorneys clamored for and against the admission of a watt meter as evidence in the case involving the claim of the Battle Island Paper Company yesterday afternoon.

This particular meter and its reliability as a correct gauge of water power is one of the important points in the case.

Attorneys for the State, now conducting the defense before Justices Ackerson and Fennell, just before adjournment yesterday afternoon began the preliminary attack before actually offering the meter in evidence. The move brought the company's attorneys into immediate action.

The meter appears to be an innocent contrivance, but no one in the case seems to place much trust in its ability to tell the truth at all times and under all conditions.

The State's Contention

The state will attempt to prove that the meter was placed in operation by the company after the state had appropriated the land with the hope of proving a high water power. When it did not live up to form, they will try to show, it was hastily removed and hidden.

During the course of barge canal construction at Fulton the state appropriated Battle Island, in the Oswego river. The paper company filed an action for heavy damages becouse of the loss of the land and the water power. While the case was in progress attorneys representing the state learned that a watt meter had been installed by the company to measure the water power.

They know these watt meters in the office of the attorney-general and an attempt was made to find the one used by the Battle Island company. It disappeared.

Produced in Court

Yesterday it was carried into court John Owens of Fulton, employed by the trustees after the company had passed into the hannds of a receiver in 1914, testified that he removed the watt meter from thep ower house upon the order of Superintendent Murray.

"I was told to hide it," he said.

George Anderson, another employe, testified that he was given the job of concealing the machine.

"I put it in a corner of the wood room and covered it with some pulp," he explained.

The state feared that officials of the company would attempt to show by means of the accommodating watt meter that the water power at the site was greater than it really was, and that therefore they were entitled to heavy damages.

Tested in Laboratory

After the watt meter was found by stote officials it was taken to Albany and tested in a laboratory. John P. Gebeline, who knows the ways and habits of watt meters, said it was in good condition, but showed evidences of having been misconnected at some previous time.

He was placed on the stannd by Deputy Attorney-General Edward J. Mone and was questioned by William Nottingham, one of the company's counsel. Mr. Gebeline will tell more about thew att meter today, when the state will attempt to have it admitted as evidence.

Edward M. Ellis, a state engineer, was on the stand in the morning. Attorneys for the state offered evidence to prove that the poper company never had title to the land it claims, and in fact is a squatter on land owned by the state.

State Claims Land

The claim was made that the state has owned the land for eighty years. Maps and documents were submitted to substantiate this contention.

With Deputy Attorney-General Mone in the case are Richard E. Phillips of the Engineering Department and Sanford W. Smith of the attorney-general's office. The case will continue several days.

HAIL TO HIGH, THE CHAMPIONS

But at That It Was a Close Call for Winners of Series—Maccabee Boys' Cleverness.

By defeating the Maccabees last night at Church's Hall in a sensational game, the High school five won the city championship, capturing the second and final contest of the series by a score of 23 to 17. The game was featured by its closeness, the Maccabees displaying a class of playing far superior to that shown in the first game when the high school team had no difficulty in winning. Roughness marred the game throughout, caused by the fact that the score up until the last two minutes of play was even at practically all times, each team at intervals swinging into the lead but never by a margin of more than one or two baskets.

Four fouls called by Referee Morin on the Macvcabee team after Snow and two high school players had scrimmaged in a corner of the court gave the high school a safe lead of six points, Martin shooting the entire lot. As large a crowd as has ever attended a basketball game in this city was present to witness the match and cheers from the two sections of high school students, boys on the side lines and the girls seated on the stage, stirred up interest in the encounter to a high pitch. Close guarding featured the game throughout and to Rohrball and Ward o fthe Maccabees get most of the credit for the low score rolled up by the school boys. With the exception of one field basket by Wallace, the forwards, Martin and Reynolds had to be satisfied with three apiece, this being the least number of baskets Coach Merrill's squad has gotten in a game since its reorganization in the middle of the season.

Martin's Opportunity

With the score tied at one period a sensational field basket would follow giving the team a momentary lead and then the opposing side would even up the score. This was the manner in which the game proceeded in the first half until the last minute of play in this period when Martin ond Reynolds each found the basket for a field goal and Martin dropped one in from the foul line, ending the half with the score 13 to 8 in favor of the high school team.

The Maccabees in the second period clearly outplayed the high school five. The former secured three field baskets while the latter obtained but two. Slowly but surely the Maccabees commenced to overtake the high school with the opening of play in the second period and came up to within one point. A field basket at this time meant victory for either side. At this juncture the game resolved itself into a rough and tumble encounter and very few opportunities were offered to either side to shoot. It appeared as though the high school team would win out by their one-point lead barring any chance fortuniate shots from midfield.

Snow's "talking back" when a foul was called on him at this critical moment gave Martin two free throws and two more were added on owing to the remarks of the spectators along the side lines. Martin made all four throws good and the game was "sewed up," the final whistle blowing

The Preliminary Game

In a preliminary game between the Maccabee Pets and Foster's Cubs, Foster's team won out by a score of 16 to 8. Calkins was the individual star of this encounter. Although playing a guard position he scored 10 of the 16 points and incidentally kept down his own man to one lone field basket.

TOMORROW

He was going to be all that a mortal should be,
Tomorrow
No one should be kinder or braver than he
Tomorrow
A friend who was troubled and weary
he knew,
Who'd be glad of a lift and who needed it, too;
On him he would call and see what he could do
Tomorrow

Each morning he stacked up the letters he'd write
Tomorrow
And thought of the folks he would fill with delight,
Tomorrow
It was too bad, indeed, he was busy today,
And hadn't a minute to stop on his way;
More time I will have to give others,
he'd say,
Tomorrow

The greatest of workers this man would have been
Tomorrow
The world would have known him, had he ever seen
Tomorrow
But the fact is he died and he faded from view,
And all that he left there when living was through
Was a mountain of things he intended to do
Tomorrow.

In Either Case.

After walking together from the station the two men paused at the corner of the street. Then said one of them, a newly married man:

"We are just close to my house. Won't you come in and have a bit of dinner?"

"Thank you!" said his friend hesitatingly. "But your wife"—

"Oh, that's all right!" the young husband quickly assured him. "If her cooking is a success she'll be pleased to have another to eat it, and if it's a failure—I shall!"

FREED CONVICTS ARE FLUSH

Fifteen Men Out of Prison Had $704 Among Them.

Olympia, Wash.—Instead of the usual prison gift of $5 each, fifteen inmates of the state penitentiary at Walla Walla took away with them a total of $704, earned in wages, when released recently.

The leading capitalist of the crowd carried $92.70, the next $85.10; six had cash varying from $60 to $80 and the lowest $15.80, all earned at the rate of 50 cents a day and board on public road work in Douglas county.

Another detachment of thirty men has been ordered from the prison to the honor camp, which will close on completion of work in that section of the state July 1. Twenty prisoners have been selected to be sent April 1 to the Meskill quarry, in Lewis county.

DEATH IN EMPTY TIN CANS.

Punch Holes In Bottoms and Save Lives, Says U. S. Health Service.

Washington.—The United States public health service announces that the tin can is a menace. An official bulletin says:

"Malaria experts of the United States health service have found that discarded tin cans containing rainwater are breeding places for the mosquito, which is the sole agent in spreading malaria.

"A hole in the bottom of the empty can might have resulted in the saving of a human life. Certainly it would have assisted in preventing a debilitating illness. Empty tin cans have no business about the premises anyway, but if we must so decorate our back yards let us see to it that the can has a hole in the bottom."

AMPUTATES HIS OWN FOOT.

Californian Prevents Death by Operating With a Pocketknife.

Redwood City.—By amputating his left foot with a pocketknife L. H. Beck of Berkeley saved himself from being drawn to death in the machinery of a dredger on which he was operating. Not once did Beck cry out, say those who were working on the dredger. He directed the binding of the severed arteries and then ordered a launch to take him to Dumbarton bridge, where he was transferred to a handcar in charge of a section gang.

Although terribly weakened from loss of blood Beck did not lose consciousness once during the long, hot trip into Redwood. He was taken to the Haling hospital, where physicians expressed amazement at his wonderful grit.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

GRIP is a serious disease, and persons affected with it suffer from cold in the head, fever, headache and marked backache. There are many cases with fever and prostration as the only symptoms.

Although serious, grip is not often fatal, though there may be fatal complications, of which pneumonia is the most frequent. Cold in the head alone is frequently called grip and, although usually only an annoyance to adults, may be serious in young children, causing diseases of the ear and mastoid. Tonsilitis and quinsy sore throat are also erroneously called grip. People catch these diseases by breathing into their noses and mouths the fine spray from the noses and mouths of persons who have the disease. This fine spray is produced by the act of coughing, sneezing and talking and may be carried from the affected person four or five feet through the air.

To avoid grip, colds and tonsilitis (1) keep in good physical condition, (2) get plenty of sleep with windows open, (3) avoid crowded and badly ventilated places, (4) do not get near people who have coughs and colds, (5) do not get close to people while talking, (6) keep your feet dry and (7) don't clothe too warmly and become overheated.

If you get a bad cold, sore throat or have fever (1) send for a reliable physician, (2) turn your head away from people when coughing and sneezing, (3) do not go near children, (4) do not take remedies without competent medical advice and (5) take care of a cold. Many colds develop into bronchitis or pneumonia.

FOR LIGHT HOUSEKEEPING.

How to Run Your Fireless Cooker Without Fussing.

There are a number of things which a housewife must keep carefully in mind if she is to have success with her fireless cooker and make it save her time later and expense. One is that if food is left indefinitely in the cooker it will sour. Soups, stews, vegetables and such things must be removed after twenty-four hours and less in hot weather.

Another thing is that some foods require a longer time on the fire before being put in the cooker than others do. Cereals may require only ten minutes and tough meat half an hour. It is best to find out something about the length of time the different things require before beginning to use the cooker. Generally speaking, all indigestible things require longer cooking than other things. Oatmeal, beef stew, corned beef and beans need more time than steamed puddings, rice and chicken.

A third thing that should never be forgotten is this: Everything that takes a long time to cook is improved and the process hastened if when the time is half up the pail is removed and reheated without opening it and put back again.

How to Make Cutwork, Which Is Coming In Again.

You must have at least one piece showing a cutwork design if you wish to be up to date in the needlework field. This type of fancy work is being revived very strongly and is used for cushions, runners, scarfs, etc. The work is very simply done, as it calls for nothing more than the buttonhole stitch.

Either side of the portion of material that is to be cut out is first outlined with a running stitch. It is then buttonholed, the purled edge facing inward. When you come to a place where a bar is indicated, stitch over to the other side and return on the same thread by wrapping it around and around your needle; then proceed with the over and over stitch until you come to the next bar, when you repeat. Instead of wrapping the thread around the needle many embroiderers make buttonhole stitches across each bridge so that the bridge will be firm.

How to Perfume Handkerchiefs and Lingerie Without Saturating Them.

A very clever way to perfume handkerchiefs and muslin underwear: Supply your washwoman with a good sized piece of orris root, which she is to throw into the water in which your handkerchiefs are boiling. When they come back to you from ironing they will be redolent of the orris root. Then you can slip them between the folds of a sachet filled with violet powder, and they will not lose their fragrance. Violet and orris scent together make a real violet odor.

How to Remove Warts From Children's Hands.

Touch the warts with acetic acid, being very careful not to get the acid on the surrounding skin. Lunar caustic is also recommended as a sure cure for warts. Apply the caustic with a small orange stick. Several applications may be necessary.

How to Clean Leather, Especially a Soiled Handbag.

A tablespoonful of oxalic acid dissolved in a quart of cold water cleans cowhide, pigskin and sole leather very satisfactorily. Try it on an old pair of cowhide hike boots and see.

The Kitchen Cupboard

BREAKFAST RELISHES.

ENGLISH MUFFINS.—A quart of flour, a teaspoonful of salt, two large teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one and a quarter pints of milk. Sift together flour, sugar, salt and powder. Add milk and mix into smooth batter a trifle stiffer than for griddle cakes. Have griddle heated regularly all over, grease it and lay on muffin rings, half fill them and when risen well up to the top of rings turn over gently with cake turner. They should not be too brown, just a buff color. When all cooked pull each open in half, toast delicately, butter well, serve hot on folded napkin.

Nut Bran Muffins.—Mix together a cupful of bran flour, half a cupful of white flour, two teaspoonfuls of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, half a teaspoonful of salt and a cupful of finely chopped nut meats. Add one and a half tablespoonfuls of melted butter, moisten with sweet milk, beat thoroughly, drop from a spoon, allowing space between each, and bake in a moderate oven.

Rice Waffles.—Rice waffles served with strained honey or maple sirup are a delicious cold weather luncheon dessert. To make them rub a cupful of cold boiled rice through a fine sieve, add a teaspoonful and a half of soft butter and a tablespoonful of sugar. Sift together a cupful of flour and a teaspoonful and a half of baking powder with half a teaspoonful of salt. Add this, with two egg yolks and milk enough to make a thin batter, to the rice; then fold in the white of the eggs, beaten stiff and bake in greased waffle irons.

Gluten Gems.—A pint of gluten flour, a pint of milk, an egg, a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix the flour and salt, beat the egg, add the milk and stir into the dry mixture. Add the baking powder, beat well, fill greased gem pans two-thirds full and bake in a quick oven.

Soda Biscuits.—Sift a quart of flour with a heaping teaspoonful of soda, adding a pinch of salt. Take a piece of lard or butter the "size of a fist" and rub into the flour and soda. Then wet with sour milk until the dough is soft enough to roll out. Cut out the biscuits and set in hot pans, leaving room between, and bake in a very hot oven. Do not mix or handle any more than is necessary and you will have flaky biscuits.

The present name of Dardanelles was given to the ancient Hellespont from the two castles that protect the narrowest part of the strait and that themselves preserve the name of the famous city of Dardanus in the ancient Troad. The name of "Dardanelles" is briefly referred to as having been derived from the name of the city of Dardanus, but the Encyclopedia Britannica states that it is the twin castles for which the strait is actually named.—New York Times.

The Strange Case of MARY PAGE

The Great McClure Mystery Story, Written by FREDERICK LEWIS In Collaboration With JOHN T. M'INTYRE, Author of the Ashton Kirk Detective Stories. Read the Story and See the Essanay Moving Pictures

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Page, actress, is accused of the murder of James Pollock and is defended by her lover, Philip Langdon. Pollock was intoxicated. At Mary's trial she admits she had the revolver. Her maid testifies that Mary threatened Pollock with it previously, and Mary's leading man implicates Langdon. How Mary disappeared from the scene of the crime is a mystery. Brandon tells of a strange hand print he saw on Mary's shoulder. Further evidence shows that horror of drink produces temporary insanity in Mary. The defense is "repressed psychosis." Witnesses described Mary's flight from her intoxicated father and her father's suicide. Nurse Walton describes the kidnaping of Mary by Pollock, and Amy Barton tells of Mary's struggles to become an actress and of Pollock's pursuit of her.

AMY'S STELLAR ROLE

NATURE had intended Amy Barton to be a great actress. Emotional roles of any sort would have sat absurdly upon her slender shoulders, but in the part of the insouciant ingenue she never failed to score.

She was the quaint blending which modern life has evolved, of an old-fashioned small town upbringing, veneered with a bright crust of bravado born of battling for her living in a city brimming with temptations, but she had never lost her gay defiance nor had she lost the cornerstone of her simple creed. "Be decent, loyal to your friends and don't go around with a grouch."

Her gaiety was infectious, and as she tripped up the two steps to the witness chair she nodded a familiar greeting to the judge and smiled at the jury.

"Miss Barton," said Langdon, "you have told us of the experience with Mr Pollock that led to your sudden resignation from 'The Blue Feather' company. Did you see him at any time [illegible]?"

"[illegible] him again!" she retorted. "Why, [illegible]u was a regular epidemic!" A delighted giggle greeted the words, emanating from the jury-box itself. "We bumped into him the day we landed our first real job for the [illegible].

"We were on our way to the Prentiss Agency. We'd been there before and they'd handed us the 'call again' sign, so we were playing a return date though we hadn't much hopes. Old Miss Prentiss is such a sour old maid she'd never hand anybody a job if she could get her commissions any other way, but she has the inside with some of the good managers and you can't overlook any bets in the show business. So we went back, and while we were going down the hall Mary looked so blue that I had to play Little Sunshine with much business of 'I've-a-hunch-that-we'll-land-today'—to try and make her smile and look pretty for any possible manager. That's why we didn't see James Pollock till we fairly bumped into him, and he made a grab for Mary's hand.

"Then he began to spill out an apology. He said he'd been searching every theatrical agency and every theatre in town looking for Mary. 'I've been wretched, Mary,' he said. 'I think I must have been crazy that night at the "Blue Feather." I was jealous and angry and hurt besides, and I lost my head. Won't you forgive me? I'm not going to bother you any more,

"Your honor and gentlemen of the jury."

but I can't live without your forgiveness.' By that time Mary had got the power of speech back and she jerked her hand away from his as if it burnt. 'I am perfectly willing to forgive you,' she said, 'and accept your apology, but I do not care to continue any acquaintance with you.'"

"Did you and Miss Page secure positions in that new company?"

"Yes. The minute the manager spotted Mary, he picked her for the lead because she was the proper 'type', and Mary, the darling, said she couldn't take the job unless I went along too. So he handed me an ingenue role with about ten sides and twenty-five beans as salary. Mary's was to be featured in the play which had the giddy moniker of 'A Woman's Pledge.'"

"May it please the court," broke in the prosecutor, getting lazily to his feet, "all this is no doubt very interesting—delightful, in fact, and might prove of great help to us if we had stage aspirations. But," (with a sudden change of tone) "we are here to decide the guilt or innocence of Mary Page, whom the State declares to have murdered James Pollock. I fail to see, your Honor, where the somewhat rambling fable in slang which the witness is telling has any bearing upon this case."

"Your Honor, and gentlemen of the jury," Langdon's voice rose before the words of the prosecutor had died away, "the story which the witness is telling has everything to do with the question of the murder of James Pollock. It will show how again and again he forced his attentions upon Miss Page, and of the horror in which she held him; and of the almost inevitable mental collapse that followed his brutal efforts to make her marry him. If I have allowed the witness to tell the story in her own way, it is simply that I wish to bring before you the picture of these two young girls, so brave and hopeful, and hard working, whose positions and good character were attacked by James Pollock."

For a moment the judge hesitated, and the court held its breath—aggressive, even antagonistic at the mere thought of losing the gay little witness who was looking from the judge to Langdon with such childishly startled eyes. Then his Honor said slowly:

"I cannot sustain your objection to the testimony as irrelevant, sir. I consider all that has a bearing upon the curious relations existing between Mr. Pollock and Miss Page as of paramount importance. At the same time," he added, turning to Langdon, "I would suggest that you instruct your witness to confine her testimony to mere statements of fact."

The entire courtroom, not excepting the jury, heaved a sigh of relief, and Langdon's face showed a flush of triumph as he asked:

"How long did your engagement in 'A Woman's Pledge' last, Miss Barton?"

"Six weeks, but we only got salary for four."

"Where did the tour end?"

"It didn't end. It blew up in a one-tank rube town called Prindleville. It was one of these towns that have the railroad station on one side of Main Street, the hotel and 'Opry' house at the other and the rest of the buildings scattered about wherever they happened to drop."

Again a gust of laughter lifted through the dingy room, but Langdon frowned and shook his head at Amy.

"Never mind descriptions," he said more sharply than he had spoken so far. Amy, far from being awed by his sternness, pouted at him with a gay little moue and went on with her story in her own fashion.

"We were all feeling pretty grouchy when we hit Prindleville, because the ghost hadn't walked for a month, and nobody knew whether we'd ever get back to New York or not."

"Did you give the performance that night?" broke in Langdon impatiently.

"Well, we started to, but it never got beyond the ticket-taking stage, for the sheriff blew in with a badge as big as a saucer and said that he'd been ordered to hold all our trunks and props for unpaid board bills in the last four towns, and that meant that we were stranded with Broadway doing the Sheridan act many miles away. We went back to the hotel and said what we thought of the producer and tried to borrow carfare from the hotel proprietor. That was when we saw James Pollock again. He arrived in town by the last train, and walked into the lobby while we were there. He came over and said he was going through the town on a business trip, and seeing Mary's name on an eight sheet—you know—big poster—he had jumped off on impulse. He said he was awfully sorry that the tour had ended so unfortunately, and begged her to let him arrange for our return to New York."

"Did Miss Page accept?"

"No. She refused absolutely. She—she looked as if she would scream if he touched her. She held onto my arm so tight it made a black-and-blue spot, and you could see the pulse in her throat jumping the way it does before a woman dissolves into hysterics. The proprietor of the place was a decent old Rube with a fatherly eye and soft heart that were the make-up of a grouch, and when Mary offered him a ring that had been her mother's, as a pledge for our board, he kind of gulped and handed over the key to our room without a word."

"You say 'our room'. That means that you remained with Miss Page?"

"Why, of course," she said in obvious surprise. "You don't suppose I'd go back on Mary, do you? We went upstairs and had a little cry," she said whimsically, a furtive dimple showing as she spoke. "Then, having powdered our noses and cheered up, I left Mary resting while I went to the head of the stairs to see what was doing in the office, and what had happened to the rest of the bunch."

"Could you see those in the office from the stairway?"

"Plainly, by going down to the first landing and looking through the banisters."

"Was the rest of the company still there?"

"Yes."

"Was Mr. Pollock with them?"

"Yes: he was playing a leading role and making a speech."

"Could you hear what he said?"

"Sure! Of course I missed the first part of it, but when I got to the landing he was saying, 'I have always taken a great interest in the theatre, and can thoroughly sympathize with your predicament.' Then he pulled a time-table out of his pocket, and tapped it, saying, 'The New York train goes through in six minutes. It can be flagged to take you aboard and I'll pay your fares to New York and settle the claims of the sheriff—for no reason except that I don't want to see you stranded.' At that the company set up

"She looked as if she would scream if he touched her."

a cheer and beat it like crazy people for their suit-cases, and Mr. Pollock pulled out a great wad of bills and began peeling them off for everybody, including the sheriff himself."

"What did you do then?"

"I ran back and told Mary, but we could see through his game. It was a case of either accept his help or be stranded and walk the ties."

"What did Miss Page say?"

"She said, 'You go, Amy, because you want to get back, but I'll walk every step of the way and earn my food by scrubbing before I'll accept a penny of James Pollock's money or give him a chance to speak to me again.'"

"Did you agree to go?"

"No. I said that burrs weren't in it with me when it came to stickin', and if there was going to be any walking or scrubbing I would be on the job to do my share. That Mary and I were pals—and we'd take what was coming together. Well, anybody would have stuck by Mary. She—she's the best ever."

"Did Mr. Pollock leave with the company?" asked Langdon, a warning note in his voice, and with a little start she turned back to him.

"No. We thought he had gone, but after the train had pulled out I looked out of the window and saw him coming back to the hotel—grinning."

"Did you tell Miss Page?"

"No. I thought it was better for her to think he was gone, so that she would get a good night's sleep. Afterward I wished I had told her."

"Why?"

"Because it was such an awful shock to her when he came to our door in the morning."

"Will you tell us the circumstances of that meeting, please?"

"Well, Mary and I were both dressed and ready for breakfast, and we were talking over the chances of getting some sort of work to do in the town till we could get word home to mother to send us car fare. It costs quite a lot from Prindleville to the big town, and we knew it might be days before the old lady could raise it, and we had to eat in the meantime. While we were still talking we heard a knock at the door, and thinking it was the chambermaid or maybe the proprietor Mary sings out, 'Come in.' And at that James Pollock opened the door."

"What did Miss Page do?"

"She screamed and turning, hid her face against my shoulder for a moment. Then she stood up and faced him. 'How dare you come here?' she asked, and he had the decency to look pretty foolish. 'I dare because I am worried about you,' he said. 'I can't go and leave you stranded here; you've got to let me help you.' 'I shall never accept your help!' cried Mary, and I could tell by her voice that she was pretty close to tears, so I stepped forward and said, 'Look here, James Pollock, it's a pretty mean trick for any man to persecute a girl, the way you're persecuting Mary. Haven't you a shred of decency in your poor little soul? If you have you'll beat it—while the going's good.'"

"Did he answer you?"

"Yes. For a minute I thought he was going to hit me. Then he said, 'Miss Page is thoroughly capable of answering me herself, Miss Barton, and I must ask you not to interfere in what does not concern you.' 'Anything that concerns Mary concerns me,' I retorted, but Mary put her hand on my arm. 'Mr. Pollock,' she said, and there was a queer note in her voice, 'I thoroughly agree with what Amy has said—you are persecuting me; you are torturing me—and I cannot bear any more. For God's sake go away and leave us in peace.' At that Mr. Pollock flung out his hands and said hoarsely, 'Mary—Mary—you can't mean that. Aren't you tired of this poverty and misery? Haven't you had enough of this life? One would think to hear you that I was some brute pursuing you, when all I ask is to honorably marry you and protect you from hardships.' 'Honorable!' cried Mary. 'Do you call it honorable to assist the others because you knew it would leave us stranded and helpless? Is it honorable to force yourself upon us in this fashion? Is it honorable to persecute me, when I've told you over and over that I'll drudge all my life and wear my fingers to the bone with work before I will marry you?' Then she burst into tears, and I ordered Mr. Pollock out of the room, saying that he'd gotten his answer and he might as well go."

"Did he leave?"

"No—but it didn't matter, because just then the door opened and the good old gink that ran the place came in. He said he'd heard enough of what was said to realize that we girls needed some help and advice, and suggested that since Mr. Pollock seemed determined to stay there, that we might go down to his office. He handed us each a job as biscuit-slingers in the dining-room. Mary was to administer the table d'hote to the regular and I was to be on the job with the transients—and SOME transients they were, too! Of course Mary made a hit right off.

"It's a good thing, your Honor, that they don't leave any cold poison lying around in rube hotels, because the first customer I got was James Pollock! I did stick my finger in the oatmeal I was taking him and say, 'I hope you choke' three times, but it didn't work."

Again her bubbling laugh rippled out, followed by a guffaw of delight from the listeners, but as if it were a signal, the prosecutor leaped to his feet.

"Your Honor," he stormed, "I object to the testimony of this witness being admitted as evidence! Is this a courtroom or a burlesque show? And is my learned opponent revealing to us the gay life of Miss Barton or evidence dealing with the murder of James Pollock?"

"May it please the court," retorted Langdon, "the events which took place in Prindleville had a very definite effect upon the relations between James Pollock and the defendant. I crave the patience of your Honor and the gentlemen of the jury with the witness—who is—er—not exactly conversant with the legal brevity demanded by law."

"I think," said his Honor, the ghost of a smile still twitching at his lips, "that the witness may go on with her story. But," he added, leaning forward with an admonishing gesture towards Amy, "you must remember, Miss Barton, that you are here not to amuse us, but to answer as briefly as possible the questions put to you by counsel for the defence."

"How long did you remain at the hotel in Prindleville as a waitress?"

"About three weeks."

"Did Mr. Pollock remain there during that time?"

"Yes."

"Did he speak to you at any time?"

"Well, he had to speak to me, but he limited it to, 'Two boiled eggs and dry toast,' or 'Gimme roast chicken and mashed potatoes,' but with Mary it was different. He didn't speak to her, but he never let her get out of his sight if he could avoid it. He used to sit in the hall where he could watch her in the dining-room, and if she went out for a breath of air, he always followed her. It got on her nerves so she used to cry half the night, and say she would go crazy if he didn't go away."

"Miss Barton, you say that you remained at the hotel about three weeks. Why did you leave at the end of that time?"

"Because of the behavior of some of the men who came to the place."

"What do you mean by their behavior?"

"Their—their—freshness," she said, flushing a little. "You see, when we first went to work, they were all very decent, especially to Mary, and everything was fine. Then they—they seemed to change even to me. Finally something the landlady said put me wise to the fact that our characters weren't worth a two-cent stamp in Prindleville. I didn't want Mary to know, so I kept quiet till the day when the guy that always came for lunch got fresh and tried to kiss her. The landlady had just told me that her 'regular girls' were objecting to work with us, because of our bad characters, when the door of the dining-room banged open and Mary, taking her apron off as she went, ran past us and up the stairs. The landlady called her, but she never even looked around, so I started after her. Just as I did so a cheap, flashy guy who was a regular boarder came out of the dining-room, looking sheepish and with one cheek bright red and the other very pale. I've seen a good smack make that kind of a complexion before, so I kind of waited around to see what he would do."

"Did he leave the hotel?"

"No. He walked out into the office and across to where James Pollock was sitting and flung himself into a chair beside him. He ripped out a good round oath or two; then he said, 'Say, look here, from what you told me, that Mary Page is no better than she should be, but crickey, she swung a right onto my jaw that jarred my brains in there, just because I tried to give her a little kiss—and offered to take her to the movies.'"

"Their—their freshness."

"Did Mr. Pollock reply?"

"No. First he looked as if he was going to hand the chump one himself, then he laughed as if he was satisfied with something, and I ran up stairs to Mary. She was crying, and packing her grip. She said that for the last two or three days she had noticed a decided difference in the attitude of the men towards her, and that at noon one of them had insulted her and she had slapped his face. The worst of it was, she said, the man said that he had been told that she wasn't so particular with others, and was notorious where she came from. When we went downstairs with our suit-cases in our hands the proprietor's wife was giving him an earful of what she had heard about us, of how bad we were and all the rest, and Mr. Pollock was sitting there taking it all in, but pretending to read. He jumped up when we came in sight, however, and started to speak, but we pushed by him and I walked right up to the proprietor and said, 'Look here—you've been pretty white to us, but somebody is spreading a lot of lies around here, and we're going to quit P. D. Q., and we'd like whatever of the long green is coming to us after our room rent is paid.' The old guy, seeing Mr. Pollock was listening, said we'd better all go into the dining-room to settle it; but Mr. Pollock followed us in, and said that as he was a friend of ours, that he had heard that there were a good many rumors about Mary's past, and that of course no actress could expect to have any reputation, as everybody knew what road companies were. Then he grabbed Mary's hands, saying, 'I at least care nothing about gossip. Knowing Miss Page, I have repeatedly offered to marry her and now—now I ask again, Mary, you can kill this slander in a minute by marrying me!' That wised me to his game all right, but before I could tell her, she had dragged her hands away from him with a scream and backed against the wall, staring at us as if—as if—she was—crazy. I called out 'Mary! Mary!' but she didn't seem to hear me. She just kept staring at Mr. Pollock."

"Was he much excited?" snapped Langdon.

"Yes, but he was half drunk, too. He'd been drinking a lot all day, and it showed plainly on him. It was that, I guess, that made him act like a fool and try to catch her in his arms, crying that there was nothing ahead of her but disgrace and disaster unless she married him."

"Did she reply?"

"No—she didn't answer. She struck at him—twice—then she screamed and ran out—and across the street to the railroad. We—we followed as quickly as we could, and then—" she choked, and her hand went waveringly to her throat, as if the words would not come—"and then—we saw the man waving his flag and knew the—the train from New York was coming in. I—think I went crazy myself for a minute. I screamed and screamed and I heard Pollock screaming too, and we ran like mad—but we couldn't catch her—only—thank God—the man with the danger flag saw her and stopped her just in time!"

"Did she fight against capture?"

"No. She just fainted dead off in his arms, and when we got to her, he had carried her over and laid her on the platform. It was then that I saw Mr. Langdon. He had just gotten off the train, and when he saw the crowd and Mary lying there, he turned white as a sheet and came running over. But I told him that she had only fainted and he'd better carry her over to the hotel."

"Was Miss Page conscious when you reached the hotel?"

"No. But after she had been laid on the sofa in the parlor and the landlady had bathed her forehead a while she opened her eyes and smiled at us, and the old woman, who was a good soul at heart, drove us all out, saying that Mary needed rest."

"Was Mr. Pollock in the hotel at that time?"

"Yes. He was at the parlor door, but when we came out he kind of edged away and stood scowling at us. Then I told Mr. Langdon that I believed he had been spreading slander against Mary all through the town and had driven her half insane so that she had attempted to end it all by flinging herself in front of the train. Mr. Langdon started to tell me something then, but before he could get a word out, the landlady came to the parlor door and said Mary wanted me. Mr. Langdon went in with me. When Mary saw him, she just gave one cry, and came running to him, like a kid that's been scared in the dark and sees it's mother coming with a lamp. But when she saw Mr. Pollock pushing his way in with some of the others, she turned kind of white again, and Mr. Langdon, turning to see what had startled her, got a glimpse of him. At that he suddenly pulled a bunch of papers out of his pocket, and marching up to Mr. Pollock said, loud enough for all of us to hear: 'Through certain investigations which I made in New York, James Pollock, I have discovered that you are the biggest scoundrel unhung! I have actual proof that you backed "A Woman's Pledge" Company, and allowed it to strand in order to leave Mary Page penniless and alone in a strange town; and what is more, curse you, I believe you yourself spread the lies that have been told about her!'"

"Did Mr. Pollock deny these accusations?"

"He started to, but apparently changed his mind and didn't say a word. But the good old Rube proprietor did. He jumped up and shook his fist under Mr. Pollock's nose and shouted, 'You scoundrel! I've had my doubts about you for some time. Now I know—and you get out of my hotel—and get quick! This town is no place for hounds that persecute women and slander 'em, and if you don't want some rough handling you'd better get away before word of this dirty work gets around.' At that Mr. Pollock turns about like a dog that's had a licking and slunk out and Mr. Langdon laughed and said, 'There's a train home in twenty minutes, and we're going to catch it.'"

"That is all, Miss Barton," said Langdon, but his tone was thoughtful, and when the prosecutor waived cross examination and the judge adjourned court, he showed obvious relief. He followed Amy into the witness room, drew her aside and asked:

"Amy, have you seen anything of Daniels lately?"

"Why, sure," she answered. "I saw him yesterday, and, say, he looks about the sickest thing I ever saw in the show business. Honest, I felt sorry for him."

"Well, you may feel even more sorry for him, before long," muttered Langdon, and hurrying out through the gloomy corridors he passed through the clanging door and down into the cells. At a word to the turnkey he was admitted to the narrow room where Mary lay flung across the narrow bed. Stooping over her he whispered softly:

"Mary—my dear—"

"Oh, Philip," she sobbed, turning and clinging to him. "It—it's like living all the horrors over again to go through this day by day. Is it worth while? Will it help any?"

"Help? Why, dear, I'm more hopeful tonight than I've been since the beginning," he cried cheerily. "And what's more, I believe I've got a line on a new clue—that will work up well."

"Oh, what?" she cried, sitting up and smiling at him rainbow-wise through the tears that begemmed her lashes; and Langdon, holding her hands against his lips, said softly:

"Just be brave a little longer and trust me."

"Dearest, you know that long after he deliberately planned to strand you, Pollock also backed Daniels to star you. I'm going to summon Daniels and make him explain their exact association, and then I think—the end will be in sight. Just be brave a little longer—and trust me."

"Oh, I do—I do," she whispered; and when he left her she followed him to the door and, thrusting her slender hands between the bars, caught his and said in a voice that thrilled with sweetness:

"Philip, dear—I am hopeful—and I am brave—don't forget that—and please go home tonight—remembering that I was smiling when I said good-bye."

But Philip, burying his face in the slender palms, could not see the bravely sweet smile because of the scalding tears that burned his eyelids, as he hurried down the echoing corridor.

EYES ON AVIATORS

Spectacular Air Battles In Europe Focus Attention.

AMAZING PROGRESS MADE.

Many a Sensation Is Produced When Bird Men Meet In Air—Participants Could Give Story With Imperishable Vividness—Often Near Death.

Photos by American Press Association.

BOELKE AND PEGOUD.

London.—Europe's war has produced conditions that make aeroplaning the grimmest adventure known to man. War is man's oldest game. Aviation is his latest. Each day intrepid air men, under twenty-five years of age for the most part, like hawks make course above roof, tent, rampart and battlefield to thrust suddenly below premeditated thunderbolts of death. They fight duels in the air with other indomitable young men in enemy aeroplanes. When something goes wrong a mile or more above earth on a mild June evening in time of peace a queer sensation is produced. The percussive crack heard by thousands of air men above the European battle lines these days and nights in all kinds of weather produces a sensation much more queer. A lieutenant just out of his teens, a wing broken, clinging to his duty, his ears deafened, little knowing whether it is the whistling storm he hears or the whir of shot—thousands of such men can testify that an experience of the sort is a thing of imperishable vividness.

Cowdin and Thaw, among numerous Americans who have joined the fighting air men, can tell many such tales. Boelke, Immelmann, Guynemer, Bone, among the newcomers, and Vedrines, Beaumont and Garros, to mention a few of the veterans, are making ineffaceable records. These men use the aeroplane, or avion, as they call it, not merely as a scouting vehicle, but as a deadly instrument of offense.

Lieutenant Boelke of the German army recently brought down his thirteenth machine over the Forges forest. Lieutenant Baron von Althaus brought down his fourth aeroplane over enemy lines west of Lihons. The element of sport enters even into aeroplane warfare. After all, thinks the aviator, the shame is not so much in being caught as being caught by a mere amateur with a paltry record of two or three captures to his name.

Lieutenant Immelmann recently bagged his tenth enemy aeroplane. The gallantry and bravery of Lieutenant Warneford illustrates the spirit of these European aviators. Single handed he attacked a Zeppelin and destroyed it. A few days later, accompanied by the American writer Needham, he made a pleasure trip, and both men were killed in landing.

On intimate terms with death were those fifty air men who fought the greatest aerial battle of the war recently when the allied aeroplanes raided Mulhausen, Upper Alsace. Five German aeroplanes and three French fell, the occupants of all being killed.

On the outbreak of the war Adolphe Pegoud, the famous French aviator who gained renown in 1913 when he originated the feat of flying upside down in an aeroplane and looping the loop, joined the French squadron and was often mentioned for valor. He startled the American people when he came to this country and did the loop the loop. His daring feats will go down in aeronautic history.

Wild Beasts Kill Deer.

Eugene, Ore.—The snowfall has resulted in a great slaughter of deer by predatory animals, in the opinion of C. J. Hills of Oakridge. He tells of finding several carcasses, one indicating that the deer had been killed by a wildcat. At this point the snow was twenty feet deep, and the deer had been there apparently several days in a space ten feet square. It had eaten a bunch of maple bushes for food. As it could not get out of its snow prison it became easy prey.

Clouds and Cold.

A clear, bright, starlight night in winter is always much colder than a cloudy one.

The little known reason for this is that the heat of the earth is always thrown off much more quickly when there is nothing to intercept it. Clouds act as a kind of blanket and, in preventing the earth's heat from escaping, tend to keep the atmosphere warm.

THE COLONEL INDICATES HIS FAVORITE PLANK

Oyster Bay — Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has dispelled all doubt as to his attitude toward the Republican Presidential nomination.

In a sharp declaration of principles, he announced yesterday the terms upon which he would accept the Republican nomination.

A candidate for Congress in a nearby State expects to attend the Chicago convention, as a delegate, called at Sagamore Hill yesterday. Several other guests were present in the famous trophy room. In the presence of these, the caller, after a general discussion of the convention outlook, said:

"You know, Colonel, I may make up my mind that we will have to nominate you."

What reply was expected is purely conjectural. There have been several attempts recently to smoke the Colonel out. There was silence for an instant, and then, his eyes snapping, and his jaw hard set, Colonel Roosevelt in crackling sentences stated his terms.

VERDUN CAN'T BE TAKEN SAYS COUNT CADORNA

Paris—"Verdun will never be taken by the Germans."

This emphatic declaration was made here today by Lietuenant General Count Luigi Cadorna, chief of the Italian General Staff, who has just returned from the Verdun front, where he inspected the French positions as the guest of General Joffre.

"France's military situation is excellent," the Italian commander continued. "She has plenty of men, her 1916 class being untouched, while the 1917 class is in training. On the other hand Germany is using her 1916 troops and has been for several weeks.

"France and England have concentrated mountains of guns and shells behind their lines and are able to repel the worst attacks Germany can deliver."

CONVICTS TO PLANT COTTON.

They Will Cultivate 1,300 Acres of a Prison Farm.

McAlester, Okla. Thirteen hundred acres of the state prison farm will be planted to cotton this year. All work except the overseeing of the labor will be done by prisoners.

The land on which this cotton will be produced was a few years ago merely rocky and a waste. Hills rock covered and eroded by rains and gullies deeply cut by spring floods surrounded the concrete walls of the penitentiary. Hard labor and careful management have changed the surface to a rolling, well drained seed bed.

Rocks were removed from the surface. Gullies were filled up after drains had been laid. Dams and riprap were emplaced to hold back the fine soil carried down by showers.

In the coming year almost the entire acreage will be devoted to cotton. Of the land still rocky and unimproved hog and cattle pastures have been made. Bermuda grass is spreading, and before many years at the present rate of development enough beef and dairy supplies will be produced to feed the convicts.

KEEPS MAN'S AUTO.

Farmer Who Hires Hand Will Pay For Car, Also For Gasoline.

Danville, Ill.—A contract has been signed between Patrick Green, a farmer of Grant township, and Milt Brady in which Green agrees to pay Brady $30 a month for his services as a farm workman and to pay, in addition, for the upkeep of the latter's automobile. Green is to provide gasoline and oil for the machine throughout the season.

It has been the custom for the farmers of this vicinity to provide a horse and buggy for an employee when needed or to permit the employee to keep a horse and buggy on the farm, the farmer supplying the feed for the horse. This is the first instance, however, that has come to light of a farmer's paying for the upkeep of an employee's automobile.

OLD MAN GREAT HUNTER.

Whisner, at Eighty, Has Killed 330 Deer and 500 Coons.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va.—Peter V. B. Whisner, who is eighty years old, is the champion hunter of West Virginia.

During a period covering fifty years he has killed 330 deer, about 500 coons and 500 turkeys, besides many foxes, squirrels and other game. Of the 330 deer fifty were bucks having horns with from three to five prongs. Two of the deer were white, rare specimens, and one black. The greatest number he killed in one season was thirty-five.

Practically all his hunting was done with a muzzle loading rifle. He said if he had had a rifle like those in use now he could have killed several hundred more deer. He says he has seen fourteen deer in one drove, one of which had white legs, the white extending up to its body.

AMERICANS MUST LEAVE MEXICO WITHIN 36 HOURS, CARRANZA'S SECRET ORDER

El Paso—First Chief Carranza will demand the withdrawal of all American troops from Mexico within the next 36 hours, according to information said to have been received by General Gabriel Gavira at Juarez.

General Pablo Gonzalez has been ordered to assume command of all troops in northern part of Mexico. He is rated as the most loyal of the Carranza generals.

General Carranza is preparing to issue an edict that all Americans south of the border, both military and civil, will be treated as enemies if the punitive expedition is not withdrawn, according to information reaching here tonight.

General Gavira Carranza commander at Juarez, received this information from Queretaro, Carranza's capital. Similar notices are said to have been sent to all Carranza garrison commanders in northern Mexico.

For three days secret agents of the State Departmen had reported that arms and ammunition were being dealt out to natives living in the districts through which the American lines of communication extend. There is a growing fear for the safety of the American troops.

CARRANZA CONSUL DEMANDS WITHDRAWAL

Further verification that Carranza is contemplating some move that ultimately will precipitate a crisis is found in the attitude of the Mexican officials.

Consul Grecia, in conversation with three newspaper men, made the flat statement that the American troops should be withdrawn immediately. He assumed the attitude of no-compromise, but declared he had not spoken with the authority of the government. He said he was merely voicing his private opinion.

FIRST SUPPLY TRAIN OFF TO JOIN ARMY

El Paso—Twelve carloads of forage and provisions were shipped over the Northwestern Railroad from Juarez today consigned to Mormon merchants at Casas Grandes and Colonia Dublan for sale to the army.

This is the first shipment since Carranza gave his consent to use of the railroads by individuals for shipment of provisions designed for army consumption. The consignment provides the only optimistic news in the Mexican situation today.

AIRSHIP BREAKS FROM MOORINGS

Pensacola, Fla.—The new dirigible airship recently bought to the aviation station here foro experimental use in connection with aerial and water maneuvers by the navy, broke away from its moorings in a high wind early today, and rising rapidly soon wasl ost to view. Telephone notices were sent to Mobile and other points to thew estward, warning the residents to be on the lookout for the big craft. No one was aboard, but the dirigible was fully inflated, and naval officers said there was nothing to prevent its remaining aloft for many hours.

BLOODHOUND TRAILS BANK ROBBERS

FRENCH IN UNDERGROUND BATTLE WIN BACK GROUND LOST TO PRINCE'S TROOPS

Paris—Burrowing, digging, battering their way, all the savagery of war was exemplified yesterday when a French battalion fought an underground battle and won back a quarter of a mile of ground on a half mile front southwest oof Fort Douaumont, ground over and under which the tide of conflict hae been ebbing and flowing for nearly a week.

Following their success on the Douaumont-Vaux line last Saturday the Germans used all their ingenuityto construct what they regarded as an impregnable system of subterranean works at the northern end of the Meuse plateau. From these underground passages they hoped to reach the strong French positions in the southern part of the Caillette woods and even reach the inner fortress ring.

As a reply to the German plans the French yesterday organized a series of counter attacks, which began early in the morning and lasted most of the day—attacks pressed home out of sight of man and away from the support of artillery. Hand grenades, machine guns, rifles and bayonets decided the day.

West of the Meuse the French occupied a large portion of the Bois Carre, north of Avocourt, while the Germans were capturing the hamlet of Haucourt.

ALLIED TRANSPORT SUNK OFF GREECE

London—An Athens despatch to the Daily Mail says a telegram has been received from Preveza to the effect that a large transport belonging to the Entente Allies has been sunk off the west coast of Greece. The telegram added that itw as believed many were lost.

30 PERISH ABOARD BRITISH SHIP; 9 SAVED

London—The British steamship Zent, of the Elder line, was sunk with out warning off Fastnet yesterday, with the probable loss of fifty lives.

The captain and nine of the crew have been landed at Queenstown, but the remainder of the crew are missing. Two are known to have been killed.

The Zent was west of Fastnet when she encountered a submarine. Before the crew had an opportunity to escape a torpedo struck the vessel and she went to the bottom almost immediately. Captain Martin and nine of his men got away, but they are unable to say what became of the remainder of the ship's company aside from two who were killed by the explosion of the torpedo.

Feliahie is in Mesopotamia below Kut-el-Amara, where a British force under General Townsend is beleaguered. It has bee athe scene of several engagements between Turkish troops and the invading British forces.

This is the second victory of the British to be reported officially in the last two days. Announcement was made yesterday of the capture of Umn-el-Henna, on the Tigris, about twenty miles below Kut-el-Amara.

BRITAIN ASKS HOLLAND TO PUNISH NEWSPAPER

The Hague, via London—The British government has asked the Dutch government to call the newspaper Avondpost to account for spreading a false report of a British ultimatum to Holland, thus sowing distrust between two friendly nations.

The newspaper Handelsblad claims to know that the Avondpost report was inspired by the German Consulate at Amsterdam. The German Consul excuses himself, saying that he "had heard it from The Hague."

LOCAL ELKS HEARD CALDER

Candidate for Senator Talked on Preparedness—Officers Were Installed—Stevens Re-elected.

The first annual roll call of the local lodge, B. P. O. E., was held last night. William M. Calder of Brooklyn was present and the following officers were elected: John W. Stevenson, exalted ruler; John Painter, leading knight; Frank Rumsey, loyal knight. The officers appointed by exalted ruler Stevenson were: Ross Eaton, esquire; L. A. Richardson, treasurer; Edward Rugg, secretary; E. P. Cole, chaplin; Charles O'Grady, inner guard.

Each of the newly installed chair officers was presented a pocket flash light in a gold case on which is engraved the Elk's emblem. They were the gift of J. J. Jordan.

Mr. Calder, who is a candidate for senator talked on "Preparedness." He said in part:

"Mr. Chairman, and Gentleman:—

"Permit me to express my very great appreciation of your kindness in inviting me to attend this function. Your organization typifies as much as any other the finest spirit of fraternalism. Among its members are the very best citizens of the state. I have been a member of the Brooklyn Lodge No. 22 for twelve years, and have enjoyed very much the good fellowship in that organization. It has been my privilege to visit a great many of the smaller cities of the state during the past year, and I find that the Elks Club, in almost every case, is the center of business and social life in the community. To be a member of this order is an evidence that a man has attained some standing in the community, for it is the universal rule that none but the best are admitted.

"I am here this evening at the invitation of your Member of Congress Honorable Luther W. Mott, who was my colleague in the House of Representatives for a number of years. In them atter of the National Defense, which is to be my topic this evening, he has striven with the other members of Congress from this state in endeavoring to place the country in

SMILES, NOT TEARS, WANTED AT MOVIES

Who wrote Shakespeare's plays? Is there, or is there not to be, a Great American Novel? Is the new poetry new, and is it poetry? Answers to these questions and am ultitude like them are as evasive as the identity of the assailant of Billy Patterson, but the quest is never abandoned. Equally enthralling with the interest of the unfeathered biped which loves better than anything else a debate and best of all debates that which leaves the question as open as it was before the floodgates of argument parted, is the question of the "happy ending."

A "forthcoming feature of the fillums" has posed the question anew. Should the picture story end happily or tragically? Two dozen theatre managers and movie reviewers sat in solemn conclave on the weighty question. They had the advantage over literary critics of swift ocular demonstration of the opposite possibilities. Two sets of pictures were shown, one with joy in the closing scenes, the other with stark tragedy. The vote was a tie, one dozen for sentiment, the other for logic.

But the vote was not strictly on the merits of the question, nor was it dictated by the unprejudiced opinion of the individual critics. Base commercial considerations ruled. By honest confession, the voters agreed that the sad ending was the more artistic, the happy one false to the logic of the plot. But these arbiters, torn between art and business, left decision to the toss of a coin, and the force of gravity decided that the patrons of the pictures would be better pleased to lose the art and the logic and leave the theater with smiles, not tears, on their faces.—N. Y. Sun.

ABOLISH FRAWLEY LAW AND PRIZE FIGHTS, TOO

Here are some facts worth remembering:

The Frawley bill pretended to be a bill to legalize decent boxing and abolish prize fighting.

As a matter of fact the present State Athletic Commission, which is a disgrace, Has Encouraged Prize Fights under the false pretense that they are boxing matches.

A very short time ago State Athletic Commissioner Wrenck actually attempted to hove the State Armories used as halls for staging Prize Fights, under the false pretense that they would be boxing matches.

The Frawley law was conceived in deceit, enacted by deceit and has been deceitfully used to foster the activities of a ring of bruisers, promoters, surething gamblers and their parasites and beneficaries, official and unofficial.

The Frawley law is a crook's law, made for crooks, administered in the interests of crooks, and it is a shame and a disgrace to New York.

It should be repealed without delay.

And you, citizens, should let the Legislature know that you are in earnest about having it repealed, and that you will mark down for remembrance every man in either House who votes against repeal.

Write letters and send telegrams to your State Senators and Assemblymen. Let them know how you feel about this brutal sport and this Frawley law.—N. Y. American.

WHEREIN MR. LA FOLLETTE HAS FAILED

The defeat of Senator Robert M. La Folette in the Wisconsin primaries, where he was a candidate for the republican Presidential nomination, is a political event of high importance because it means the downfall of the man who blazed the way for both Mr. Bryan and Mr. Roosevelt in the reforms which the one advocated and the other put into effect.

To Mr. La Folette must be given the credit, such as it is, of having inspired and led the agitation against railroads and other corporations which shook the country during the last decade of the nineteenth century and the first of the twentieth century. Defeated by the railroad and other corporate influence for the nomination for Governor of Wisconsin in the nineties, Mr. LaFollette devoted his life to carrying out the ideas which had brought about his temporary eclipse. He became Governor despite the "organization" in 1900 and thereafter for sixteen years became the "organization" himself. Like an avenging apparition he flashed across the railroad sky of Wisconsin and, for that matter, across that of the United States. His was the influence which brought about the exposure of railroad management which made some of the greatest corporations shake in their shoes and made inevitable the passage of the railroad rate regulation bill.

But, like all reformers, he was intolerant. He overstepped the bounds of fairness. The Shipping bill, which would have paralyzed the building and operation of American ships except under abnormal war conditions, is an example. His acceptance of hundreds of thousands of dollars from Senator Stephenson as campaign contributions and his repudiation of the donor because he could not control him is another.

A great man in many ways, he suffers the penalty of those who know not moderation.—N. Y. Herald.

THE EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT

The spread of the eight-hour day in the United States since the war began is amazing. A canvas made by the Survey leads to the conclusion that in the last twenty months more has been done to inaugurate the eight-hour standard than was done in the previous twenty-five years.

There is no complete record of the factories that have shortened their working time, but the number is known to be very great. The federal bureau of labor has reported 125 firms that adopted the eight-hour day only recently. The movement is going on steadily and for the most part unobtrusively. Never was there a great gain made by labor with so little difficulty or hard feeling. There have been few strikes. In most cases, the mere presentation of a demand or request has sufficed to win the concession. And in a surprisingly large number of cases the employers have shortened their working-time without solicitation of any sort.

It is too early to learn definitely what effect the change has had on industry. But in general, it seems to be just about what previous experience has led intelligent employers to expect. That is to say, the reduction of working time without reduction of pay doesn't seem to have made a corresponding reduction in the output of plants.

So far as the Survey has been able to learn, a majority of the employers are satisfied with the change. Of sixty firms reporting on the effects, only a few seem to fear any permanent decrease of efficiency. Some admit a temporary lessening of output, but expect soon to reach the old level. The rest nearly all expect to do better than before. On purely economic grounds, they say, the eight-hour day is a benefit. It brings them a better quality of labor; it makes the men more amenable to efficiency methods; it promotes their health and self respect, and therefore makes them more productive.

HOW WE GROW

We grow in these United States of ours at the rate of 4433 folks a day. Think of it, ye descendants of the Mayflower Pilgrims—enough new Americans every day to have crowded the passenger lists of an armada of Mayflowers! And think of it also, ye breeders of dairy cattle and ye growers of foodstuffs—every week brings more than 30,000 new mouths to feed.

We are appalled at the slaughter of regiments and divisions on the European battlefields. We hear of statemen bewailing the possibilities of race suicide. But how little heed do we pay to the tremendous natural increment of the races of mankind. 'Tis worth sober reflection, this constant growth of ours, worth the pondering of every producer of food or other products. Our vast markets are growing vaster by the day—by the hour, for that matter. And our marketing problems are ever growing more complex and demanding closer study.

Stop, Look and Listen signs do very well for railroad crossings, but they have little other value for progressive mankind. We are growing too fast. A few years hence our growth will be at the rate of 10,000 a day. It will be as if little showers of hamlets and villages rained down constantly from the sky. These newcomers must all be fed and clothed. The farmer is the producer of the raw materials. He must follow closely our growth, speculate on it, prepare for it by progressive measures, keep abreast of all the live things that are doing. If he does not he will be left at the post.—Country Gentleman.

Insurance Gambling.

The Britisher's favorite gambling is insurance gambling. He will take out a policy against anything, from the death of the king to the loss of a horse race by a thoroughbred. Marine insurance gambling by those who have no direct interest in the safety of a ship or its cargo grew into such abuses that parliament was compelled to pass a drastic act to prevent such gambling on marine accidents and losses by those not otherwise concerned.—London Globe.

WRITING A PLATFORM DAILY

It may be that the almost unanimous opposition of Republicans in the United States Senate to the confirmation of Mr. Brandeis as a justice of the Supreme Court rests to some extent upon prejudices of birth and faith, but a stronger reason is to be found in the needs of the party itself.

The objections to Mr. Brandeis's elevation to the bench have been such as to appeal strongly to Republicans of every shade of opinion. So far as we know, not a word has been said publicly against his race or his religion. What has filled Republicans everywhere with dismay is the charge boldly presented by representatives of invested, speculative and predatory wealth that in his political and legal views he is too advanced to be safe and dependable as a judge.

It is this sort of thinng that is doing more than all else to reunite the Republican Party. The theory that the rich and well-favored have a prescriptive right to enact laws and interpret laws in their own interest has become a fundamental of latter-day Republicanism. When that cry is raised, past differences are forgotten and factions once hostile embrace as brothers.

Privilege and plunder are wonderful harmonizers. With subsidy in view, they are working at Washington to defeat the plan by ship purchase and construction to provide a nucleus for a sorely needed merchant marine. To safeguard monopolies of long standing, they are fighting the establishment of national armor-plate and nitrate plants. In behalf of exploiters possessing lands, mines and concessions in Mexico, they are shrieking for war and conquest.

With this spirit everywhere visible and protective-tariff associations and home-market clubs, making ready for their quadrennial fat-frying, why should not Messrs. Roosevelt, Root and Lodge put aside the bitter memories of 1912 and break bread together? And how can the financial districts of Boston and New York exhibit their friendliness more charmingly than by mobilizing their corporation attorneys at the capital to cry down a lawyer whose lack of respec for vested wrongs is notorious?

Mr. Brandeis is to owe his confirmation to a partisan vote not because he does not deserve more generous treatment but because by such attacks as that made upon him Republican unity is to be promoted and plutocratic check-books placed under contribution. In this fashion the Republican get-together platform is being written every day, and the more pronounced it becomes in its resistance to popular rights and in its hostility to men efficient in public service the better is thep rospect of the reunion which the Houses all seek.

There never would have been any split in the party if both wings in the heat of a personal quarrel, had not momentarily forgotten that for a quarter of a century there has been no republican cohesion except upon schemes involving legalized greed and graft.—N. Y. World.

LATIN AND GREEK DOOMED

If Abraham Flexner demolishes the conventional curriculum in the report prepared for the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation it is for reasons plainly set forth in his own conception of what the modern school should be. It is unreasonable, to his thinking, to accept any method of education merely because it is not demonstrably useless or harmful; no system, he holds, should include anything "for which an affirmative case cannot be made out," and his particular objection to current schooling is that it is mainly formal and traditional and bears little or no relation to the world we live in.

Reading, writing and figuring are manifestly necessary and will have their place in the modern school, but Latin and Greek, formal grammar and the sort of information imparted in most schools as history must go. "The schools," Mr. Flexner argues, "should teach Latin and algebra, if at all, just as the intelligent physician prescribes quinine, because it serves a purpose that he knows and can state."

It is true that the most plausible arguments have been put forth for both, but they do not meet Mr. Flexner's test, and it is idle, he insists, to maintain that a knowledge of the classics and mathematics is useful, for the plain reason that pupils do not obtain it.—N. Y. Tribune.

NO OVER SEAS FLIGHT NOW

The transatantic flight of Rodman Wanamaker's new America may be postponed until after the war. The fact became known yesterday, when Lord Northcliffe announced that the London Daily Mail's prize of $50,000 for the first aerial passage between America and Great Britain cannot be awarded until after the cessation of hostilities.

The Aero Club of America, as soon as Mr. Wanamaker's project was announced, cabled to Lord Northcliffe to ask if this prize, offered March 31, 1915, were still open. Lord Northcliffe's laconic reply was: 'Yea—after the war."

William Gash, Mr. Wanamaker's personal representative here, made it plain that the possibility of postponing the venture is not due to inability to win the Daily Mail's prize. The honor of organinzing the first flight will be enough for the Philadelphia man. But there are other handicaps which may make the postponement advisable. The dangers of entering Europe at the present time are considerable, and it is known that Mr. Wanamaker has a strong desire to obtain Commander Porte as pilot. As the young Irish aviator is now piloting the first America as a British warplane, it is doubtful if his release can be obtained for the trip during the war.

The work of constructing the huge triplane will go on, nevertheless, and not until it is completed and tested will the question of the time for the flight be considered. At the present the machine is almost entirely on paper. The boat body is to be built at the Burgess plant at Marblehead, Mass., and the engine and other parts at the Curtiss factory at Buffalo. Not until the new America is finished will the details of construction be known. The designers intend to keep such matters secret, for personal reasons, until then.

The six motors for the big triplane are to be an elaboration of the new Curtiss V-X. It was this motor that enabled Victor Carlstrom to make his flight from Toronto to New York last fall, a distance of 600 miles, in six hours and forty minutes. The original V-X, however, is an eight cylinder motor rated at 160 horse-power Curtiss, by adding four more cylinders, has evolved a motor of 300 horse-power.

WOMEN SERVE IN FRENCH GARRISONS

Paris—Women are now being employed in garrisons in the place of soldiers of the auxiliary service.

The experiment, just begun at the headquarters of the Thirty-sixth Infantry at Caen, has proved so successful that the Minister of War has suggested that the commanders of other garrisons use the service of women wherever it is possible.

Thus the drafts of the 1888 military class will be limited, which will permit professional men to continue to attend to their regular duties and will give employment to the widows, mothers and sisters of soldiers killed.

All the women used in the garrisons are to be classified under the direction of various chiefs of the service.

"THE ONLY GIRL"

Young girls, pretty girls, girls who can sing and dance, are to play a big part in the production of the latest musical farcical comedy "The Only Girl" which comes to the Quirk one night only, Tuesday, April 11th

The chorus has been chosen from more than three hundred applicants, a fact which disproves the oft repeated statement that there is a dearth of chorus girls. In "The Only Girl" the chorus will play an active part rather than a pictoral background against which is usually painted the action of a musical piece. An endeavor was made to obtain young women with pretty faces, graceful figures, good voices and nimble limbs, and at the same time to select those who would best fit the types intended by the authors of the piece. The result is said to be satisfactory in the extreme and when the production comes here it will be found to contain brand new faces and a collection of youthful femininity which has not lost its playful enthusiasm. "The Only Girl" is the collaborated effort of Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert and is presented by Joe Weber under whose direction it ran for nearly one year at the Lyric Theatre, New York.

RULES FOR NAVY'S CIVILIAN CRUISE

Battleships Will Be Used In Summer Training.

Washington.—The navy's civilian cruise, which is expected to do for the navy what the Plattsburg training camp did for the army, will begin Aug. 15 and last until Sept. 12, according to an announcement made by Secretary Daniels' department.

Battleships of the Atlantic reserve fleet will be used for the cruise, it is stated, and the starting points will be Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk and possibly Charleston. Civilians enlisting for the cruise will have to pay their traveling expenses to the seaboard and return and also a deposit of $30 to cover the expenses of the cruise.

The detailed regulations issued by the department, which will govern the cruise, have been tentatively adopted and in part follows:

"Recruits for the cruise to be citizens of the United States between the ages of nineteen and forty-five, and must be able to pass a prescribed physical examination. They must be able to demonstrate to the recruiting officer that they possess some nautical knowledge or have had some technical training which would fit them for service in the navy.

"The applicants who qualify will be required to sign an application blank for enrollment. In this application the recruit obligates himself to hold himself during the cruise subject to the navy regulations, obey all authorized orders and perform such work on board ship as regularly assigned.

"The objects of the training cruise are to help equip properly equipped men to act as reserves in time of war or national emergency by giving them a course of training on board warships under naval officers and naval conditions.

"The total expenses of the cruise, outside of the cost of transportation to the point of embarking and for returning home, will be about $30. Upon reporting on board the ship to which assigned each recruit will deposit $30, which will cover the cost of his subsistence and the necessary clothing outfit. Should the actual cost of subsistence and clothing be less than this amount the difference will be refunded.

"Upon reporting on board the civilian clothing of recruits will be turned over for storage, and they will be issued a sufficient outfit of uniform clothing. When all recruits are on board the ships will leave their respective naval districts and cruise for a period of four weeks, during which time the recruits will be given practical instruction in the duties required on board ship.

"A portion of each day will be given to the study of special subjects, which will be largely optional, so that those who have an aptitude for or knowledge of such subjects as navigation, signaling, radio work, steam or electrical engineering, etc., may have an opportunity to specialize. Boat drill will be given and landings made, and recruits will be taught the manual of arms and military formations.

"During the final week of the cruise the ships will return to the naval districts whence they came, and, in addition to the courses of instruction, recruits will be given a general idea of their own naval district and its defensive problems. During the final week also residents of the district who own yachts or motorboats which would be useful as auxiliaries in time of war will be given an opportunity to operate in conjunction with the ships.

"Enrollments will be closed on June 1, and no application will be received after that date. Application blanks will be furnished to all who desire them by the navy recruiting officers at the various recruiting stations throughout the country."

NEW PLAN FOR RELIEF.

"Buy a Yard of Cloth" Day Is Planned For Belgian Funds.

"Buy a yard of cloth days" have been designated by more than fifty governors and mayors throughout the country to aid state committees of the commission for relief in Belgium in their efforts to obtain clothing for the destitute in Belgium and northern France. The purpose of the proclamations is to concentrate the minds of merchants and the public upon sales of cloth for the Belgians.

The commission announced that it already had purchased and shipped cloth from which its textile experts estimate the Belgians will be able to fashion 777,850 garments.

STRICT RULES OF ARMY CENSORS

Funston Wants Only a Few Newspaper Men With Army.

TO EXAMINE ALL PICTURES.

No Movie Men Allowed With Invading Forces and None but Real Reporters Permitted to Accompany Expedition. Violators of Rules Liable to Arrest. Personal Communications Read.

General Funston has decreed that only a few war correspondents shall accompany the American forces into Mexico.

Secretary of War Baker has upheld the decision of General Funston, but strong pressure is being brought to bear on him to throw open the doors.

The degree of censorship imposed by General Funston so far has been mild compared to that he can exercise under the army regulations. It is prescribed in the regulations that censorship within the theater of operations is controlled by the commander of the field forces. An officer is assigned as censor and provided with necessary assistants.

Stops Public and Private News.

Censorship includes censorship over private communications and over press publications and communications.

All private communications, whether they be of officers, soldiers, foreign attaches, newspaper correspondents or any other individuals, dispatched from the theater of operations are liable to censorship. A censor is authorized to suppress any statement that might be of value to the enemy or prejudicial to the welfare of the forces in the field.

All newspapers or journals in the theater of operations are subject to censorship, and they can be suppressed by the censor whenever he deems it expedient.

Each correspondent is required to file an application giving a brief history of his career and to take an oath of loyalty of the usual military form. Their employers are required to give bond for them. Men who have evidently secured credentials with a view to adventure rather than serious work as correspondents will not be received, and the secretary of war has power to say to whom passes shall be given.

The regulations provide that an official photographer shall accompany each field army or other important independent field force. His films and plates will be sent to Washington promptly, where prints will be issued at a nominal cost to the press. No professional photographers and moving picture men will be received.

Regular correspondents may carry small hand film cameras, but the films must be sent to the censor with the field forces or to the chief censor at Washington, where they will be developed and such of them as pass censorship will be sent to any given address.

The chief censor in Washington shall be a commissioned officer. In this instance he is Captain Cootes, attached to the general staff. There is also a censor attached to General Funston's headquarters, and General Pershing will also have a censor in the field. All correspondents' news or private dispatches, mail letters for publication, private letters, drawings and photographs must be submitted to the censor and receive his stamp before being sent.

The correspondent will not be allowed to send information concerning the occupation or relinquishment of a position, the news of any victory or defeat, the names of organizations or commanders, the disposition of troops, the state of supply or transport, the number of sick, the extent of losses or any other matters of information unless the dispatch or report containing such information is passed on and authorized by the censor. After censorship the correspondent will be shown what if anything has been elided by the censor. Any relaxation of these regulations rests with the commander of the field forces, in this case General Funston.

Liable to Arrest.

The official army telegraph lines are open to correspondents for the sending of dispatches when not occupied with official dispatches, but the dispatches will be sent in the order filed, and the censor shall say how many words may be sent. Within the censor's discretion correspondents may send messengers to carry censored dispatches to better wire facilities than those at the immediate front.

Correspondents are required to dress in the same olive drab uniform worn by the army, but each wears a white brassard on his arm marked with a C to designate his calling. No correspondent can leave the army to which he is attached, either to go home or any other place, without the consent of the war department.

Correspondents can be suspended for distortion of dispatches in the office of publication and also for the use of language or expressions conveying hidden meaning which would tend to deceive or mislead the censor. For extreme offenses they may be sent to the rear under arrest.

German engine drivers and railroad men have contributed a million and a half marks ($375,000) to the war fund.

When Babies Were Taxed.

There was once a tax on babies in England, but it was only in force for a short time. The tax was put on in 1695 and abolished in 1706. The higher up in society a man was the more he had to pay for the privilege of being a happy father; a duke, for instance, had to pay £30, a marquis £25, and so on. Nowadays the reverse principle is in force, and the state allows so much rebate on income tax to those who have children and 30 shillings to mothers who are insured.

ENGLAND PLANS TO UNLOAD GOLF BALLS ON AMERICA

Patent Expiring In April May Let Bars Down to Importers.

Vice Consul Hamilton C. Claborne, who represents the United States at Swansea, Wales, has warned the state department that British manufacturers are laying in a supply of ammunition in the form of golf balls with which they intend to bombard the United States after April 11, 1916. On that date the Haskell patent for the manufacture of golf balls in the United States expires.

In making his prediction of the golf ball bombardment which will then be undertaken unless congress prohibits the dumping of golf balls as well as dyestuffs, Vice Consul Claborne says the British manufacturers hope by invading the American market to make up the losses incurred through the falling off of golf in the British isles on account of the war. He quotes from the London Daily Mail as follows:

"British golf ball manufacturers, hard hit by the war, are to make a determined effort to capture the American market. The attempt is made possible by the expiration on April 11 of the Haskell patent, under which golf balls are manufactured in the United States. The Haskell patent, which killed the gutty ball, was not recognized by the English law courts, but was declared valid in America, thus keeping the ever improving British balls out of that country.

"After April 11 the market will be open, subject to the payment of a duty of 10 per cent—about 6 cents a ball. Cheaper labor here will compensate for that, and ten leading British firms are sending representatives to the United States or appointing agents to prepare the way for the invasion."

Why Musical Comedies Fail.

The decline of musical comedy is due to new styles in women's dress, which make it unnecessary to attend a theater to see a show, says a Kansas City manager.

OLD INDIAN LEAVES HOSPITAL

Chief, Over 100, Was More Comfortable on Floor Than In Cot.

Cass Lake, Minn.—Captain John Smith, the aged Chippewa Indian chief; a well known character in this portion of Minnesota, who was struck and badly injured by a Great Northern locomotive in the yards here recently, has left the hospital and gone to the home of a son.

The venerable Indian, reputed to be 117 years old, making him by far the oldest man in Minnesota, if not in the United States, grew better from the very day he was carried in an unconscious condition to the hospital.

As soon as he collected his senses he declined to remain on a hospital cot and made the nurse fix up a bed for him on a blanket on the floor, where he found contentment. He also called for his pipe and tobacco and, because of his age, was humored. He smoked constantly and rapidly grew better, as it developed that while he had been bruised and shocked, he had not been seriously injured.

Filth of Erzerum.

Erzerum, the Armenian city, is, from the European point of view, one of the most undesirable places of residence upon earth. It stands more than 6,000 feet above the sea, and in winter the temperature falls to 20 degrees below zero, while in the passes by which it is approached rages the tipi, a terrible blizzard. But Erzerum is at its worst in summer owing to the appalling lack of sanitation. The people simply pile their refuse of all kinds on the pavement before their houses, which pavement has long become invisible, and mortality is so heavy that of twelve children, a common family, it is lucky if six survive.—London Chronicle.

WHO OWNED THE PIECE OF LAND?

That Question the Main Subject of Lawyers Arguing Battle Island's Claim for Damages.

Syracuse—That the powerhouse of the Battle Island Paper Co. on the Oswego River near Fulton, was built on land owned by the state was the assertion made yesterday by a witness testifying for the commonwealth in the trial of the demand made by the company.

This allegation brought indignant objections from counsel for the claimants, and incidentally it recalled matters of history and documents of the Legislature of nearly a century ago. Deputy Attorney Generals Sanford W. Smith and Ed. J. Mone, who are upholding the state's end of the case, produced maps and documents to prove their contention, and Ed. M. Ellis, the assistant engineer who had charge of the construction of the barge canal near the Battle Island properties, was asked to prove by these maps that the powerhouse site was owned by the state.

According to testimony, in 1834 triangular strips of land at the ends of the then existing Bottle Island dam, were appropriated as state lands, and blue lines drawn along both sides of the river. The powerhouse, Mr. Ellis said, was, according to these maps, situated within the limits prescribed as state lands. That as the commonwealth had never passed these lands into private hands, the powerhouse property of the company was in realty state lands, was the contention, and that the company had virtually squatted in lands to which it had no title.

Company's Attorneys Object

Attorneys for the company, Chas. E. Spencer, George W. Driscoll and William Nottingham objected to the introduction of such evidence in the ground that the records were antiquated and not proven, and that the state had no authority nor right to ever arbitrarily define limits to what it termed its property. They contended that the title of the Battle Island property was bona fide and that it never had been state property

This question was still being discussed, and fought over when the court adjourned at 1 o'clock and Mr. Ellis was still at work proving and identifying maps of all descriptions that might lay a basis for the claim of the state. The condition at the point where the Battle Island dam was later built was shown from as early as 1827, when the first structure was built. Even at that time the state was endeavoring to settle a dispute and claims over the construction of the Erie and Champlain canals.

Horsepower 400 to 2000

Expert testimony to prove that 400 horsepower was them aximum that could be developed in the Oswego river at the site of the Battle Island Paper Company was offered by attorneys for the state.

Earlier in the case the claimants offered evidence to show there was a possibility of developing 2.00 horsepower at the mill site. They base their demand for heavy damages upon the loss of this site, which was propropriated by the state for barge canal purposes.

Justices Ackerson and Fennell, who are hearing the case in the Court of Claims, allowed the admission of a numberof maps, charts and tabulations, prepared by state engineers.

What They Want to Show

These are leading up to the testimony to be given by state hydraulic engineers today. Edward J. Mone and Sanford W. Smith from the attorney-general's office will attempt to show by the testimony of the hydraulic men that the flow of the river would not allow the development of a third of the power claimed by the company.

The watt meter, which has been a bone of contention between opposing attorneys since the beginning of the case, was admitted as evidence yesterday afternoon, together with records made by the machine.

It took the state's attorneys more than a day to lead up to the introduction of the meter. This machine measured the water power generated and delivered at the plant, and by means of it the defense attempted to show that only 400-horsepower was available at the site.

Prof. W. J. Williams of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute of Troy, who tested the watt meter, gave expert testimony as to its uses.

John P. Newton, a state engineer, who made studies of the Oswego river and the water power site in question, introduced documents as a preface to the testimony of the hydraulic men. Mr. Newton explained how he arrived at his deductions in measuring the maximum water power that might be delivered at the paper company's site.

Richard E. Phillips, an engineering expert, is assisting the state's attorneys in the presentation of the case. Indications yesterday were that the case will continue before Justices Ackerson and Fennell's several days next week.

Automobile circles have reason to be on the tiptoe of expectancy, for tonight's the night when every driver of a car in this community has a perfect right to attend the rally which occurs in the Public Library, beginning at 8 o'clock.

McCully is president, and then insist immediately upon having the local club affiliate with the state organization. A smoker will follow the business session.

WOODMEN DEFEATED THE MACCABEES LAST NIGHT

By administering three straight defeats to the Maccabees last night, the Woodmen pool players increased their lead in the series to 149 points. Walsh, Miller, and Watson were the winning trio of the Woodmen, being opposed to Tyler, Dixon and Spencer. The match last night took place on the Wodmen's table as will the match next Thursday night.

Of the Maccabee team, Tyler made the best showing being opposed to a difficult opponent, Walsh. Tyler was able to get 41 points before Walsh secured the required 50. Miller made the fifty mark with Dixon but 16 points to the good, while Spencer had 17 to his credit when Watson got his 50.

OSWEGO CANAL MAY OPEN FOR BOATS THIS SPRING

That the Oswego barge canal will be open to navigation for small boats this spring and for large boats next spring.

That the Champlain barge canal will be open to navigation for small boats before the close of the season.

That the Erie barge canal will be open entirely for navigation from the Hudson river, at Waterford, to Three River point by the spring of 1917.

That the Erie barge canal will be open for large boats from Three River Point to its western terminus at Tonawanda by the springof 1918.

That there will be large boats operated between the Hudson river and Lake Ontario at Oswego in 1917.

These predictions are made by State Engineer Frank M. Williams in a part of his annual report appearing in the barge canal bulletin covering the work of the department for March. The failure to have navigation for large boats opened this year between the Hudson river and Lake Ontario, he says, is due to the fact that funds were not available to permit two small contracts to be awarded last year. These funds are made available now by the bond issue approved by referendum last fall.

TO REDUCE OUTPUT OF BEER IN BRITAIN

London—A reduction in the output of beer by 28 per cent, as compared with 1913 and 1914 and a curtailment of importation of brewing material by 33 1-3 per cent. will be effected by an arrangement with the brewers, according to an announcement made to the House of Commons by Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade.

Last year the output was reduced by 13 per cent. A further reduction does not mean that the public will spend less for their beer, as the brewers will be allowed to make as much as previously but the beer will be more diluted.

VOCATIONAL ARITHMETIC COMPILED BY OSWEGO MAN

Charles H. Jones of Oswego has compiled a new vocational arithmetic, and outline of which is just off the press. The book is attracting the attention of publishers of school books.

The aim of the arithmetic is to stimulate quick and clear thinking on the part of the student and to give experience in dealing with arithmetical problems with which he will be in contact every day. It starts with addition and ends with geometrical problems.

"I SHOULD SAY NOT!"

The two girls near me in the restroom chattered continually, or rather one of them chattered. and the other one agreed with her on everything. The chatterer was the kind that can run on forever with an appreciative listener. She discussed every subject imaginable, from the latest "movie" to the taking of Verdun, and at the end of everything she discussed, the other girl said: "I should sa-ay!" or "I should say not!" I don't know how many times a girl can give vent to those two choice expressions in an hour's time. I suppose it would depend upon the talker's sentences, but I'd be willing to bet on this girl being able to beat all previous records. I found myself wondering if she had ever had an opinion of her own, and then, thinking of opinions, my mind recalled the experience of a wicked, dashing young cousin, who married a girl with a lovely disposition. She was very sweet amid mild, and agreed with him on everything so the relatives all heaved a sigh of relief, thinking she would be the salvation of Joe. But in a few months he applied for a divorce. When one of the uncles tried total k him out of it, he just tossed his handsome red head and said: "It's no use talking to me. I can't stand it any longer. I get so darned tired of hearing my opinions echoed."

Maybe it was tiresome. After my experience the other day, I felt a lot more lenient toward Joe, and my experience could not have been half so bad as his, for it wasn't my opinions that were being echoed, and I was free to leave any minute—if I was willing to give up a good rocker during ther estroom's most popular hour.

As it was, I held the rocker— but I did find myself wishing devotedly that she would at least vary her mode of agreeing. If I had been in her place I'd have changed it occasionally to "Ain't that the truth!" or "Now, you've said it!" or even by the use of that one small word, which by various inflections, can be made to express so many things, "Huh!" It is lovely to be known as an agreeable person, but there's a limit to even good things. For a change one might try assuming an intelligent or sympathetic look— and keeping the mouth closed. Anyway, I wouldn't be an echo for anybody's opinions— I should say not! — Indianapolis News.

BOWSER'S SIDE OF IT

He Avers That Mrs. Bowser Has Also Made Mistakes.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1916, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Readers of the Bowser sketches cannot have helped but notice that Mrs. Bowser always twists everything around so as to appear one of the smartest women in the land, while I am held up to scorn and contempt as a faddist and an incompetent. I have stood this as long as I shall stand it. Mrs. Bowser is a very good woman, but I shall not longer allow her to boost herself up at my expense. If I have made mistakes she is also guilty of the same thing and should share the blame with me. She has related in these sketches thousands of my blunders, but I shall content myself at present with relating only a few of hers.

One evening last fall as we sat enjoying our home life I observed that I must soon see about the winter's supply of coal for the furnace. She replied that I was an overworked man and that it was her duty as a wife to take all the burdens off my shoulders she could. I needn't bother about the coal, for one thing. She would not have me strain my voice at the telephone for fear of producing some lasting injury to my vocal cords. I might go right along in peace and contentment and on the morrow she would order the coal. She looked at me so lovingly and her attitude was so confident that I left the business to her.

I shall not state that I expected she would blunder about it, but between you and me I looked for some calamity. On the next morning as soon as I left the house she got into communication with our coal man and asked him over the telephone:

"You have got coal, I presume?"

"We have kept coal for twenty-eight years," was the reply.

"Then I want five tons of it."

"Very well, madam. It shall be up today."

That was just like a woman—just like Mrs. Bowser. There are about a dozen different brands of coal. She did not specify whether we wanted it for the range or the furnace or a steam boiler, and as a consequence five tons of pea coal came up. Pea coal is the smallest size, you know, and will almost sift through a pepper box. The men had deposited half of it in the bins when she discovered her mistake. That pea coal would last about as long in the furnace as so much sawdust, and it cost her $4 in cash to have it reloaded and taken back to the yards, and she paid the money out of her weekly allowance and bribed the cook with a new pair of stockings to say nothing to me.

And again. When she tells me that we are out of butter I go over to the grocer and say to the swindler who runs the concern:

"Look here, Brown; I want five pounds of butter."

"Yes, sir."

"I want butter instead of lard, wagon grease or margarine."

"Yes, sir."

"I don't want to find any coat buttons, peach stones or vest buckles in it. I want good creamery butter and less than a hundred years old. If you attempt to swindle me I will make Rome howl around this old shebang. You know me, sir. My name is Bowser. I am a desperate and dangerous man!"

And wouldn't he have sent me the sweetest, nicest, slickest, juiciest five pounds of butter that two horn cows ever produced on this grassy globe? Sure he would.

And what did Mrs. Bowser do? She waited until she saw a farmer driving past on our street. Farmers occasionally come our way to dispose of their products. She rushed to the door and called to this farmer, and when he had come up the steps she asked in the gentle tones of an angel if it so happened that he had a crock of butter which he would be so kind and courteous as to sell to her for 2 cents over the market price. Yes, sir, that's just what she did instead of calling him a fraud and a robber to show him that he could not be deceived. The farmer replied that he had such a crock and it was such butter as had never been offered for sale in the city before. He brought in the crock. It looked good to Mrs. Bowser. Because it looked good on the surface she made no investigation. Because the farmer looked childlike and innocent she did not doubt his word. She bought that crock and paid cash down for it, and all day long she was smiling and chuckling and thinking of how she would boast to me of her bargain.

Some butter was wanted for dinner, and the crock had been brought out and a nice chunk lifted up just as I came in. I could not help but see it. I must have been stone deaf not to hear the gasps of surprise and chagrin uttered by Mrs. Bowser and the cook. About two inches of nice looking butter had been spread on top of a crock almost full of dirt, and Mrs. Bowser had been made a victim of a bold faced villain. He had never been on our street before and didn't intend to ever drive there again.

Did I use sarcastic words then to Mrs. Bowser? Did I say that she ought to have known better? Did I say that it served her just right? No! No, I did not even look sarcastic at her and had not a single word to say. We had no butter for dinner, but not a kick from me, and Mrs. Bowser has never mentioned this incident in print, but on the contrary every time I brought home a dozen eggs, and she has found a bad one in the lot, she has told of my utter failure as a business man.

And speaking of eggs reminds me of an occasion when she asked me, in a soft, bland voice, why I didn't buy them at wholesale instead of retail. I replied like any conservative husband would have done, that I would think the startling suggestion over for awhile, but she could not be content. She was in our family grocery when the grocer offered a crate of twelve dozen eggs at wholesale price. She did not ask if he would warrant them fresh eggs, but closed the bargain at once and was very proud of her economy.

Mrs. Bowser wanted to make an egg omelet for dinner, and the first nine eggs out of that crate proved to be bad ones. Out of the twelve dozen eggs she found later on about three dozen good ones—that is, they were not so bad but what they could be forced down the throat. Now, then, how would I have proceeded to buy twelve dozen eggs? I would have entered that grocery and said to the swindler who runs it:

"I want to buy a crate of eggs at wholesale. I want them for 10 cents a dozen less than retail price. I want every egg to be as fresh as the summer dew on a pumpkin vine. If there is a bad egg among them, or a shortage in the count, I will come in here and work such destruction in this old shanty of yours that you will have to go into bankruptcy inside of an hour. Don't think you can swindle me, you old hyena. I am up to the games you practice on innocent customers! Twelve dozen eggs, sir, and every one of them a fresh egg!"

And wouldn't every egg have been fresh, and wouldn't I have saved a dollar or more where Mrs. Bowser lost two or three? Of course I would—of course. And has Mrs. Bowser ever told the public of the swindle in eggs? She has not even hinted it that such a thing occurred, and she never will.

One evening not so long ago she observed that our front steps needed repainting and that she wished I would employ a painter to do the job. I was about to declare that I would do it myself and thereby save $100, when she swished off on some other subject and shut me up. On the next day when a big tramp came along and begged for something to eat she asked him if he had ever done any painting.

"I have been a house painter for over twenty years," was his reply.

"How much will you ask to paint the front steps?"

"Only $3, ma'am, if you will furnish the paint. I wouldn't do it for any one else for less than $7."

We had five or six different kinds of paint down cellar, and Mrs. Bowser brought them up and mixed them altogether. There was no oil to thin them down, and so she poured in a pint of kerosene. The cook said that oil of some kind was highly necessary, and so she emptied a bottle of castor oil in on top of the kerosene, and the tramp went to work.

Were those steps when finished a thing of beauty and a joy forever? Not hardly—not as you could perceive. There were streaks of green and red and purple and lead color and white. There were spots of oil here and there. There were spots of the old paint showing through the fresh coat. They were variegated front steps. They were such as no house ever had before. This incident occurred days and days ago, but the steps have not been in use since, and they may not be for years and years to come.

The tramp had got his money and gone when I reached home, but a crowd still lingered in front of the house. I borrowed a ladder and climbed up to the chamber window to get in and found Mrs. Bowser mentally perturbed. But did I say anything to add to her sufferings? Not one single word. In fact, I patted her on the back and told her this was a good world to live in. She made the most of it when I bought a dozen hens and none of them laid an egg. But did I try to avenge on her when those steps were painted? Not a try!

I am still entering and leaving my house by way of the ladder and the window. But am I saying or doing anything to humiliate Mrs. Bowser? Not a thing. On the contrary, I am saying that she is a nice woman—a very nice woman—and I don't see how I could get along without her. She has her faults, as we all have, but I can excuse and overlook each and every one of them.

HOW TO PROVIDE FOR THE FIREPLACE AND ITS ATTRACTIVENESS.

Suitable andirons are not always easy to find, and frequently one sees a beautiful fireplace spoiled in appearance because it has been supplied with andirons and accessories out of proportion and of an inappropriate style.

Sometimes to a luxurious big living room is given a pair of little old time andirons which would do exactly for a cozy colonial bedroom, while small fireplaces are often thoughtlessly furnished with huge, heavy, modern andirons.

For rooms done in a quaint old time style of furnishing some of the reproductions of the Hessian designs of andirons painted in gay colors are good.

A complete set of fireplace furnishings may include an old brass fender with claw feet, a pair of steeple topped andirons, shovel, tongs and heavy rings to hold them to the jamb of the fireplace. Such a set would fit well in a modern colonial house.

Interior decorators say that a fireplace is not complete without a brass roaster and corn popper. The latter are on the style of the old time bed warmers. Several extremely well appointed fireplaces, strictly suited to the quaint environment of the room, have the copper bed warmer and the copper trimmed bellows hanging on a carved copper hook at the side.

Brass kettles in odd design hanging on a crane, flat toasters of brass and the long adjustable handled marshmallow forks are shown this season.

A HYGIENE NOTE.

How to Clear the Complexion Without Dosing Your System.

A glass of hot lemonade taken night and morning is a good thing to clear the complexion. Squeeze half a lemon into a tumblerful of boiling water, sweeten very slightly and drink as soon as it is cool enough.

Another thing a girl with a muddy complexion should do is to have a quick all over soap and water wash every morning with very hot water and then a sponge down with cold, ending up with a good rub with a rough towel.

As to food, don't eat rich, highly seasoned things. Light homemade pastry doesn't hurt; neither do plain cakes, but don't go in for tinned salmon and lobster, curry or rich, heavy cakes, and don't drink much coffee or cocoa.

Now, as to the way to treat your face itself: If your skin is really very thick and muddy it is an excellent thing to wash it every night at bedtime with very hot water and "green soap." Lather your face well and you will find the soap brings away blackheads and is most cleansing, but it is only suitable for really thick skin. It is apt to irritate a fine or thin skin.

Let the soap remain on a few minutes, then rinse it off in very hot water.

In the morning sponge your face with cold water and then wipe it over with eau de cologne and water or a little camphor and water.

How to Avoid Nervousness In This Rackety Age.

No one can help feeling nervous at times in this age of rush and racket, but every woman should remember that the more she controls this feeling the longer she will retain her beauty. It is quite possible to put on the brake, as it were, and not let the nerves run away with us. If people fret you it is not necessary to be rude to them. Try instead to avoid them.

Don't read books that irritate you. Books are plentiful. Therefore put away the offending volume and choose another. If a noise at night worries you don't let it continue to do so. Get up and see to the matter and put it right.

Don't let yourself get into the habit of being bored. It is not worth while. When you feel it coming on [illegible] at once into some task that wi[illegible] your time and energy. It [illegible] better run away from certain things than let them irritate you.

How to Provide a Suitable Recepta For Soiled Linen.

A wicker hamper is perhaps the ideal laundry container. But it must be kept clean. One enameled white looks so clean that it is hard to remember that it may harbor impurities, even germs. It must be washed in hot water occasionally and dried in the sunshine, and then occasionally it can be further refreshed with a clean coat of enamel.

How to Remove White Spots on Your Pet Mahogany Furniture.

The white spots which hot dishes often leave on tables and other wooden surfaces can be removed by applying a mixture composed of equal parts of alcohol, olive oil and pure cider vinegar. Shake well before using. Rub well with a woolen cloth and polish with another soft woolen cloth.

How to Mend a Lace Curtain Without Large Expense.

A simple way to mend lace curtains after cleaning them is to take a small piece of old lace curtain or net the size of a hole, dip it in a little cold starch and place on the curtain to be mended; then press with a hot iron. It does not show it was mended.

Comfy Clothes For Father and Son.

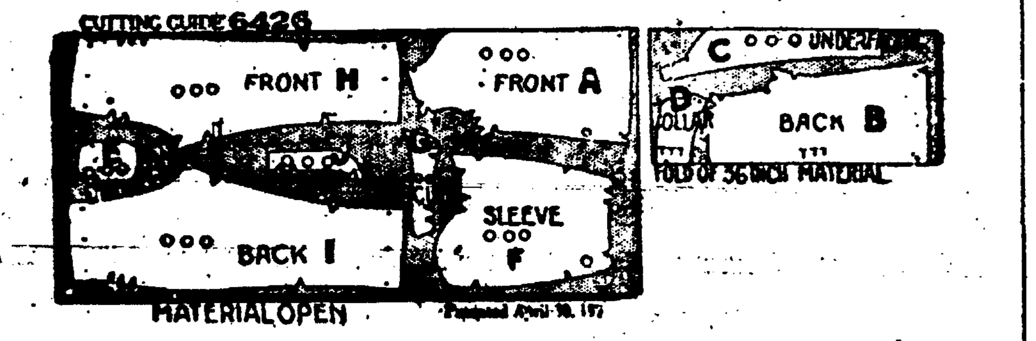
Designed for men and boys, the pajamas shown here consist of a single breasted coat and trousers with extra fulness.

One does not expect much style in pajamas, but a world of comfort can be crowded into them, if properly made. The design illustrated is for men and boys and consists of a single breasted coat and trousers that are provided for extra fulness. In medium size the pajamas require 5⅝ yards 36-inch material.

No amount of making will give comfort to the pajamas if they are not properly cut. Mistakes may be avoided by carefully studying the cutting guide accompanying this article. Note that the material is laid in open width on the cutting table, though it is doubled so that each section of the pattern may be cut in duplicate. The back and front of the trousers, pocket and lap and front of the coat, cuff and sleeve are cut from the open material. All of the pieces are laid on a lengthwise thread.

Now, take the goods and fold it in half. On the lengthwise fold place the back of the coat so that it will contain no seams. The collar is laid to the left of the back. Along the selvage is placed the underfacing.

The collar may be turned down or rolled flat, or the fronts of the coat may be rolled back to form revers. One piece sleeves are finished with shaped cuffs. If the high turn-down collar is desired, use the entire collar pattern. Otherwise, cut off the extension at front edge of collar on small "o" perforations.



Pictorial Review Pajamas No. 6426. Sizes 36, 40, 44 and 48 inches bust and 4, 8, 12 and 16 years. Price, 15 cents

HOW To Make a Safe Gift For Almost Any Man

THERE is one article which it is safe for a woman to embroider for a man, and that is a handkerchief. Women, too, who object to what they call embroidered fol-de-rols are always glad to accept embroidered handkerchiefs simply because they are useful things to receive.

Frequently it is difficult to find the exact initial one desires. There are types of initials that are particularly suitable for certain types of people. For this reason one should use judgment in selecting the letters for handkerchiefs.

Failing to locate a suitable initial among one's collection of needlework designs, the next best thing is to look over the front pages of one's books. On one or more of these one is sure to find an initial of the right size and style. Once found it is quite an easy matter to transfer the letter with carbon paper to the corner of the handkerchief.

Pad the letter carefully and then embroider over it in solid stitches, placing the stitches close together, so that the result will be pleasing. White or colored cotton or silk can be used to work the letter.

Beauty can be added to the initial or initials embroidered on the handkerchief by surrounding the letters with a delicate floral wreath. A plain circle of eyelets is also effective.

FOR SPRING HOUSECLEANING.

How to Polish Furniture So That It Looks Like New.

Polished furniture should require no other treatment than washing with warm water, to which a very little methylated spirit has been added, followed by a vigorous rubbing with very soft cloths. For furniture which has been stained and polished and has become scratched it is best to get a good oil and color man or a furniture dealer to put up a French polish mixture, which can be used very sparingly. Polishing with a thin beeswax and turpentine polish answers satisfactorily if there are no scratches.

For the cheaper kinds of furniture a mixture of methylated spirit with a small quantity of orange shellac can be used. This will remove scratches and brighten the furniture, but must be used sparingly. If the furniture needs brightening only a beeswax polish can be used or a mixture of linseed oil, turpentine and vinegar in equal parts.

FOR SOIL GRUBBERS.

How to Make Your Worn Out Garden Soil More Fertile.

In many cases rotted stable manure and humus will prove all that the gardener need add to make his garden fertile, but in some cases, especially where the ground is being worked annually, it will be well to add a commercial fertilizer. The best results are usually gained by the rotation of crops—that is, by never planting the same piece of ground with the same crop two years in succession.

The government agricultural bureau issues charts and pamphlets showing the proper rotation of crops which will prove invaluable to the gardener. They can be obtained, along with much other valuable information, for the asking.

HOW TO KEEP YOUR PET FURS FROM DIRT RAVAGES.—About this season of the year one's furs that were so soft and glossy back in November begin to take on a matted, dingy look which is distressing. If madam's pet Pomeranian ever took on the rusty, matted appearance of her furs in February he would be dropped into the bathtub without loss of time. But furs may not be treated in this simple, practical fashion when they become soiled. For all that is the matter with furs in spring is that they are soiled. No one ever thinks of using a whisk broom to furs, yet obviously the fur coat has acquired as much dust as the broadcloth or velvet suit, assiduously brushed every time it is taken off. Dirt and dust do not remain on the surface of fur, but work down into the roots of the hairs, which become matted because of it. All furs should be shaken briskly in the open air once a week, and it will do no harm to hang them on the line and give them a brisk beating with a light wand. A near seal coat will keep its smooth texture better if brushed over lightly now and then with a whisk broom dipped in cold water.

How to Open Sardine Cans Without a Slip of the Tool.

Those who have trouble in opening a sardine can will find this is a good way: Start the key as usual, then insert the blade of a can opener in the loop of the key and turn. This acts as a lever, removes all strain and opens the can easily.

STYLE TIPS.

About Capes, Frills, Scarfs, Ribbons and Other Frivolities.

Skirts are to be longer, if we are to believe a certain rumor which comes from Paris—not very long, but not quite so abbreviated as they have been for some time. Some of the evening gowns, on the other hand, are closely draped and clinging, falling in at the feet with narrow pointed trains, and as different as possible from the fluffy skirted creations which we are now wearing.

Then the new lingerie is very fascinating, but not a single scrap of lace is to be used for decorating it by those who wish to be really up to date. Silk, ninon and crepe de chine have taken the place of lawn and cambric and are simply ornamented with very fine hemstitching or silk embroidery and rows of handwork in faggot or chain stitch or buttonholed slots for inserting ribbon. Flesh pink is still the most popular color or an exquisite shade of pale parma violet mauve.

For afternoon frocks there is a distinct tendency to copy old fashioned modes, such as the styles of 1830 and the latter part of the eighteenth century. Silk gowns are made with panniers very much looped up at the sides and back over contrasting underskirts. The sleeves will be close fitting for afternoon frocks, with a little puff at the top, while for evening dresses they are made with a tiny puff all by itself.

Tailor mades are completed with little capes across the shoulders or falling down the center of the back as far as the waist line. Most fascinating of all perhaps are the quaint neck ruffles in velvet or taffetas that make such a pretty frame to the face. These will be designed to suit the particular gown and will have a tiny bunch of flowers or a bow of colored ribbon in one of the old fashioned shades, such as sevres blue or vieille rose, attached to one side.

Long ninon or taffeta scarfs are also designed to match the various frocks, often in black, lined with a contrasting shade and bordered with a narrow ribbon ruching or embroidered with sprays and wreaths of small flowers in silks and ribbon work. Anything, indeed, that gives a suggestion of the days of long ago is a feature of the newest design.

Copper Dishcloth.

Among the cleaning agents there are two recent additions to the list that are well worth while. One is the copper wire dishcloth, which comes in three sizes, for the cleaning of pots and pans and is much more effective than the chain cloths, as it does not chip or crack the enamel. The other is steel wool; this comes in a roll, and a little bit pulled off, which has the feeling of a bunch of horsehair and looks not unlike it, will clean enamel ware perfectly simply by rubbing it over the surface. It may also be used for brasses and glassware. Use with it a non-alkali soap, if any, and always rinse the article and polish with a dry cloth after it is cleaned.

Spring Fever

Just now we all are longing for the coming of the spring.
We want to see the grass get green and hear the robins sing,
And some of us have dreams of golf or trout, but most of all
We want to climb the bleacher seats and see a game of ball!

We want to see the mellow time for gardening begin;
We want to start the hotbed and to get the sweet peas in;
We want to carry out the plans we've had in mind since fall,
But most of all we want to see a good old game of ball!

We're tired of old winter, and the frost and ice and snow.
We're weary of the icicles; we want to see them go.
We want to see the batter bat and hear the umpire call—
In short, we shan't be happy till we see a game of ball!

—Somerville (N. J.) Journal.

The Kitchen Cupboard

BREAKFAST LUXURIES.

SPOON CORN BREAD.—One cupful of cornmeal, one pint of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of sugar, salt to taste, three eggs. Let milk almost come to a boil, then stir in meal and cook until thick. Let cool and add lightly the yolks and then the whites of eggs. Pour into a greased pan and bake in a moderate oven. Serve from a baking dish.

Raised Waffles.—Mix a half cupful of butter with a quart of flour, add slowly a quart of hot milk, and when the mixture is lukewarm half a compressed yeast cake that has been softened in a half cupful of lukewarm water. Beat well, add two well beaten eggs and let the batter rise overnight in a warm place. In the morning beat well, let rise half an hour longer and bake in a well greased waffle iron.

Sour Milk Wheat Muffins.—Put one cupful of sour milk into a rather deep bowl and sift into it two cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of soda in a little warm water and beat vigorously into the sour milk, flour and other ingredients. Have the oven and gem tins hot, and just before turning the batter into the tins fold in a well beaten egg.

Puffed Bread to Serve With Coffee.—Trim the crusts from a loaf of French or Vienna bread and divide the loaf lengthwise, first into halves, then quarters and eighths. It should be pulled apart, preferably using two forks in the process. Place these ragged strips in a baking pan that has been lined with brown paper and dry out with the warming oven for several hours. Then put them in the regular oven, close the door and bake them a golden brown.

Norwegian Bread (For Dyspeptics).—The ingredients required are one pint of barley meal, half a pint of graham flour, half a pint of wheat flour, one teaspoonful of salt, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one pint of cold milk. Sift together all the dry ingredients and add the milk gradually to them, with two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Beat hard for forty minutes.

FANCY HATBANDS IN FAVOR.

Some of the Pretty, Frivolous Things That Appear This Season.

Fancy adjustable hatbands are a feature of the new millinery and appeal to the woman whose longing for variety is hampered by a limited purse. They furnish an excellent means of introducing daring touches of color in an otherwise dark street costume and are adaptable to the stiff crowned, narrow brimmed models as well as to the soft sports hats of felt and beaver for which they were originally designed.

Plain colored ribbons in the new, bright shades as well as in striped and blocked effects, combining two colors in sharp contrast, are the most used for adjustable hatbands. Many of these are so woven as to pass for hand knitted bands and have a convenient elasticity which makes them easily adjustable to any size crown. Others are of a stiff ribbed silk similar to belting and fasten under the flattest of tailored bows.

Double faced ribbons, showing a dark shade on one side and a vivid coloring on the other, are among the most satisfactory for fancy hatbands, as they are capable of almost endless variety in adjustment.

Proportions to Remember.

Four eggs to one quart of milk for custards.

One teaspoonful of vanilla to one quart of milk for custard.

Two ounces of gelatin to one and three-quarter quarts of liquid.

Four heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch to one quart of milk.

One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of sour milk.

The oven for baking bread should be hot enough to brown a teaspoonful of flour in five minutes.

For biscuits it should brown in one minute.

Made Over Frocks

It is not the fashion to make over our frocks nowadays.

We used to buy expensive materials and then have the frocks into which they were made remodeled and sometimes made over a second time. We don't do that nowadays usually. We buy poorer materials than we used to buy, and styles change more quickly than they used to change. Moreover most people have fewer frocks than they used to have. They wear each frock continuously until it is worn out.

However, making over frocks often pays, and some dressmakers have lately been advertising their desire to make over frocks. These are expensive dressmakers, with high priced trades, and the frocks they make over are often imported models. They are real artists in the fashioning of fabrics into charming frocks, and they have the faculty of visualizing a remodeled frock after they have looked at and thought about the old frock for a little while.

This kind of remodeling surely pays. A practically new frock results, up to the last minute in its details. Nowadays a woman of fashion wears her frocks for such a short time that nobody remembers their colors and fabrics, and anyway, in remodeling, fabrics and colors are fashioned in different combinations from their original ones.

There are, for instance, the various jumper styles. The old material can be fashioned either into the jumper or into the blouse under it. Suppose there is an old black net frock. After it has been ripped and pressed and, if necessary, cleaned, the good separated from that which is torn, the net can be made into a blouse, with the best part in the sleeves and front. Then you can buy enough silk to make the jumper and the foundation of the skirt. There can be no flaring overskirt of the net, long or short, pointed or straight at the bottom, according to the amount of material.

There is also possibility for making over in the skirt with a very wide hem of contrasting material. Sleeves, or at least cuffs and collars, can be made of the same material as the hem, and new material may be bought either for this combination or for the rest of the frock.

Design For Tailored Linen Blouse.

Modish blouse in tailored design to be fashioned from white French or Irish linen and trimmed with pearl buttons.

White waists, like white frocks, are to be in great demand for summer use. An attractive model is shown here, being adapted to development in French or Irish linen. One large button accentuates the pointed opening of the front, while smaller buttons ornament the cuff and collar. In medium size the waist requires 2¼ yards 36-inch material. The neck may be finished with a high or turn-down collar.

In order that it may be attached to the shoulder, gather the upper front of the waist between double "TT" perforations, then sew to back. Close under-arm seam. Underface the front edge of the front to any desired depth. Gather back along crossline of small "o" perforations, and ½ inch above; draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape (long enough to pass around the waist) to position over gathers and tie in front.

Next, close the sleeve seam as notched and gather the lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of deep cuff as notched to small "o" perforation and sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve, and bring the seam of the cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even, easing in any fulness. Trim with buttons.

For summer wear it may be desirable to make the sleeves elbow length, finishing them with a flare cuff.

MILK SUPPLY IS NEAR EXHAUSTION

Chicago—With a shortage in prospect unless the differences between the producers and distributors in the Chicago district are settled soon, the milk war today assumed a more serious aspect. Most of the distributors in the city were able yesterday to make full deliveries to private consumers but drivers of the larger companies advised customers to purchase a supply of condensed cream and milk, as it is feared the supply of fresh milk will be exhausted within a day or two if the strike is not settled.

The producers are now paid $1.33 a hundred pounds for their milk, but are demanding $1.55 a hundred.

CLERGY AGAINST PRIZE FIGHTS

New York—The ministers of the city are working earnestly for the success of the great public meetingfi in Carnegie Hall, next Monday evening, to protest to the Legislature against prize fighting in this State.

An enthusiastic meeting of ministers of all denominations was held yesterday afternoon at the West Twenty-third street branch of the Y. M. C. A. And the list of noted speakers was strengthened with some of them ost prominent names in the city.

Mrs. William Grant Brown, chairman of the clubwomen who are cooperating with them inisters in arranging for the Carnegie Hall meeting, reported splendid enthusiasm among thew omen.

The famous Volpe Symphony Orcheatra is arranging a classical programme for the concert, which begine at 7:30 o'clock. The doors of Carnegie Hall are to be thrown open at 7 o'clock. Only the boxes and parquet seats have been reserved. The balconies will be open to first comers.

The Rev. S. Edward Young, chairmanof the Church Anti-Prize Fighting League, which has arranged the meeting with the assistance of the club women, last night issued the following statement:

"At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Church Anti-Prize Fight League, in the Y. M. C. A., Twenty-third street Branch, this aafternoon, plans were completed foor reaching every church and civic righteousness organization in the State with the request to the Legislature for the repeal of the Frawley State Athletic Commission Act, legalizing prize fighting.

"Peddler's Acre."

Lambeth "old" church has numerous historic monuments, and in one of the windows is the full length figure of a peddler with his pack, staff and dog. This is supposed to represent the unknown person who presented "Peddler's acre" to the parish upon condition that his portrait and that of his beloved canine companion should be preserved in the church and that his dog should be given a grave in consecrated ground.—London Saturday Review.

a strong defensive position. I regret exceedingly that his official duties at Washington prevent his being here this evening.

"In this presence I want also to pay my respects to your neighbor and my friend, the distinguished Speaker of the Assembly, Honorable Thaddeus Sweet. Those of us in Brooklyn who know Mr. Sweet entertain a very high regard for him, and I am sure that you also are satisfied with the service he is rendering the people of the state.

"The great world war, engaging more than half of the civilized world, has brought to us a realization of a condition of things in the country that we have never before fully appreciated. We have gone alone for a half a century without any conception of the possibility of conflict, with any of the other nations of the world.

"We have learned from the great war in Europe what preparedness means. It was preparedness of the army that enabled Germany to make great initial gains of territory. It was similar preparedness on the part of France annd Belgium that checked the Germon offensive when it was almost at the gates of the French capital. It was the preparedness and superiority of the English navy that saved the seaports of France from her enemy, without which it seems certain that the initially more powerful military machine of Germany would have swept through the French republic. It was and still is the preparedness of the English navy that has saved the British islands from invasion by a foe which, in the beginning, was capable of putting twenty trained soldiers into the field to England's one.

"Have any of the gentlemen presesnt heard the speech of Darwin P. Kingsley, on the subject of "Democracy vs. Sovereignty." in which he brings out the fact that in the prepara tion of the Constitution of the United States a way was made clear for a real Democracy here on this continent? Previous to that constitution we had thirteen independent states, each one setting up a barrier against the others. These barriers were broken down, and we lived here for three quarters of a century, developing the finest traditions of a free people, until were compelled in the great war between the states, from 1861 to 1865 to fight out the principle again, and at the conclusion of that war to establish, let us hope for all time, a democracy of all the states.

"Perhaps this is impossible in our day, but who can say but that out of this conflict the opportunity may be afforded us of being the beacon light, around it to gather the greatest thinkers of the civilized world, in the hope that by some means a Democracy of all then ations of thew orld may be formed, perhaps not under one flag, but under some sort of an agreement that will insure for all time "peace on earth and good will toward men."

"These things are questions of patriotism and national wisdom, so overwhelmingly overshadowing local and political issues that thye must ultimately prevail, if the United States is to establish a sound and effective insurance against disaster in war, and to elevate itself to a position which will be as nearly a perfect guarantee of peace as human minds can yet conceive. We will never seek war because we are ready for it; we shall not become a fighting nation until we are forced to fight. But if war should come, and we are not ready for it, we may cease to be a nation at all."

SIMON COLEMAN

Simon Coleman died last night at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Bernard Nealis, 837 Utica street. Although Mr. Coleman had been ill for more than a year his death came unexpectedly. A few minutes before he died he had taken a walk.

Besides his daughter he is survived by two sons, Simon and Thomas, both of this city and a sister, Mrs. John Dyer, sr., also of this city.

Mr. Coleman was a member of the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

MRS. GEORGE FOSTER

Mrs. George Foster, age 60, died this afternoon after an illness of one year at the family home, 717 Oneida street.

She was a life long resident of Fulton, and besides her husband is survived by a daughter, Mrs. A. Z. Wolever, of this city, and three sons, Clinton, George and Winfred, also of Fulton.

3—Submarines and Zeppelins will continue to be used as weapons against England's attempt to starve Germany into submission.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

There are seemingly people in our good city who delight in telling stories. You all know what a story is, something very much exaggerated and not always TRUE. The story now making the rounds in FULTON is the one about the banquet. Some FOOL started a ball rolling that the eatables were NOT bought in our city. We herewith emphatically DECLARE THAT EVERYTHING WAS BOUGHT IN FULTON.

Some time ago, we took the liberty to compliment Mr. Herbert W. Adkins, our City Chamberlain with the splendid work he was doing. We again take this liberty and are glad to state that we are VERY PROUD of him and that he deserves the good will of ALL the people in FULTON. Today FULTON is the very example in the third class cities in regard to the system of bookkeeping and that is a sign for the better. Let the good work go on.

When a man signs a contract for real estate or any other contract for that matter, he is bound to that contract and has to live up to it. If some one would tell him that he was no good in keeping his word, he probably would be good and proper mad and the Lord only knows what he would do to the fellow who made the statement referred to above.

When a man signs a contract with a Chamber of Commerce to pay a certain amount of money in dues to that Chamber then he is just as much bound to his word, because he signed HIS NAME to that contract. If he does not live up to a contract of that kind, he belongs to the class of men upon whom we CANNOT DEPEND. In other words, HIS WORD IS NOT GOOD FOR ANYTHING no matter what it is. A man who refuses to pay his dues in a commercial organization is just as much of a dead-beat as the fellow that buys groceries on time and tells the merchant to go and get it if he can. It is a very dangerous thing to do that signing of a name black on white on any contract and every man ought to be intelligent enough to KNOW what he is DOING. A real man always lives up to his word; it is the doubtful fellow, the one, one NEVER can depend upon, that is refusing to pay his dues and the men who are NOT members of the Chamber of Commerce and are standing on the corners of the streets with their eternal hands in their pockets looking on what the OTHER fellow is doing, and criticising and knocking the woork of the Chamber are cowards. Srch men as those who are passing remarks about a commercial organization and NEVER paid a cent towards it, are about just as ignorant as a mule. When a man is TOO STINGY or TOO IGNORANT to join a Chamber of Commerce or to see the great benefits that eventually will be derived through such an organization then they should at least TRY to be Gentleman enough to KEEP THEIR MOUTHS SHUT, because they have NO RIGHT to knock the other fellow. In other words there are men to be found anywhere, who are so mean that even they make their own lives miserable.

PAY YOUR DUES. Be a G-E-N-T-L-E-M-A-N. Show them that YOUR WORD IS REALLY YOUR WORD and not a mere saying. Don't spoil your credit in your home town by not living up to your word. Don't give that paid employe a chance to think different of you. Help to build your community. The community HAD faith in your SIGNATURE; don't make that community ashamed of you. If you can't pay on account of sickness or any other reason, all good and well; you are dealing with GENTLEMEN in the true sense of the word. But if you can and you don't, you are HARMING YOURSELF, because we cannot have faith in what you are saying.

Dues in the Chamber of Commerce are now being collected MONTHLY.

JOHN FINNEGAN, IRISH TENOR, COMING HERE

The announcement that the Chamber of Commerce will present John Finnegan, the celebrated Irish Tenor, soloist at St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York city, for a concert on May 2nd at the Quirk Theatre, has already created a great deal of favorable comment.

Among the prominent organizations with which Mr. Finnegan has appeared as soloist are the New York Philharmonic Orchestra; New York Symphony Orchestra; Washington Symphony and Victor Herbert Orchestra. He has also appeared in concert in all the leading cities of the United States and is said to be one of the greatest singer of Irish melodies before the public today. In speaking of a recent appearance in concert with Mme. Gadski, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, the New York American said:

"Mr. Finnegan shared the honors of the evening with Mme. Gadski and his splendid singing was rewarded with enthusiastic applause."

The New York Herald said:

"Mr. Finnegan's aria from "Faust" was one of the solos of the evening and brought forth a great outburst of applause."

STARS WILL NOT REST UNDER THE DECISION

Not satisfied with the result of the bowling match on Thursday night, whereby the All-Fulton quintet won the city championship, the All-Stars have issued a challenge to Powell's time for another match, which it is announced will be accepted. Through the superior bowling of Rear and Stauring who went considerably over the 200 mark in the three sets, the All-Fulton team pulled through with a victory. The All-Stars are confident that these were chance strokes; therefore the challenge.

STATE DAM MADE POWER, IS CLAIM

State Engineer Supports Attorneys' Contention That Dam Benefited Paper Co.

Syracuse — New entanglements arose yesterday in the suit of the Battle Island Paper company of Fulton to recover from the state for damage to its land and water rights.

Attorneys for the state have submitted a vast amount of evidence covering every possible phase of the question. Yesterday they introduced testimony to prove that the company is asking the state to pay heavily for something created by the state.

John P. Newton, a state engineer, who made a detailed study of the Oswego river and the water power site of the paper company, introduced maps and drawing to support this contention. The drawings showed that the water power at them ill was greatly improved about ten years ago when the state raised the dam near Battle Island.

About Additional Power

The state made this improvement and the defense insists that the state should not be made to pay for this additional water power. Edward J. Mone and Sanford W. Smith from the attorney-general's office, assisted by Richard E. Phillips, an engineering expert, attempted to establish this point.

Attorneys for the company cross-examined several of the state's experts at considerable length during the morning and early afternoon.

Court of Claims adjourned early in the afternoon until 10 o'clock Monday morning. The Battle island case will be continued at that time before Justices Ackerson and Fennell.

The state has many more experts to put on the stand before it closes its case. Hydraulic experts will be sworn early in the week.

Hunter to Be Recalled

Monday or Tuesday Robert B. Hunter, for years manager of the paper company, will return to the stand to be cross-examined by the company's attorneys.

Mr. Hunter early this week was placed on the stand by the defense He testified as to the money earned by the concern during his connection with it.

TO AMEND INSURANCE LAW

On November 27th of last year the Rome city hall was damaged by fire. Settlement of the loss dragged along all winter. Exasperated on account of the delay Rome's city council probed into things and discovered a situation which it proposes to remedy. The conditions and proposed remedy are described by the Rome Sentinel as follows:

"The present law provides that in case of a loss by fire where the insurance company and the insured person or corporation cannot agree upon the amount of thel oss, the matter shall be left to two appraisers, the insured and the company each selecting one, and if they fail to agree they shall submit their differences to an umpire, and the award in writing of any two shall determine the amount of such loss.

"There is nothing in the present law that gives the insured a right, in case of a disagreement with the insurance company as to loss, to bring an action at law and try out the case in court. It is the idea of the city attorney and the Aldermen that the law should be amended so as to give the insured this right, and the city attorney was therefore directed to draw an amendment to the present law and have it introduced in the Legislature. The bill which he has drawn gives the insured the right to proceed according to the provisions of the present law or to bring a suit in court, which ever he choses?"

This bill was sent to Senator Wicks and Assemblyman Davis some time ago.—Batavia News.

WHAT OF IT?

It seems that altogether too much importance has been attached to the fact that former Secretary of State Robert Bacon entertained Colonel Roosevelt, Elihu Root, Senator Lodge and Major General Wood at luncheon the other day, thus bringing together several old-time friends, who have differed radically politically during the last three or four years. The conclusion is jumped at that Senator Root, who was denounced by the colonel for having stolen the Chicago convention from him had let bygones be bygones, and that Lodge, who though a life-long friend of Roosevelt's had opposed him, were all going to unite to make Roosevelt the Republican nominee for the presidency for a third term; that the conference was for the purpose of bowling over the Hughes boom, and re-establishing Roosevelt at the head of the Republican party. Where General Wood came in on the political conference is not stated. The fact probably is that it was purely a social affair. As a political conference it could amount to nothing. The day has long gone by when three of four men at a table could dictate to the American people what they should do. Neither ex-Senator Root nor Senator Lodge would be likely to attempt it. The days when Platt and Quay and other bosses could meet and decide are past, and it would be just as presuming for Messrs. Roosevelt, Root and Lodge to get together to decide the course of the Republican party as it would for Mr. Barnes, Senator Penrose and other discredited bosses to get together for that purpose. A machine is a machine, no matter who it is composed of, and Senator Root, who has so vigorously denounced the invisible government of the past, could hardly be consistent in becoming a member of a machine to make Mr. Roosevelt the nominee of the Republican party. The fact is that it cannot be done. The Republican voters have today something to say as to who shall be their nominee, and they will not say that it shall be the man who disrupted the party and elected Mr. Wilson in 1912. Republican voters are calling for Charles E. Hughes, and they will not be turned from their purpose by anyone except Mr. Hughes himself. All attempts to divert the republican voters from their purpose will fail.—Watertown Times.

A PACIFIST SURPRISE

People who took Henry Ford's presidential candidacy in the Michigan primaries as a new Ford joke have been disillusioned. It proved to be a mighty serious thing for Senator Smith, Mr. Ford's opponent. With all the prestige of long public service, and with a strong political organization, the senator came perilously near losing to a mere business man who apparently did not want the nomination and would make no effort to get it.

Interest in this unique contest is much wider than the state of Michigan. The result is of national importance. Senator Smith and Henry Ford represented antipodal sides of what is the paramount question before the American people today, and will be a big issue in the presidential campaign. The senator stood for strong armament. The automobile manufacturer stood for extreme pacifism. It was preparedness against unpreparedness. And the preparedness advocate, utilizing all the means at his command, was barely able to defeat the man who passively represented the opposite principle.

This doesn't necessarily mean that about half the people in Michigan—and by inference, half the people in the country—are opposed to national defense measures. Much of Mr. Ford's support was doubtless due to his personal popularity in Detroit, which regards him as its first citizen. But there must be far more unpreparedness sentiment in the United States than most observers have supposed, and any presidential candidate who trusts to military enthusiasm for his success may meet with a surprise.

THE MAN WHO TOOK A MOUNTAIN TOP

(Exchange)

He struggled and he battled,
And he fought the mighty years;
He fought them in the sunshine,
And he fought them in his tears.
He leveled walls and castles,
And he mounted mile by mile —
And then he took the mountain top,
And rested for a while.

At least he thought he rested,
But he didn't rest at all;
For he looked across his summit,
And he yearned for heaven's wall.
He reached amid the motion
Of the ever-rolling stars;
And he sorrowed that the distance
Had put up so many bars.

The people down below him
Looked in envy on his plight;
They were jealous of the triumph
He had won in splendid might.
But the man who took the mountain —
All the sad and lonely years —
Wished that he was at the bottom,
With his people, and their tears.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Out of 253 editors of the state of Iowa who voted in a suffrage poll taken by the Des Moines Capital 168 declared that their communities would give a majority vote for woman suffrage at the June election.

• • •

The adoption by Mrs. Pankhurst of four infants orphaned by the war ought to convince a doubting world that she did not lead the militant suffragists because she had no interest in motherhood.

The women of Alberta did not wait for the woman suffrage bill to be signed by the Lieutenant-Governor but as soon as the bill was safely through the legislature they immediately began to organize in the interest of legislation which they desired as voters. Their list included equal guardianship, red-light abatement, proportional representation, and improved legal status for the wife in her interest in her husband' estate.

Three huge provinces covering an area only a little less than the whole territory east of the Mississippi in the United States, according to The Woman's Journal, have within the first three months of this year granted political justice to women: Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Their area is over three quarters of a million square miles, and their population numbers nearly a million and a third.

When the last bill is signed, and of its signing there is said to be no question, women in these provinces, so says The Journal, will have won with little opposition in a few years what American women have been earnestly struggling for in vain in many states for over half a century.

The reorganization of the policewomen with a woman supervisor; the refusal of all women to accept pay for working at the polls or for any candidate; a municipal incinerating plant; school teachers to be free as citizens to organize; these are some of the planks in the platform adopted by thew omen voters of Chicago at a mass meeting at the Chicago Auditorium.

"This is one of the most significant events in the political history of Chicago," said Alderman Merriam as he left the great meeting with its attendance estimated at three thousand.

"It is held to be the best program for independent voters, if not the only one, submitted to the citizenship," comments The Survey on the platform adopted by the women voters.

For four years the women farmers in the state of Missouri have been organized. According to the Missouri Woman, this is the only organization of the kind in the United States. Its president has recently been spreading the gospel of organization to the nearly 1800 women farm owners in the neighboring state of Iowa. Her success means another arm to the lever which is expected to make Iowa at the June election an equal suffrage state.

MUST HAVE LIVES THAT ARE FULL OF SERVICE

Utica—"Supposing all we could say about Jesus Christ was that He never did any harm," said the Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles Fiske, bishop coadjutor of Central New York, in the Lenten sermon at Cavalry church in Utica last evening, "would we be gathering to worship Him?" The Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles Tyler Olmstead, bishop of the diocese, was a member of the congregation.

"Unless our lives are filled with positive acts of kindness we are away from the right track. It is not so much that we are saved from something—hell, or whatever you want to call it. It is not so much that we are saved for something—heaven, or what ever you want to call it. But we are saved to something —service. You have got to have lives that are full of service.

"We don't read the Bible to find out who Moses's uncle was, but to find out what was the heart of Christianity 'Count that day absolutely lost at the close of which you cannot say that you have done something for someone in the name of Christ—not the big thing but the letter to a lonely soul, the kindly word, the courteous thing to someone at home, where we generally show our worst side. Don't forget the danger of living the kind of life that would make you never missed if you died tomorrow. An empty house is a very pitiful thing, and so is an empty soul.'"

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

"America is only another name for opportunity," said Oliver Wendell Holmes. Pessimists will say that while this statement was true in Mr. Holmes' day it is not true now. Yet there died in New York a few weeks ago a man who, though only a messenger boy at the age of twelve, was general manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at the age of thirty-nine—Belvidere Brooks.

Charles Wakefield Cadman, the famous young American composer, was born and brought up around the Carnegie Steel Mills of Pittsburgh, and started to work in one of the mills when he was thirteen years old. He was the kind of a man who, because he had to begin life doing uncongenial work, did not consider that he had to go through life railing at fate and society which "kept him down." He knew that if he was thrifty and industrious that Opportunity would knock at his door.

William Dean Howells, the dean of American letters, learned the printers' trade. Judge Robert S. Lovett, head of the Harriman railroad system, was once a teamster. James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, loved and honored by the nation, began life as a sign painter. Albert H. Smith, head of the New York Central lines, was once a laborer and a section hand.

The late Mark Hanna said: "If you want to be anything in life or in your own community, save your money—and begin to do it right away. Saving pulls a man together, makes him fit and able to do things. Nine out of every ten successful men have grown that way."

We will see that Mr. Hanna's words are true if we consider the lives of many great men. Stevenson, inventor of the locomotive, laid by pennies in order to buy material for his experiments. Lincoln hoarded money for an education, Samuel Johnson worked out of his poverty by patient thrift.

Let the success of these men be an inspiration today.

GEORGIA TO BE "DRY" AT END OF APRIL

Atlanta—This is the last month of liquor in Georgia. The new prohibition laws go into effect May 1st and will make Georgia as dry as the desert of Sahara in so far as the sale of liquor of any sort in this State goes. Locker clubs are going out of business, while a few of them will reorganize for strictly social purposes. Many saloons are already vacant, while breweries are being converted into ice factories and other manufacturing establishments.

After May 1st no beverage can be sold in Georgia which contains as much as one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, thus putting out of reach even the "near-beer" which in many Georgia cities has been the standby where no other means of a "mornings's morning" was available.

OSWEGO WILL BENEFIT BY APPROPRIATION BILL

Washington—Despite the cries of "pork barrel" which are being made against the rivers and harbors bill now under discussion in the House of Representatives it is very probable that the bill will pass and will include, when passed, the provision which appropriates $100,000 for the harbor at Oswego, N. Y. Congressman Luther W. Mott of Oswego, Congressman Walter W. Magee of Syracuse, and other Central New York members interested in the improvments at Oswego are keeping in close touch with the pending measure to see that the Oswego appropriation is not stricken from the bill.

SUPPLY STRUCTURAL STEEL FOR OSWEGO CANDY WORKS

Syracuse—Contracts for steel for the construction of several large buildings in this part of the state have been given Smith & Caffrey of this city. One of the largest of these is for the new plant of the Oswego Candy works at Oswego. The steel work on this job will amount to several thousands of dollars.

MANY STATES FAVOR DU PONT

SENTIMENT FOR HIM CRYSTALIZES AROUND CONVICTION THAT NATION NEEDS A BUSINESS MAN AS CHIEF EXECUTIVE.

DELAWARE MAN BEGAN AS A MINE MULE DRIVER

New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Alabama, Delaware, Kentucky, Indiana and Others, Swinging to Man Who Has Raised Himself From Mule Driver to Be One of the Most Successful Business Men in the Country.

The rapidity with which the boom for Coleman du Pont for president is spreading is winning favor with laborers as well as businessmen, miners as well as operators; in fact, all those who know Coleman du Pont personally, or are at all acquainted with his ability and his business methods are lending aid to the movement which promises to reveal him as the "dark horse" at the Chicago Convention, and secure for him the Republican nomination for president.

According to an article in the Central City (Ky.) Argus, Democrats as well as Republicans are lending aid to the du Pont movement. It says:

"There is sound reason for the du Pont boom in Kentucky, where he began at the bottom as a mule driver in a coal mine, for which he received the munificent sum of fifteen dollars per month. He fought it out with his mine mule, developing those traits of determination and patience which a mine mule driver requires, and made good. Step by step he advanced, through every phase of mine employment, finally becoming superintendent. Then, outgrowing this position he went elsewhere. The remainder of his career is history. Sheer ability and an understanding of men has placed him among the captains of industry of the United States, a leader in finance, development and charity. The latter trait has always been outstanding in character."

COLEMAN DU PONT

The regard in which Coleman du Pont is held by his associates is little short of worship. They are spreading this sentiment throughout the country. No stronger evidence of this fact could be given than is contained in the following by Thomas L. Cannon in the Birmingham (Ala.) State Sentinel, a democratic newspaper:

"With decade upon decade of American patriotism bred into his forebears and constantly transmitted to him, the production of the highest type of American manhood in his personality is not surprising.

"Washington at Valley Forge and all through the terrific and unequal struggle for American citizenship did not depend on any one to produce successful results more than he did upon DeNemours, the powder maker.

"With all reverence to LaFayette, it would be no over-recognition to see the kinsman of DeNemours utilize his accumulated powers to serve this republic as its chief.

"Mr. du Pont is the embodiment of economy. Experienced in business activities, trained in statecraft, socially equipped to meet the elite of civilization, he could assume any duty with confidence and success.

"Possessing courage and convictions, with force to impress upon all his individuality, he has the lovable gentleness that marks the man of power.

"Able to influence Captains of Big Business, also to sway the less fortunate through an innate sense of true justice, he produces 'the greatest good to the greatest number.'

"Rich in resourcefulness, ripe in experience, rare in achievements, he is eminently fitted for any place.

"Without reflection on merit, without critical comparison, the republic has not produced one son to whom Coleman du Pont is not peer."

His friends will put him before the Convention as an active candidate. Already, Delaware has declared for him as a favorite son; New York is for him as a "dark horse." Kentucky will swing to him and so will many middle and western states. His nomination is no longer a mere possibility, but is assuming the form of a probability.

EXPERTS IN TRACKING.

Australian Natives of Both Sexes Trained From Childhood.

The Australian aboriginals are the finest trackers in the world, London Answers declares.

On many occasions they have performed feats which are almost beyond belief. But to them the work is quite habitual. The boys are taught to track from birth.

The women are just as expert as the men. Horse tracks are child's play to them. They can track a horse at full gallop. They can track anything—possums, snakes, iguanas, even beetles leave sufficient trail for them to work on.

The standard of honor among these tribes is high. When one of them breaks their strict code, fearing the wrath of the tribe, he bolts and, knowing he will be pursued, uses all his knowledge in an effort to elude those in search of him. But it is questionable if there is a single case on record where he escaped.

What might be called classes in tracking are held for the youngsters. The tutor will get them in a body and then disappear into the bush and do everything he can to make them lose his tracks. He will tiptoe along fallen logs, swim a quarter of a mile along a stream, double on his tracks, and so on.

Finally he returns to the boys, who then set out to pick up the tracks.

ACIDITY OF THE STOMACH.

Diet Hints For Sufferers Afflicted With This Trouble.

Acidity of the stomach and ulcerated stomach are largely on the increase in both England and America, if statistics are to be believed. And Dr. Willard J. Stone points out in the Journal of the American Medical Association that these are the two countries in which the consumption of sugar is greatest.

Dr. Stone recommends an almost starch and sugar free diet for persons troubled with acidity. He says the following articles of food may be eaten with safety: Fresh fruit pulp or fruit juices, such as grapefruit, oranges, peaches and watermelon, without sugar; broth, soft boiled or poached eggs, fish, chicken, broiled or baked meats, bacon, milk, tea, cream, butter, green vegetables, such as asparagus, spinach, cauliflower, watercress, endive, squash, carrots, turnips, lettuce, fruit and lettuce salads, with olive oil dressing containing a very small quantity of lemon juice; Brazil nuts, pecans or filberts.

The following foods are prohibited: Candy, sugar, sirups and condiments; the fresh fruits which contain more than 10 per cent carbohydrates, such as apples, pears, bananas, cherries, currants, plums; of the vegetables, peas, parsnips, beans, potatoes, corn; the cereals, rice, macaroni, bread, crackers, cocoa, chocolate and coffee.

Franklin as a Printer.

A letter of Charles Wilson Peale who painted the first portrait of Washington, is dated Oct. 23, 1814, and discusses inventions, windmills, etc. In it he says:

"Dr. Franklin when he was a young man went to London and worked in divers shops and in different parts of the printing business. I heard a curious anecdote of him. He hired himself to work at press in an office. When a friend of the owner of the press came to see him, the printer told his friend that he was in great want of a compositor and asked where he could find one. 'I am much surprised that you should want a compositor when you keep a man at the press (pointing to Franklin) who is the best compositor in London,' he said."

Changed the Koreans.

Koreans were quick to quarrel in ancient days and won a bad reputation on this account. At one time, a historian explains, fatal quarrels became so frequent in the country that drastic measures were necessary. A law was promulgated ordering adult males to wear on all occasions a china head dress shaped like an inverted flower pot. It was impossible to fight when crowned with this fragile gear, and the penalties for removing it were severe. The first offense entailed fifty blows on the soles of the feet, and the second meant decapitation. This decree had the most soothing effects, the nature of the inhabitants changed as if by magic, and Korea was called the Land of the Morning Calm.

Worse Than Working.

The stage carpenter went to the theater manager and asked for an increase in his wages. The manager appeared surprised.

"Why," he exclaimed, "I really don't see my way to giving you a raise. You have nothing much to do. Half the time you are merely standing in the wings listening to the play."

"Yes, sir," replied the carpenter grimly; "that's just it."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

Delay Explained.

"What are you doing there, Ellen?"

"Excuse me, miss, but my apron caught in the door."

"But you left the room ten minutes ago!"

"Yes, miss, but I only just found it out."—Passing Show.

The Way It Goes.

"This is an odd way girls have of getting into society."

"How is it odd?"

"Why, to get in they first have to come out."—New York Journal.

It is the appreciation, not of the indulgent, but of the exacting, that counts.

HOTEL FOR GIRLS.

Home Bequeathed to Workers by New York Merchant.

EXPERIENCE SHOWED NEED.

Suggests That Hotel For Unmarried Working Women Be Erected in Business District, but Does Not Confine Executors to Any One Region.

New York.—Charles Bertram Webster, a merchant who died March 16 last, bequeathed about one-third of his large estate for the foundation of a corporation which is directed to erect in the retail dry goods district an apartment house wherein unmarried working women shall have apartments at cost.

The decedent, who for many years lived at the Hotel Netherland, was a native of Providence, R. I., a son of Josiah L. Webster, a dry goods merchant there. He came to New York early in life. In 1896 he retired from active business, but never lost his interest in it or in the people who worked for the firm.

Before providing for the project which had long been in his mind, Mr. Webster bequeathed to five cousins $5,000 each, set aside $25,000 to Thomas W. Beckley, described as a "servant," and gave $10,000 to his coachman, Frank Falkner.

He bequeathed to Joseph L. Webster, his brother, all his horses, carriages, harness, clothing, jewelry and automobiles and two-thirds of his residuary estate. He then said:

"Having been engaged for many years in the business known as a department store in the city of New York and having employed a large number of unmarried women in that business, I have realized that the domestic environments of many of them are not conducive to their morals or health, and I have concluded to endeavor to improve the condition of some of them by giving them the opportunity to live in clean, well ventilated, comfortable and attractive apartments, and for that purpose I direct my executors to form, or cause to be formed, as soon as practicable after my death a corporation for benevolent purposes under the membership corporation law of the state of New York or under such other law of the state of New York as may be applicable at the time.

"The particular objects for which such corporation is to be formed are to generally improve the conditions of unmarried working women and particularly to establish, maintain and conduct apartments in the borough of Manhattan for occupation by unmarried working women regardless of their religious belief or nationality and wherein they may find comfortable and attractive homes.

"The name of said corporation shall be the Webster apartments, and the territory in which the corporation shall be principally conducted shall be the borough of Manhattan."

The decedent suggests that the building be erected in the vicinity of the retail stores, but does not confine the executors to any particular district. He says he thinks the sort of building he desires can be erected and equipped for about $400,000, but he does not confine his agents to this sum. They can spend more if they think necessary.

"The building shall contain a library and restaurant," directs the decedent, "and such other appurtenances as will tend to render the apartments comfortable and attractive. Apartments are to be let furnished and unfurnished.

"I direct that said apartments shall not be conducted for profit, but solely for the purpose of providing unmarried working women with homes and wholesome food at a small cost to them and in deserving cases without cost to them. I direct that the directors of said corporation shall fix the rentals and the prices of food with the view of carrying out that purpose. The cost of maintaining the apartment and restaurant in excess of the receipts therefrom shall be met from such income as the corporation may have exclusive of the receipts from said restaurant and rentals."

The decedent asks the executors to serve as officers of the corporation until the first annual meeting.

FED APRICOTS TO HOGS.

Fruit Market Was Glutted and In That Way Francis Used His.

Pomona, Cal.—Apricot ham is the latest novelty in this community. C. C. Francis, who has a ranch near here, is the producer. Last summer his apricot crop was going to waste because the market was glutted, so he fed the apricots to his hogs.

He butchered two shoats the other day. They each tipped the beam at 245 pounds. He got fifteen gallons of lard, seven pounds of sausage, four splendid hams, some spareribs, a quantity of side meat, eight pigs' feet and 100 pounds of soap out of the kill.

The hogs were carried through the summer and fall on waste fruit, and this winter they were finished on oranges and cornmeal slop. Mr. Francis declares that the high cost of living won't worry him for awhile at least.

$100 A WEEK; CAN'T PAY WIFE

Automobile Upkeep Takes Big Part of Jersey Man's Wages.

Jersey City.—Gordon J. Hague of Paterson told Vice Chancellor Lewis that he had not been able to pay his wife alimony as directed because he had only $6.72 left out of his weekly salary of $100 after paying his board and the upkeep of his automobile.

$500 FOR OLD KINDNESS.

Sedalia (Mo.) Woman Was Good to an Orphan and He Repays Her.

Sedalia, Mo.—Mrs. J. T. Albertson, wife of a Sedalia painter, has received a check for $500 from Daniel C. Jacklin of San Francisco as a recognition of kindness extended to him years ago when as an orphan he worked on the Albertson farm near here.

Jacklin was left penniless when his parents died, but he worked his way through the Warrensburg Normal school and the Rolla School of Mines. He then went west and as a mining engineer has accumulated wealth.

His earnings run into the thousands yearly, and he receives large dividends from eighteen mining corporations in which he is a stockholder. He wants Mr. and Mrs. Albertson to join him on an eastern trip.

DIDN'T BELIEVE SIGN.

Got $50 From Box That Bore Notice It Contained No Money.

Fresno, Cal.—"This safe is not locked and does not contain any money. Please do not blow it up."

This sign greeted a burglar in a store at Parlier. He opened the safe door, however, and found $50. Then he went across the street and broke into the store conducted by E. J. Moncrief. He found a strong and substantial strong box. It was locked. The burglar carried the strong box to an empty box car, pried it open and found some unsigned checks and a copper cent.

Sixteenth Baby Born.

Iowa City, Ia.—Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Holland, residing near Iowa City, claim the badge of honor for Iowa. Their sixteenth child, a son, was born recently. All of the other fifteen, save one, a boy, who died in infancy, survive.

Eighteenth Century Dandies.

In the early part of the eighteenth century it was a common thing in London for a man of fashion to spend several hours a day with his valet, among the many quaint operations being "the starching of the beard and the proper perfuming of garments, the painting of the face and anointing with oils, tinctures, quintessences and pomatums." It is even said that some of the dandies of the time bathed in wine and milk "for the preservation of their complexions and the rejuvenation of their energies."

WALKS 4,000 MILES TO REGAIN HIS HEALTH

When Doctors Seem to Be Giving Up Hope He Handles Own Case and Resorts to Walking.

Davenport, Ia.—Robert Sindt, thirty-five years old, was facing a physical breakdown last fall. The doctors did not hold out much hope for him. He is a pretty good sized man when in robust health, but his weight had dropped to 135 pounds.

"I'll doctor my own case and fresh air will be my first prescription," decided Sindt.

So he started walking. Not to any destination in particular, but just jogging along as far as he felt like going every day. He started to walk in August. Recently he arrived at San Diego, Cal., having walked 3,384 miles in that time.

His prescription of fresh air, along with the accompanying exercise, has worked wonders, and his weight has gone up fifteen pounds. It's all solid bone and muscle, too, now.

Sindt has become a devotee of walking and has started out on a new trip to Washington. He pays his own way and adopts none of the minor grafts usually employed by professional pedestrians.

While on his long jaunt Sindt made a study of the effects of various foods, and he has arrived at the conclusion that the old fashioned staple—beans—just about tops the list in the way of affording nutriment. He drinks a great deal of water every day. He sleeps in the open air most of the time.

Sindt has averaged 15.73 miles every day since he started on his health pilgrimage.

COWS WEAR DRESSES.

Made of Hemp Cloth to Protect Them From the Cold.

San Francisco.—An authority on dress and its cut for dairy cows is a guest at the St. Francis, in the person of Sir Francis Webster of Glasgow, a wealthy manufacturer of hemp goods in Scotland and the owner of a stock range in Texas embracing 1,500,000 acres and thousands of head of stock.

Sir Francis' cows are dressed regularly every winter in suits of hemp cloth made at his own manufacturing establishment, to protect them from the cold and snow, minimize the dangers from tuberculosis and increase their daily yield of milk.

Each cow has two suits a week. They are not elaborate dress affairs by any means, with lingerie and all that. It is a man made dress of one piece, or simply a coverall blanket that fits loosely.

This, of course, means added expense, but the yield of milk during the cold weather is about 27 per cent larger than from cows not similarly protected.

LIVING AND DYING.

Why pay Tire Bills for Others—
—i. e., for RECKLESS Drivers

AMERICANS who want their money's worth,—who dislike to pay for the Reckless-driving extravagance of Others,—in the price of their own Tires, should sit up and take notice of following FACTS:—

The current Goodrich "Fair-List" price on Tires, is based upon what it costs the largest, and best equipped, Rubber Factory in America to produce them.

No "Insurance" Premium added to the NORMAL retail price of Goodrich Tires, in order to protect the Reckless Driver at the expense of the Careful Driver, through a fancy List Price which is high enough to absorb that Premium.

The excess Mileage each Goodrich Tire is reasonably certain to deliver, when given reasonable care in driving, thus becomes clear "Velvet" to the Owner of GOODRICH Tires.

Money can't make, and can't buy, better Tires of Fabric construction, than Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires, as Test will prove.

And, money can't buy the B. F. Goodrich Co. to produce Tires which would discredit the 269 other lines of Rubber Goods made by the B. F. Goodrich Co., for which its name stands Sponsor.

COMPARE prices on Goodrich "Fair-List" Tires with present prices on any other responsible Tires in the field, bearing in mind that NO "LARGER-SIZED" Tires (type for type and size for size) than Goodrich Black-Treads, are made in America.

Then, Test out at least ONE pair of Goodrich black-tread Tires, on their per-DELIVERED-Mile cost to you, against any other Tires in the field, at any price, and abide by the Result.

Why (if YOU are not a Reckless Driver) should YOU pay MORE than the "BUSINESS" price of the Goodrich Tire, for ANY Fabric Tire in the field?

HERBERT BAKER FLAYS AUTHORS OF BRANDED AUTOMOBILE LAWS

Freakish legislators and the kind of stuff they attempt to put over on the automobile owners of this state were put before the calcium at one of the largest meetings of the Fulton Automobile Club ever held in this city, last night. When President McCully called the meeting to order in the assembly room of the Public Library it did not look as though there had been much interest aroused in the call to meet Herbert W. Baker, secretary of the New York State Automobile Association; but within a half hour the room was comfortably filled.

Mr. McCully reviewed the work of the club since its inception, showing that the organization fills a niche in the social life of Fulton indispensable to its welfare.

Mr. Baker prefaced his talk by announcing emphatically that partisan politics would have no place. He said that too often legislation enacted at Albany is the result of the effects of over-indulgence in lobster a la Newburg, and is therefore freakish. The State Association, he said, comprises 106 clubs in as many cities. Out of the 114 bills introduced in the legislature bearing upon the rights of the motorist, 111 of them were declared by Mr. Baker to be inimical the autoist's interests. He told of the important part played by the Association in securing the enactment of the law compelling all vehicles to carry lights at night.

The Hewitt-Sullivan bill, which would provide for a double automobile tax, was one of the 110 bills killed after it received a general hearing. In that fight the State Association figured largely. The bill provided for a heavy tax on the pleasure car — $25, but did not increase the tax on motor trucks, Fords or bus lines. The fees of each of these would have been fixed at $5, said Mr. Baker as he ridiculed the efforts of the lawmakers to get the bill through committee. He fought to kill the bill, mainly because of its injustice attitude toward the pleasure car owner. Another piece of freak legislation was described by the speaker as emanting from Assemblyman Fuller of Jefferson county. That bill would have imposed an additional fee of $3 upon each passenger in a car. The Fuller bill and its like, according to Mr. Baker, should provoke autoists in cutting trap doors in the bottoms of cars so that in traveling about the country they might

With unerring judgment of value—

With a rush that swallowed up a record production in jig time—

The public took more than 50,000 of the $750 Overlands in six months.

In six months we've absorbed all the overhead; absorbed all the development expense; realized on all the experimental cost that is usually spread over a year.

We covered our material requirements at before-the-war prices—saved three and a half million dollars on aluminum and another million on steel.

We have increased our production capacity of 300 cars per day last June to 1000 cars per day.

So again we have broken all records.

Again we have planned and bought material for a bigger production program.

And again we are setting a new and supreme standard of value—

You can now buy the big, roomy, comfortable, thirty-five horsepower Overland for $695.

Here is the value which has clearly dominated the automobile market for the last six months—now made even more clearly dominant.

Here is the car with a performance record never even approached by any car of its size ever built—fifty thousand in every day service.

And though the price is reduced the car is improved.

It has an up-to-the-minute power plant, en bloc type, developing full thirty-five horsepower. It has abundant power and speed and an exceptionally quick get-away.

The value is pre-eminent—unapproached.

We guarantee that the price for this model will never be lower.

But this price reduction is made in the face of a rising material market—we cannot guarantee that it will not be higher.

LAND AND TAX AGENT QUITS EMPIRE ROAD

James C. McGonagle has resigned as land and tax agent of the Empire United Railways, Inc., to take effect May 1st. He has been connected with the Empire United, its constituent and its associated companies ever since the project was first formulated, about fourteen years ago. His resignation comes as a distinct surprise.

Mr. McGonagle served as assistant engineer under Thomas H. Mather, when the several roads were being laid out and constructed. He was generally credited with being one of the best informed men in the employ of the company; a vertiable encyclopedia of information as to the engineering data of the different lines.

Previous to March 1st, when the readjustment of the payroll was made, following out the recommendations of Allen & Peck, Inc., to C. Loomis Allen and Hendrick S. Holden, receivers for the Empire United, Mr. McGonagle was assistant chief engineer. At that time he was made land and tax agent, succeeding H. D. Brewster, at a substantial increase in salary.

PRESENT PRICE OF CARS OFFSETS HIGH COST OF FUEL CONSUMPTION

"The cost of gasoline is one of the less important items to the prospective purchaser of an automobile whose aim is economy." This is the opinion of one of the most prominent manufacturers of automobiles in the world. He bases his argument on the declaration that the modern car of today is so complete in its equipment and so reduced in its price that these features entirely offset any increase in gasoline cost which has developed or may develop.

"The automobile buyer would ease his mind materially about gasoline prices by taking into consideration other features involved in the purchase of the modern car," said John N. Willys, president of The Willys-Overland Company, recently. Every automobile owner is getting more value for his money in the automobile market today than ever before.

"From the standpoint of economy in purchase price and upkeep we can use our Model 75 as an excellent example of greater value foor less money than any previous offering of its kind in automobile history. It is true that gasoline costs a few cents more this year than last year, but a comparison of those few cents with the dollars saved in purchase price almost makes the gasoline question seem trivial.

"In our Model 75 we are today giving thep ublic a small, light car, equipped as fully and extensively as the heavier and more expensive machines, at ap rice within the reach of everyone. Just think of the decrease in price of a completely equipped car during thel ast two years. For $615, the price of our Model 75, you can now buy a car which would have been cheap at ten or twelve hundred dollars but a short time ago. Here we have an automobile the accessories of which alone would cost quite a sum of money, on the market at ap rice so amazingly low that the saving in first purchasep rice would almost cover the entire cost of gasoline during tre first few years driving.

"And this saving is the more remarkable when you consider that Model 75 is a high quality automobile in every sense of the word. It is the highest attainment in the manufacture of outomobiles on a quantity production basis. As I said before. this model has all the equipment so attractive in the expensive cars, ranging from the electric starting and lighting system, full stream line body with sweeping curves and crowned fenders of heavy sheet steel, two big roomy seats and deep luxurious cushions.

scatter the roadways with photographs of perpetrators of freak legislation. He said the present law is all-sufficient. All that is needed is its enforcement. The State of New York needs a rest, especially from listening to the crack of the whip in the handns of the political bosses. He said that in Albany one cannot at times hear the noises of the street cars because of the noise made by the bosses as they lash the legs of the legislators.

Mr. Baker had something to say to the autoist who evades the law, particularly the driver of heavy trucks, and more especially those drivers who become intoxicated. He told of a truck driver who was found unconscious in the driver's seat from the effects of over-indulgence. The man had made a long trip over roads on which were traveling many passenger cars, but in some unaccountable way, had not collided with another car. A justice of the peace fined the driver $10. Mr. Baker said the drunken driver should have been given a long term of imprisonment.

The greed of Manhattan Island was under the observation of Mr. Baker who said that the metropolis wants everything for itself, even to the auto license money of the upstate sections. In other words, he said, New York City wants all fees sent to New York City. Assemblyman Brown of Rochester did his part toward helping New York get its desires, by introducing a bill which would give the city 50 per cent of all license fees.

Mr. Baker was rejoiced to learn that the roads of egress and ingress to Oswego are now in keeping with the march of progress —another feather in the hat of the State Automobile Association, as in the fight to secure the improvements 107 clubs in as many cities participated. The emblem of the Association, said Mr. Baker, is a mark of esteem. Thieves respect it and no one dares to ignore the message it conveys, which is, that back of it is a demand for law and order.

While Mr. Baker came ostensibly to secure the cooperation of the Fulton club, he was quite willing that there should not be exhibited undue haste in joining the State Association. He explained that the dues of the local club would be $25, to be exacted from the corporate body, and in addition, each member of the local club would be required to pay 50 cents a year. These fees entitle the individual members to free legal advice and access at all times to information furnished by his department.

Mr. Baker's opinion of the "Blue Book" is uncomplimentary to that volume. In comparing the growth of popularity of automobiles in this country, Mr. Baker said that few persons realize the immense amount of oil consumed by them. In 1905, he said, the consumption reached 3,000,000 gallons, and in 1916 it is estimated by experts it will reach 1,500,000,000 gallons.

In response to a query relative to the legal age of a person driving a car, Mr. Baker said that 18 years is the limit. At this point a round-table discussion ensued, during which the club voted to at once become a member of the State Association at the rate of $25 yearly, but it is optional with the members to participate in the affiliation, as the only stipulation made is that not less than twelve persons shall agree to pay the individual tax of 50 cent.

A election of officers for the ensuing year followed Mr. Baker's talk, with the following result: R. L. McCully, president; F. H. Morin, sec.-treas.; A. W. Wiltsie, J. H. Howe and J. J. Morrill, directors

THREE RACIAL INSTINCTS.

One Reason, Perhaps, For the Interest Taken in Baseball.

How shall we explain the absorbing interest in baseball and football? In baseball we have a game combining three of the most deep seated racial instincts—the instinct to throw, to run and to strike. During untold periods of the life history of our race survival has come to him who could throw the straightest, run the swiftest and strike the hardest. To throw something at something is almost as natural for a boy as to breathe.

Throwing, batting, running, are no longer of any service in this age of mind, but they were the conditions of survival in the distant past. Baseball reinstates those ancient attitudes and brings a thrill of cherished memories. Any one who has ever held a bat in hand and assumed the expectant attitude of the batter knows the peculiar thrill which is explained only by recalling that his distant ancestors in just that attitude beat down with a real club many an opposing foe, whether man or beast, and those who held clubs in this position and struck hard quickly survived and transmitted this instinct.

The awkward throw of girls, like the left arm throw of boys, is widely known. The plays of girls reveal their own set of instincts recalling the habits of primitive. "We are the descendants of those men who could throw and those women who loved children."—From "The Psychology of Relaxation," by G. T. W. Patrick.

Composition of an Army.

In the United States an army is made up as follows: One hundred men constitute a company, four companies a battalion, three battalions a regiment, three regiments a brigade and from three to four brigades a division, although we have no division classified as such in our army.

In Germany and Great Britain there are about 20,000 men in a division and 40,000 in an army corps. In the German organization a division of infantry is made up of two brigades, a brigade of two regiments, a regiment of six battalions. A cavalry division is composed of three brigades of two regiments each and two or three batteries of horse artillery.—New York Times.

Bowser Gets A Sure Tip

But He Loses His Money Just the Same

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1912, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mr. Bowser never comes home to his lunch. If he feels in need of one at midday he goes out to a restaurant. Therefore, the other day, when he came home at 12 o'clock and found Mrs. Bowser with cap and apron on sweeping the front hall she had a right to be surprised and to call out:

"Why, Mr. Bowser, are you home at this hour?"

"S-s-s-h!" he whispered as he walked down to the sitting room and beckoned for her to follow. "I don't want Maggie, the cook, to hear a word of what I am going to tell you. I have got a big thing on, and the man who put me wise would hardly consent for me to tell you. We have got $100 in the house, haven't we?"

"Yes, but—but"—

"Haven't we?" persisted Mr. Bowser.

"Yes," she replied, "but what of it? You are not going to buy a new milk cow, are you?"

"Mrs. Bowser, here is the case," he said, holding up a warning finger for her to keep her voice down. "You have long known what I have thought about horse racing. I never saw a horse race in my life, and I never have bet on one. I have considered it a most disgraceful thing. I have raised my voice against it and have advocated that it should be done away with for the good of the public at large."

"WE TALKED AND TALKED."

"Yes; I know," whispered Mrs. Bowser.

"But something happened this morning to change me all over. I sat at my desk reading the morning paper when I absently turned to the sporting page. There were accounts of three or four horse races, but I had not read one of them when a stranger came in, and I laid down the paper. After a short conversation with the stranger he informed me that he was engaged in missionary work among the heathens of Africa. He was home on a leave of absence. The heathens in his district had expressed their strong desire for baseball, golf, poker and other civilized things, and he had come home to solicit contributions to the end that they might acquire them. Anything that would civilize and progress them would be of benefit to the whole world. You know, Mrs. Bowser, I was never stuck on the African heathen."

"No," she replied. "I have often heard you say that you would never subscribe a cent for his benefit."

"Yes; I have said he could go to for all of me, but my views were changed almost in a moment. I was about to make some decided remarks to the stranger when his eye caught the paper I had been reading, and he picked it up and said:

"'This is a very curious coincidence. I had horse racing in my mind when I came in here, and, lo, you have been reading about it. At my hotel this morning I overheard one man say to another that a horse named Buttercup in the New Orleans races, which are to be run today, would be sure to come in ahead of anything, and yet she would be a 100 to 1 shot in the betting. Why shouldn't we make a little money for the heathen, Mr. Bowser? For has not Providence flung this thing in our faces that we might aid a downtrodden race to lift themselves up? We invest a dollar, and we get $100 in return. Nobody is at all injured, and hundreds of the heathens are benefited.'

"Think of it, Mrs. Bowser—100 to 1 and we are dead sure of it. By John, but luck is surely knocking at the door!"

"You let that man talk you over, did you?" demanded Mrs. Bowser.

"Why, we talked and talked, and the more we talked the more I was obliged to view matters from his standpoint. He convinced me that horse racing was not criminal and that I must have lost thousands of dollars by not placing bets. He also convinced me that the heathen were good fellows, but were misunderstood by the public, and in ten minutes he had satisfied me that I could not do too much for them."

"Bosh!" exclaimed Mrs. Bowser.

"Keep your voice down, dear. I told you this was an awful secret which must not be betrayed. The result of all our talk was that each of us should bet a hundred dollars on Buttercup and punish the bookmakers and benefit the heathen at one and the same time. We invest a hundred dollars apiece, and we draw down $10,000 each. He returns to Africa with every cent of his money to supply the wants of the heathens, and I give you a thousand dollars of my winnings to buy yourself silk stockings. I use the other $9,000 to buy us a country home and an auto. Where have you got the hundred dollars, Mrs. Bowser?"

"Mr. Bowser," she said after a look at him, "you are being made a tool of—a chump—a come-on, as they call it. It is a regular put up job, and you will lose every dollar you risk."

"Woman, don't you credit me with having any brains?" he almost shouted. "I am not an idiot for a designing villain to toy with. Our winnings are just as sure to come as tomorrow's sun is to rise. If you do anything to obstruct our scheme I shall never forgive you. A hundred to one, and as sure as shooting. Think of it, Mrs. Bowser—think of it!"

Before Mrs. Bowser could answer Maggie, the cook, who had been dutifully listening at the foot of the basement stairs, came running up to exclaim, "Oh, Mr. Bowser, make some money for me!"

"Maggie!" chided Mrs. Bowser.

"But, ma'am, you wouldn't stand in the way of a poor girl making $1,000?" was wailed by the cook. "Think of how hard I have to work for my money, and think of my going home to my poor widowed mother and dropping $1,000 in her lap and telling her to buy a whole department store. Mr. Bowser, I want you to put up $10 for me. I have got that much in my trunk upstairs."

"I will do it, Maggie," answered Mr. Bowser. "You are also a game sport and shall be given a fair show. Get your money here and, Mrs. Bowser, you hand me over the hundred for the missionary is waiting for me up on the corner."

Mrs. Bowser opened her mouth to make further protests, but the odds were 2 to 1, and she said no more. Maggie ran upstairs and got her money, and the hundred dollars was taken from the machine drawer and with all the wealth safe in his pocket Mr. Bowser hurried away from the house. The missionary was leaning against an iron fence on the corner, and his solemn face lighted up as Mr. Bowser came up with a smile.

"You got it?" he asked.

"Sure," was the reply.

"Then we will go along. I am anxious to see my work among the heathen advance as soon as possible. While you were absent at your house I went over the thing in my mind and I could not see where plucking the bookmakers for the benefit of our dark skinned fellow men could possibly be construed as wrong."

"It can't be," replied Mr. Bowser—"it can't be. It is a wonder to me that I ever held the ideas that I did, and I shall never return to them. I may even take one day a week off and go up and see the races. I may even wager a few dollars on a horse that's not more than a 10 to 1 shot. Let us go to what they call a pool room and place our money and make a start on the road to wealth. Let me also think of the African heathen."

Mr. Bowser had heard of pool rooms, but he had never entered one. In fact, he had never gazed at the outer side of one. He therefore allowed the missionary to take the lead, and the said missionary seemed to have the utmost confidence in his abilities as a guide.

In due time a pool room was discovered and their money placed on Buttercup at the odds mentioned. When this had been accomplished Mr. Bowser and his friend took seats to wait for news from the racetrack. While they waited they nudged each other. They also made a clucking noise with their tongues. They likewise bestowed beaming smiles on each other. Buttercup was in the first race, and they had not long to wait for the voice of the caller making his announcement as to the progress of the contest. Buttercup was announced in various positions from first to third, but, strange to relate, did not finish first, second or third. She may have stopped somewhere to look at the landscape, or she may have fallen and broken her neck. Such trifles are seldom mentioned in a well organized pool room. Mr. Bowser and his missionary friend chuckled and smiled as the race progressed and then sat in a daze, and it was one of the pool room men who had to jog them back into life again by saying:

"Come, now, you ducks, get out of here. The race has been lost by your horse, and there is nothing more to be said about it. What induced you to put your money on an old skate like her?"

Mr. Bowser and the missionary parted at the door. There were no farewell words between them. Where the missionary went to is of no account, but Mr. Bowser took a car for his home. Mrs. Bowser and the cook were waiting for him when he entered the house.

"Gimme my thousand dollars, Mr. Bowser!" exclaimed the cook.

"And give me mine," added Mrs. Bowser.

Mr. Bowser drew himself up like a man who had determined to fight desperately for his life, but from his half open lips no words issued. He gasped once or twice and then fell at full length on the floor and rolled his eyes and shuddered. It was only then that the women knew that the 100 to 1 shot had pierced his noble heart.

A Singular Case of Resurrection

By F. A. MITCHEL

The investigators of the Rockefeller institute may be very proud of themselves. Indeed, they have reason to be. They have substituted live parts of the human body for dead parts; they have set heart substance beating outside its proper place in a man's breast. If they keep on they may in time make a man out of parts of other men. But if the stories of what Indian fakirs have done in keeping persons alive in a comatose condition for many years is true these Rockefellers or scientific fellers or whatever they are have yet much to learn from an antique and apparently undeveloped civilization.

There is a story going the rounds among the undergraduates of a certain university which, if it can be substantiated, puts the modern scientific investigator to shame. Arnold Gereau, assistant professor of chemistry—he has charge of the laboratory—is one of those phenomena who spring up once in a century. He is very young, and it is well known that he was born with certain mental powers, a certain supernatural knowledge of things on which many a man has studied for a lifetime without making any progress whatever.

Willbur Stockbridge, a member of the class of '15, so the story goes, one day went to Professor Gereau with a yellow bit of paper on which was written in old English style:

This is the body of William Arbuckle, private in his majesty's —th foot. Captured in the patriot lines with maps showing our fortifications on the upper part of Manhattan Island. He was condemned for a spy. An Indian serving with the same regiment—he had joined it at Singapore—proposed to General Washington to put the man to sleep for an indefinite period instead of executing him. The general, who was averse to the execution, consented, and Arbuckle was turned over to the Indian, who claims that any time after fifty or even a hundred years life will still be in the body. But not one man in many millions will be able to effect a resurrection.

Young Stockbridge told the professor that in excavating for building purposes on the upper part of Manhattan Island on property owned by his family a tomb had been discovered containing the body of a man in British uniform of a former period. The paper had been found in the lead coffin in which the body had been buried.

Gereau—mind you, I don't vouch for this—arranged with the student to bring the find to the laboratory, which at the time was closed on account of the spring recess and would therefore be at the professor's individual disposal. No one has attempted to give the process by which Gereau manipulated the remains of Private Arbuckle, but it is claimed that he effected a resurrection. The professor avers that he worked on lines which are being followed by modern scientific investigators. He must have had an inkling of the method by which animation was suspended by the Indian or he would not have been able to restore it by reverse action, which, he says, he applied. He gives as a fundamental principle that the Indian knew how to suspend—not kill—the action of the heart, and Gereau restored the pulsations, which are the basis of animal life.

Whether the story is true or false there is one part of it that fits in with modern scientific investigation. It is said that Gereau found that certain members of the body had suffered from the long suspension of their functions. The resurrected man showed signs of decay, and the professor feared that, though he had remained in an ordinary condition of health for more than 130 years, he would die within a few hours after resurrection.

A test was begun of different organs, and the first tested—the kidneys—showed decay. Gereau at once telephoned to the College of Physicians and Surgeons for a pair of sound kidneys and, removing the ones affected, introduced the new ones. He supposed for some time that Arbuckle had died under the operation, but half a bottle of Irish whisky brought him round. The liver was next tackled, and half of it replaced. There were other parts to be substituted, but those mentioned were the principal replacements.

These operations required several hours, and another hour passed before Private Arbuckle spoke. Then he opened his eyes and cried out in a voice that seemed to come through dry leather:

"Corporal of the guard!"

Gereau was delighted. It looked as if he might save his patient, for while the man had doubtless been deanimated in good health his being brought back to consciousness was not only a difficult matter, but a dangerous one.

There are several versions of the rest of the story. Some say that Arbuckle was sufficiently restored to remember and speak of his expected execution. Others aver that Gereau, finding his breathing defective, worked his arms vigorously, but in spite of his efforts the man died.

It is said that at one time Arbuckle sat up and was given a stiff drink. Raising the glass he shouted in a horn-like voice:

"To his gracious majesty King George. God bless him and confound his rebellious subjects!"

Stockbridge and Gereau have both been asked to make a statement, but have refused either to affirm or deny the story. It is suspected that they are afraid of coming under the ban of the law, which might involve them in a charge of murder.

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Blouse of Figured Crepe.

This simple blouse of figured crepe, taken from a multitude of smart models, ranks first because of its daintiness and chic.

For smart effect nothing exceeds the separate blouse of figured crepe or chiffon. It is used in effective fashion to develop this design, trimmed with soft satin ribbon, insertion and edging. The satin ribbon extends all the way around the blouse while the insertion and edging finish the collar, sleeves and front of the waist.

In medium size the design requires 2 yards 44-inch material, with 1¼ yard satin ribbon (any desired width), 5 yards edging and 5½ yards insertion. If the waist material is very sheer, the satin may be sewed on the reverse side, to show through.

Before attempting to put the waist together, the home dressmaker should carefully study the construction guide. Begin by gathering the shoulder edge of the front between double "TT" perforations. Then close the underarm and shoulder seams as notched. Gather the lower edge of the front and back between double "TT" perforations. Sew stay to lower edge of blouse, center-backs even, small "o" perforation in stay at under-arm seam; and bring front edge to center-front; fold stay through center and fell remaining edge over seam. Insert elastic (the required length) through the stay.

The collar may be added now. Simply sew to the neck edge, notches and center backs even. The collar should be trimmed before added to the waist.

To make the elbow sleeve, cut off pattern on small "o" perforation. Close seam, stitch band of insertion along lower edge over the hem and add the edging. Sew sleeve in armhole, easing in any fulness.

When adding the satin (or lace may be substituted, if preferred) stitch along crossline of small "o" perforations in front and back. Sheer organdy used for the collar is very dainty.

HOW TO CROCHET A PRETTY SILK PURSE.

Material required: Half ounce crochet silk, dark green or red, 1 hank steel or gold beads, No. 10, steel crochet hook, No. 18. Make a chain (ch) of 35. Work 1 treble crochet (tc) 1 ch into the 4th ch from the hook. Repeat with 3 ch and work * 1 tc, 1 ch into each space between the tc stitches of last row and repeat from * to end of row. Work 5 more of these rows, break off the silk and make a second piece to correspond. In the 8th row of the second stitch join to the first with a single stitch and commence to work around with 3 ch. Work 8 rounds in the same manner, joining each with a single stitch. At the place where the two sides are joined one will be higher than the other. After the 4th round is joined work one round thus: * 3 d c, 4 ch, miss 3, repeat from * to end of round; end 1 dc. Break off thread and string the beads on to the silk with which you will continue.

From this point you will begin the beading. The rounds of beading are worked * 1 d c into the last stitch of the group of chain of previous round, 1 d c into the next d c, leaving 1 d c of last round not worked into; repeat from * all around. This will make a diagonal strip of solid crochet. For working in the beads draw the silk through once in each d c, then draw a bead close up to the hook before finishing the stitch. The beads will be on the inside of the work, i. e., on the opposite to that on which you are working, and will follow the diagonal strip. Work 13 rounds in this way and then 2 rounds of 3 ch, 2 d c, 1 round of 2 ch, 2 d c, 1 round of ch, 1 d c and draw up for the end of purse. When finished turn the beading side outward. Sew the two sides of the mouth on a pair of crossbars with a ring and drop for the other end of the purse.

FOR THE HORSEWOMAN.

How to Ride Horseback Even If You Aren't a Cowboy.

In riding sit erect and don't slouch along. Don't try to be a cowboy if you are not. We have the real simon pure cowpunchers and broncho busters, also we have the tinhorn variety of the same species. Steer clear of the latter; also be careful not to get into this category yourself.

Remember that a horse is only flesh and blood and not an auto. He gets tired and thirsty, and for goodness sake treat him accordingly. Because he is a livery horse and you are paying his hire treat him white just the same. Remember that some one else rode him yesterday and another will probably do so tomorrow. Give your horse the same kind of a deal you yourself would demand if you were in its place; even a broncho has "feelin's" and will appreciate your thoughtfulness.—Outlook.

SMART NEW HATS AND FIXINGS

New York—If one possesses a good looking tailor-made from last Fall's outfit it is quite possible to use it to advantage, with smart new accessories that draw attention to themselves and the wearer rather than to the costume. Care and attention given to the selection of smart small belongings are worth while for up-to-dateness in minor points often counts very large in the sum total of one's appearance.

New Bags

One smart shop here reports sending a buyer on a flying trip to Paris lately, just to secure the last thing in bags, blouses and neck fixings, and the way the women surround these counters in that particular place bears witness to the worth whileness of their effort. Beaded bags are first favorites for dress wear. Some of them done in steel on dark silk or leather, suit any time of day while others suggest the vivid color creations of the famous Russian Ballet, which is again entrancing the eye of the Metropolis. Nothing is too elegant or gorgeous to pose as a bag, and no accessory adds more in effectiveness if well worn, but relieves the sombreness or monotony of a costume more gratefully, but used with a fussy background such articles cease to be smart or attractive.

Neck Fixings and Pelerines

Collars have become capes or fichus in the newest dispensation, have assumed the hues of the rainbow, and added to themselves vests in many instances. Chin-chin ruffs continue modish and nearly meet the small turban shapes with which type of hat they usually go best.

Spanish influence is no doubt responsible for the mantillas and pelerines that have broken out in every deluge of taffeta fabrics, in colors so dainty and folds so voluminous that they are a joy to the eye.

For general wear these garments are made up in black, which goes with anything anywhere, but for wear with fussy frocks no color is too delicate, and changeables are to the fore again. Faille and satin are used for long coats that cover the costume where a bit more warmth is demanded and trimmings of marabout are favorites with these.

Pagodas

With the introduction of the Chinese note in this season's fashions, pagoda suggestions are prominent in hats and parasols. The latter come in many ribbed forms and are quite as apt to be square as circular, and duplex rather than single. as are many of the hats with trimmings nestled under the overhanging part. Chin straps and long ends of ribbon or velvet, or tulle, hang from the back of the hat or are disposed about the throat at the whim of the wearer; and many of these ends are ornamented with small nosegays or other devices.

Spanish Combs and Fans

To go with Spanish motifs in dress design, huge combs adorn the coiffure and the fan assumes unusual importance. A fan of white ostrich feathers held flat against the frame has little tips fluffing softly at intervals, the long wooden handle finished with a small rosette in silk of vivid color. Another has a handle of yellow tortoise shell and natural peacock feathers and is set with brilliants.

Tulle scarfs, just two yards, cut off the piece unhemmed, are worn by everyone in the evening and fashion points to the coming of the straight heeled Spanish shoe.

GUESTROOM COMFORT.

Simple Things to Do to Make Guests Feel at Home.

A few dollars spent now and again in making our guestrooms comfortable are not spent amiss. Everybody knows how uncomfortable one can be in a badly furnished bedroom, and everybody knows how difficult it would be to complain to one's hostess that there were not bedclothes enough, that there was no soap, that the springs creaked, that the windows rattled or that anything else about the room one slept in as a guest was uncomfortable. It is up to the hostess herself to know that her guestrooms are comfortable.

At the country house of a fashionable hostess the guests were asked after a week end party to write criticisms of their rooms. The reading of the criticisms brought much entertainment to everybody concerned and suggested a custom that might bring advantages to guests, if not to hostesses. But so long as this custom is not in force, look to the comfort of the rooms you ask your guests to sleep in. The best way to do this is to sleep in each room, and then you will know whether or not it is really comfortable and if it is not what to do to make it so.

See to it that your beds are well supplied with covers. In each room have an extra supply of blankets in a box at the foot of the bed or on a closet shelf.

A cushion or two on the foot of the bed covered with washable covers that can be slipped under a hollow in a tired back or under an aching head should be in every guestroom.

Some sort of bedside light is a great convenience, so that the tired guest may go early to bed and read there or the wakeful one may have light in the night.

A box containing a few crackers is never amiss by the bedside. Many times wakefulness can be conquered with a slowly munched biscuit.

A hot water bag filled on a cold night when the guest retires also gives great comfort. There should always be cool drinking water at hand too. Writing materials should be offered either in the bedroom or in the library or living room. A screen to shield the bed from drafts is another thoughtful addition to the guestroom equipment.

Yawning.

Yawning is a peculiar act and one that has never yet been properly accounted for. It is not by any means a sign of fatigue only, although it is sometimes produced by overexertion. But an attack of yawning comes on much more quickly if one is intensely bored, and certainly a stuffy atmosphere tends to produce it. It is also noticeable that when one has gone considerably past one's mealtime the tendency to yawn frequently becomes irresistible. A very peculiar feature of this complaint is its infectiousness; one person can easily set half a dozen all yawning in turn. When present in a very marked extent it is supposed to be the outcome of anaemia, indigestion or some other complaint.

HOME ECONOMICS.

Some Modern Ideas About Everyday Problems.

PARTNERSHIP IS THE IDEA.

How Financial Relations In Households May Be Arranged to Meet Practical Demands; Also the Basic Elements of Good Taste In Dressing.

[Prepared by Kansas State Agricultural college.]

"Home economics means more than just cooking and sewing. It is really a social study which meets the needs of the people and solves their problems," says Miss Helen Halm, instructor in home economics in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"This study is one of the greatest of the day. More persons are becoming interested in this work and are desirous of finding out its real significance. The teaching of home economics is being made more interesting, as the work is being vitalized—that is, connected with the study of the human side of life."

The home should be made a business proposition. Husband and wife should form a business partnership and should be fully qualified to meet the demands made upon them, both remembering that money well spent is money well earned. In this new education that is beginning to hold up its head for recognition a man will be taught that he can never hold the love and respect of his wife unless there is to be established the proper financial relation between them.

Individuality, simplicity and quality of material are elements that must be considered by the girl who aspires to be well dressed, in the judgment of Miss I. Florence Hunt, assistant in domestic art in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"Too much stress cannot be placed on the importance of developing good taste," says Miss Hunt. "Good taste includes color, line, form, material and suitability to the occasion upon which the dress is worn. Dresses for school, business or street wear or for dress affairs should, of course, be distinctive.

"Then the costume must be suited to the individual according to line and form. A tall person cannot wear the same style as the one of shorter stature. The same principles also apply to materials used.

"The study of color harmony is made practical by combining samples of materials and designing appropriate costumes. There are materials which will not combine well and colors that should not be used together. Another problem is the study of the design principles—the relation of rhythm, balance and harmony to dress."

FRITTERED HOURS.

Why One Woman Has a Career and Another Hasn't.

HOW VALUABLE TIME FUGITS.

What Does the Housewife Do With Her Leisure?—Play Bridge, Go to Teas, Chit Chat Over the Telephone or Build Up a Career?

"Oh, but I must wash on Monday!" exclaims the methodical housewife.

"Of course we must have a hot dinner on Sunday noon. We've always had it."

And so it goes. The average housekeeper is quite convinced that things must be done as they always have been done and that she must spend a certain amount of time (registered only in her own mind) on certain household tasks. She may wonder why other women seem to have more time, when others in fact have a "career" on the side, when it takes her every minute of her waking hours merely to manage the home. Now, if there is one fault greater than others which we lay against women in their present state we would say it is lack of power to concentrate. How we can "fritter time away!"

The sole reason for difference between these two women is undoubtedly that the former could concentrate and that she had in mind something over and beyond her housework worthy of that concentration. She wanted to take the subscriptions, she wanted to develop as her husband's bookkeeper, she wanted to find time to be her children's companion. So she studied and shortened her work and concentrated, thinking of the most important ends first and not putting undue prominence on the details.

Any woman, yes, any homemaker, even with children, can do something outside of her home if she really wants to. We have no patience with a fairly wide circle of ladies who grumble that other women have careers or work outside the home and that they cannot. The chances are that they are not willing to make the sacrifices necessary—to stride both horns of a career and matrimony. They may not be willing, for instance, to give up an excess of telephoning to friends, gossip and chit chat. They may not be willing to spend far fewer hours running from shop to shop looking for a waist 50 cents lower and spending in doing it three valuable hours in which at concentrated work they could certainly have earned several dollars. They may not be willing to give up an undue amount of amusement and social life which eats more time out of the average woman's day than any one has estimated. We all want to be neighborly and to have friends, but that does not mean telephoning for an hour after breakfast to find out what So-and-so wore or what she said or where they are going.

Several women with children have met success in work outside of the home and at the same time managed to build up a beautiful family life. One woman with three little children has managed to support the entire family when the husband was crippled. Another, with two children and a baby, finds she can devote at least three hours a day to literary work. Another has sent children through college by representing a magazine, and in no case was the home neglected.

How to Make a Unique Dust Cloth For the "Shower."

The next time you are invited to a novelty shower in honor of a bride to be or a bachelor girl who is getting ready for a two room apartment have ready a two in one gift. By this is meant a duster and glove combined. Buy a piece of cheesecloth measuring twelve inches square and then get another about eight inches square. Featherstitch the smaller to the larger piece, allowing one side to remain unattached. Trace the outline of some one's right hand on the little piece of cheesecloth and stitch along the lines directly through the two pieces. By slipping the hand in the fingers thus formed the neat little housekeeper can dust her furniture and protect her hand with the one article.

Should this gift seem insufficient you might make a bag of dark green calico. Make it fifteen inches long and nine inches wide. Finish it with a casing and run green tape through it. Across the front of it outline the word "Duster" with yellow cotton.

How to Make Clam Broth That Is Delicious For Luncheons.

A delicious clam broth may be easily prepared by the following methods: Scrub and rinse the whole clams until the shells are bright and clean. Place on the bottom of the cook pot, hinge side up and close together. Cover about half the height of the clams with cold water and bring to the boil, when the clams will open and discharge their juices. Strain and serve. A little pepper and butter will improve the flavor.

Break the egg into an ordinary glass tumbler. Place a piece of clean tissue paper on the top. Hold it firmly down all round to keep out the air. Place the other hand on the top of the paper and shake the tumbler vigorously two or three times. The egg is then ready to use without any further effort and is as well beaten as if whipped for ten minutes.

How to Make Quince Marmalade For Breakfast Rolls.

Serviceable and Stylish Coat.

Presented in this model is a jaunty coat in novelty serge. It is belted and trimmed with fancy buttons, collar and cuffs being of self-material.

When a coat is both smart and serviceable, it answers the needs of the well-dressed woman. This model in novelty serge is well worth reproducing for the spring wardrobe. It is made with one-piece raglan sleeves, finished with turn-back cuffs. The front turns back to form revers, above which is a collar of self-material. This, however, may be inlaid with silk of contrasting color.

In medium size the coat requires 3½ yards 54-inch material. If desired, the front of the coat may be slashed and a wing pocket inserted. With the pocket omitted, however, the first step is to adjust the underfacing to position underneath the front, corresponding edges even. Then take up a dart in sleeve as perforated. Sew sleeve to armhole, edges of front and back as notched; close under-arm and sleeve seams as notched, leaving an opening 3¼ inches long at under-arm seam, below waistline to pass the belt through. Turn the hem under at lower edge of sleeve on small "o" perforations. If sleeve is desired with cuff, cut off lower edge ⅝ inch below crossline of small "o" perforations. Close cuff seam as notched, sew to lower edge of sleeve, large "O" perforations and seams even.

Slip the belt through opening at underarm seam to the small "o" perforations in belt. The length of the belt may be regulated to suit the taste of the wearer.

If the collar is inlaid with silk or satin, add this trimming before facing the collar. Then sew to neck edge, notches and center-backs even.

DECISION WENT AGAINST GREEN

Not Because of Poor Work on His Part---But There's Always Uncertainty in Life.

A chance blow which "Kid" Fay landed on the jaw of "Young" Green of this city in the last round of a preliminary go to the Langford-M'Vey match at the arena last night robbed the local youngster of the decision in an interesting bout of four rounds in which Green outboxed the Syracusan and placed himself in the favor of the fans by his showing of speed and gameness.

Excepting for the first thirty seconds in the first round and the last half minute of the final round Green prevented his opponent from striking a blow by continually beating Fay to the punch. Fay started off in the first round with a rush and being much stronger it appeared as though the local boy would not last the round. But Green in earnest and lacking his usual smile carried the fight to Foy with such effect that Fay was constantly on the defensive in all four rounds. A wild swing by Fay in the fourth round landed square on Green's jaw dazzing him. Green had to back to the ropes annd clinch in order to save himself.

"Kid" Cotton, a noted heavyweight of M'Vey's camp was visibly impressed with the speed shown by Green but did not like the idea of thel ocal boy using training camp tactics in striking with his open glove.

Cloyton Lucas, of Phoenix, was another youngster whose tactics were too polite. Lucas like Green being a novice in the ring before the public failed to get the decision in his bout with "Young" Bill Le Grange because of his parlor method of breaking from the clinches.

Three cars carried the Fulton and Phoenix contingent back to their homes instead of the one car leaving Syracuse at 11:30. Practically all of the men from these places were drawn to the Arena by the main attraction between the two colored heavyweights who staged a wonderful draw.

BOGUE'S FAITH IN THE CYCLE

"With a couple of machine guns mounted on motorcycle sidecars the United States troops at Columbus, New Mexico, could have made that town so hot for the Villa bandits that mighty few of them would have ever gotten back across the border to Mexico again," said James Bogue today.

"The United States government has awakened to an appreciation of the value of the motorcycle and I predict that the time will not be far distant when motorcycles will be in general use by machine gun companies.

"For fast work in close quarters under conditions such as existed at Columbus or out in the open country in operating against cavalry the motorcycle by reason of its speed, power and flexibility has a great advantage. But two men are required—one to run the motorcycle and the other to operate the gun.

"The short radius in which a machine gun is mounted on a sidecar chassis can be turned around makes it especially adaptable for quelling a riot or stopping a raid in a city. Just imagine for a moment what a couple of such outfits could have done to Villa's bandits that night in Columbus. They could have poured a stream of lead down every street in such rapid succession that the Mexican outlaws who escaped the first fire would have had no alternative but to flee to the open country.

"And before they could have made a start on the three miles they had to go to reach the border they could have been overtaken by the motorcycles and completely annihilated with the machine guns. With Villa back in the region with which he is familiar—160,000 square miles of wild mountainous country—it will be a hard job to put an end to the depredations of his outlaws. Gen. Funston is the man for the job alright but had there been a couple of motorcycle machine guns ovailable at Columbus that particular night there would have been a quick ending of the so-called Mexican problem."

Oath That Binds the Burmese.

Perjury having been rife in Rangoon courts because no form of oath existed which the Burman considered binding, the government prescribed a formula which is a queer admixture of Buddhism, Brahmanism and Shamanism. Here are phrases from it, picked at random: "If an untruth passes my lips, may all the gnats that live in lakes, ponds and brooks and the gnats of the five great rivers of India destroy me. May curdled blood pass my lips rather than a lie, and may I die vomiting blood, my body bent in two."

Evidently In Love.

"I told that boy," remarked the teacher, "to remain after school and write some word 100 times. But I don't think it was any great punishment."

"Why not?"

"I noticed that he wrote the word 'Rosie' 100 times with an ecstatic smile."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

CHINESE PRINTING.

Queer Old Ancient Methods Are Still Used by Many Natives.

Chinese hold that the art of printing was discovered in China about fifty years before the Christian era. Until the discovery of the art of paper making, A. D. 95, they printed on silk or cloth cut in the form of leaves. The method employed to this day by many native Chinese printers is substantially as follows:

No printing press is used. The delicate nature of the Chinese paper will not admit of it. When the blocks are engraved, the paper is cut and the ink is ready one man with his brush prints a large number of sheets in a day. The block to be printed must be placed perfectly level and secured firmly. The printer has two brushes, one of them stiffer than the other, which he can hold in his hand and use at either end. He dips it into the ink and rubs the block with it, taking care not to moisten it too much or leave it too dry. If it were wetted too much the characters would be blurred; if too little they would not print.

When once the block is got into the proper condition he can print three or four impressions without dipping the brush into the ink again.

The second brush is used to rub over the paper with a small degree of pressure that it may take the impression. This it does easily, for, not being sized with alum, it receives the ink the instant it comes in contact with it.

It is only necessary that the brush should be passed over every part of the sheet with a greater or smaller degree of pressure and repeated in proportion as the printer finds there is more or less ink upon the block.—Los Angeles Times.

KEEP GOING UP.

One who climbs a steep hill seldom fails, however laborious the climbing may be, while the man who runs down a hill, easy though the path, often comes to grief.—Ekken.

So He Would.

The keeper was feeding the pythons. Several live rabbits were tossed into the cage and were immediately and greedily seized by the reptiles. The struggling rabbits, although seemingly almost as large as the snakes, were swallowed whole one after another.

The ghastly sight prompted the scholarly looking man to exclaim, "Grewsome, eh, keeper?" The keeper turned a glance of scorn upon the professor.

"Yes, and you'd 'a' grew some. too, if you'd et all that live stock, I guess."

French Stop Attacks on Their New Line

Paris—The French evacuated the Bethincourt salient on Saturday night and the Germans today attacked with great violence their new line from Avocourt to Cumieres, but were repulsed with sanquinary losses. Only at one point, northeast of Avocourt, did the Germans succeed in entering the French trenches, and from this position they were immediately ejected through a counter attack, according to the French official communication issued tonight. During Saturday night French troops captured about one hundred and fifty metres of a German trench southwest of Douaumont village. Progress in communicating trenches south of the village also was reported. The Germans made two hand grenade attacks on French positions in the Caillette wood, in the Douaumont region, but both were repulsed.

The Bethincourt salient was a sharp angle of the French line that project into the German line of attack for a depth of about two miles.

Bethincourt was its apex, and a seven-mile line from Avoncourt on the west to Cumieres on the east, through the Mort Homme region, would form its base.

It has beenc alled the "sack." The German drives in this sector have been to close the mouth of the sack and bag the French defenders. The assualt was not confined to the fittened angle, but extended with the utmost violence long the whole front on the west of the Meuse, with an artillery continuation on the east bank of the river clear to Douaumont and Vaux.

The center of the heaviest attacks, Momme front. Here the Germans once more resumed their mass formation, which they have to a degree abandoned for the past fortnight. According to the French reports, it was a fatal resumption for the dense columns were swept away by machine gun fire and the Germans were driven back, leaving hundreds of dead on thes lopes of the Cumieres wood.

Turks Send Many Battalions to Asia

Rome—According to information received at the Russian Embassy the Turks have succeeded in getting important reinforcements to Trebizond and Sivas. They are said to number eighty or ninety battalions with artillery.

The Germans supplied thousands of motor cars for the purpose. The arrival of the reinforcements explains the resistance of the Turks on the Asiatic front.

The feeding of the Turkish army continues a problem. Constant attempts are made to send food and material by sea, but few ships arrive, most of them being sunk by Russian submarines and destroyers. Since the beginning of March the Russians have destroyed a hundred Turkish vessels. The Turkish situation in Asia Minor has improved only for the moment, and the Russian advance will move irresistibly on.

BERLIN PAPER ATTACKS CENSOR

Berlin—The Vorwaerts today devotes its entire front page to a bitter attack on the socialist party caucus, because of its action in placing in the office of the Vorwaerts a censor to pass upon what the paper shall print and to curb the sympathies of the Vorwaerts for the seceding socialists.

"That to the pressure of the military censorship," says the Vorwaerts, "there should be added a party censorship is at least the equal of and really surpasses it in severity, is one of thed isgusting experiences of this superlatively bitter time."

The action of the socialist caucus is characterized by the Vorwaerts as unheard of in party, whose basis is democracy.

In every third paragraph the Vorwaerts disputes the legality of the decree, saying that the members of the party have not come to ap oint where they can be shut off from criticism of all kinds by ad ecree of the caucus. The article bristles with such phrases as "dictatorial terrorism," "oppression of journalistic duties" and "restriction of publicopinion." The newspaper concludes with an appeal to the sense of justice of the party members to remove the censorship.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

No charge made for this space.

Yesterday noon we heard a leader of men say there was hardly any enthusiasm in the State of New York. This is true, but there is a chance for betterment. We have found out in the last two months that the Eastern man will pick up enthusiasm just as the Western man will, with one difference, that the Eastern man is a little slower and first wants to be shown. There is nothing greater in this world of ours than enthusiasm. When a person throws a good dose of enthusiasm in any work, he is bound to succeed. This goes for all classes of work, religious, commercial, civic, agricultural and industrial. The more ginger you put in your work, the better you will succeed. There is a remarkable increase in the display of enthusiasm in the city of FULTON especially amongst the younger element and we hope to work so well that the older men and women will fall in line.

We wish to compliment the street department of the city with the very excellent work it has done in the last week. The city is now looking very neat as far as the streets go in the center and it would indeed be a great thing, if the citizens would help to clean the other streets up. It will only take about five minutes every day and the result will be marvelous.

Have you paid your dues? Did you live up to your word? Do you belong to the class of people, we can depend upon? Do you always live up to your promises or are you a deadbeat?

Spring seemingly has arrived. That should be an inducement for every one of us to live better, to work harder, to make a success out of any and everything we undertake.

The greatest clean-up campaign FULTON has ever seen will start May 8th and will finish May 12th. Watch the town be the cleanest one in the State of New York.

We are especially calling on the ladies in FULTON to assist in this clean-up campaign. Women know more about cleaning as a general rule than men and we shall therefor take the liberty to appoint a very strong ladies' committee.

The second concert of the FULTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is going to be the banner bearer of concerts given in this city. In fact it is going to be the biggest event yet.

Let us work together in doing away with the speeding of the automobiles in the city. Some men seem to think that they can use the highways and byways of our good city as a race track. There is no earthly use in speeding; in the first place you are a danger to the community; in the second place you can't enjoy your trip, and in the third place you are liable to kill someone.

We have supplied a large number of men with positions the last few days. If you want any kind of help or if you are looking for work, call on the Chamber of Commerce, the clearing house for everything.

It has been said that a few fellows delight in talking about matters that are of no interest to any one; matters that are not even worth mentioning. Those who talk that way, need a brain doctor.

We have often wondered why an intelligent man can talk about little petty things, as if the country's glory was at stake.

American Advance Has Not Overtaken Villa

El Paso—Francisco Villa and two hundred men, all equipped with fresh mounts, crossed Friday the branch line of the Mexican National Railways, eighteen miles east of Parral, camped that night at Las Cuevas, on the Rio Florida, and the following morning went west toward Magistral, a mining camp in Durango, six miles from El Oro.

Villa was a full day ahead of the American cavalry, which arrived at Parral Saturday afternoon. His ultimate destination is believed to be Durango City, where the notorious Arrieta brothers have three thousand well armed men, and who bear neither Carranza nor the United States any good will.

This news, written in code and concealed on the person of a Mexican despatch bearer, reached herel ate last night.

According to a report from General Pershing to General Funston the Mexican military authorities have offered the American expedition the use of Mexican telegraph and telephone lines.

Local officials in El Paso made representations today to the military authorities. Two infantry battalions were sent from Fort Bliss tonight to act asr eserves to thep atrols, who are on guard every night in thep roncipal streets here. The police officials said they fear trouble with Mexicans in Juarez.

The one real basis for any apprehension here that is discoverable si thef act that a number of Villstas and other representatives of the anti-American faction in Mexico are spreading the wildest reports among the peons and soldiers in Juarez in the hope of causing an outbreak.

Juarez is seething with the wierdest stories of the hostile intentions of the Americans, and rumors of great victories over the United States soldiers von by Villa. The Carranza officials are doing their best to suppress these stories.

Heavy Shipment Made of Supplies and Cash

Columbus, N. M.—American troops in Mexico will soon be equipped with new clothing to replace that torn into shreds in the strain of the campaign.

Shoes, hats, uniforms, sweaters and other apparel, valued at $100,000 were forwarded today.

With the clothing went a shipment of $250,000 in Mexican gold and silver coin to pay the soldiers. The soldiers, in foreign service draw 20 per cent additional.

The troops have had difficulty changing American money and for this reason Mexican coin was sent. Persistent rumors were current here today that a band of Mexicans had crossed the American border at Noria, about fifty miles east of Columbus, last Wednesday night. They went south into Mexico, it was reported, cutting fences as they were. Nothing could be learned at military headquarters concerning the reports.

Little was known at military headquarters here of the development of the campaign south of Satevo, but no uneasiness was expressed. Lieutenant-Colonel D. A. Cabell, expeditionary chief of staff, whoh as been at Colonia, Dublin, has gone to Namiquipa to establish a new field headquarters.

The Mexican military authorities have offered the American punitive expedition the use of Mexican telegraph and telephone lines, according to General Pershing's report to General Funstan today. The offer was made to the aviators who landed in Chilhuahua last week.

FORMER FULTONIAN SPOKE AT STATE STREET CHURCH

A former Fultonian, W. E. Flaxington, one of the live wires of the Syracuse Billy Sunday Business Men's Club gave an interesting talk before the congregation at the State street M. E. church last night. His talk was based on what the Sunday meetings did for Syracuse.

Mr. Flaxington's talk was enthusiastically received and his illustrations of the types of men who become converts were highly appreciated.

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—15

Monday, April 10, 1916.

The government has already provided a small but nevertheless important nucleus of the personnel of defense in the newly established coast guard. This body comprises about 300 commissioned officers and nearly 4,000 men, organized as a revenue cutter service and a life saving service. In wartime the guard is under orders of the navy department and also in peace times if the president so directs. The enlisted men are trained to seamanship and the officers thoroughly trained for their duties. Being well distributed geographically, the coast guard is admirably adapted to assist the work of coast defense and to organize and direct volunteer forces in time of need.

In the constitution of the United States, article 8, congress is empowered by section 15—

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions;

And by section 16—

To provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively the appointment of officers and the authority of training the militia under the discipline prescribed by congress.

Taken together these two sections seem to indicate that the United States constitution limits national control of the state troops to the time of insurrections and threatened invasions.

New York state has been setting a good example for nearly a year past in developing a reserve to her national guard. It will comprise retired or discharged members of the national guard who voluntarily enroll for drill. Uniforms and equipment will be provided, and a call to arms may find the active ranks increased by 50 per cent or more of the normal strength. The reserve companies and battalions will be attached to the regiments in which their members formerly served, and in this way the war strength may eventually be doubled by additions that fit in to the existing machine.

Competent and highly paid experts and inventors liberally supported by the great nations at war are developing the airship to the highest point of efficiency. The machines are doing feats and carrying burdens not dreamed of even six months ago. With the "airy navies" foretold by Tennyson actually grappling in the central blue peace should naturally bring to realization his dream of the "heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails," and so on.

If night schools can make good citizens out of raw aliens who labor all day, night drills should be equal to making passable soldier recruits out of husky young men whose day work consists of pushing a lead pencil or handling a yardstick.

The estimate for increase of population in the United States for 1915 is 1,617,000. But for the war immigration would have made the figures 2,500,000 without doubt.

China is buying our clocks. If the Celestials will take to moving by American time they may yet make Japanese pretensions to tutorship a byword.

If the navies of Europe smash one another up as the armies are doing America will easily be first without adding another ship.

THEY ALL LOOK ALIKE

Do you know how much free advertising is given your community projects by the newspapers? Of course you don't. There are not enough people who are curious about such matters. All they care about is to ask the paper man to "put a piece" in his paper—and these pieces, "nine times in ten, are not fifty-fifty; that is, if weighed they would sink the end of the advertising side of the scale clear out of sight. It is a hard problem to solve—that of expurgating from the columns of a newspaper reading matter which is more than one-half of advertising value only; or, in other words, to separate the wheat from the chaff. But the strangest feature of all, is the unwillingness of the average person to acknowledge that his or her "piece" contains no advertising. It may happen that the commercial organization of a town needs a lot of boosting; or, it may be that teacher wants to secure a music box for the entertainment of her pupils; and again, it may be that a church society will upon a certain date sell beautiful and useful homemade articles. In every instance the result is the same, viz: Telephone the newspapers, asking them to "please write up a nice piece" about the pet project. If the matter only ended at that point, but it does not. Some one will always remember that somebody else received a much nicer notice than somebody else has received. Somebody will remind the publisher that the commercial organization uses a lot more space in the newspaper than all the other organizations in a bunch, and that no charge is made for the space so used. Of course it is hard to understand why this is the case—why there should be any quibbling over free advertising sought by church, musical, fraternal and social circles, and an absence of questioning in the case of the commercial organization. There is no good solid reason for discrimination, one against another. The conditions should be cohesive, and so far as this newspaper is concerned they are coordinated. The Chamber of Commerce of this city gets free publicity in this newspaper. The many church and other societies receive the same courtesy; and why? the reader asks. Simply because of a desire to aid in every way consistent with business ethics the many projects of the city that are aimed in the direction of doing good.

Hence, for the benefit of critics of this newspaper's policy, let it be known that the Chamber of Commerce is not entitled to one whit more free advertising space than any other corporation, even though it saw fit to heap the office floor high with resolutions of appreciation for the assistance which we have given to it. Now, Mr. Critic, the remaining cheek is turned your away.

SERVICE

Service, store service, human service, should be of the higher impulse. It should be the natural expression of our better selves. Human service cannot drop to the level of mechanism. It is a mental and a moral plan; it does not mean pulleys, belts, shafts.

There is no class of service in this country that appeals to so many people as that of the department store. I am watching with unusual interest the daily advertisements of The Joslin Dry Goods Company of Denver on "service," on "selling," and the other human-interest ideas of interesting the individual customer.

Recently, in one of their advertisements, The Joslin Dry Goods people said: "When steel loses its temper it is of little use. When our salespeople lose their temper, they can be of small service to this store."

They acknowledge in their advertising that there is always room for righteous indignation, for a little dissatisfaction; but there is seldom, if ever, real reason for a member of their organization losing his or her temper.

This store is working with all its best energies to get the best results. They say, "There can be no good, but there can be a lot of evil, resulting from the loss of temper in store service." And then they add this significant sentence: "Hot words only add fuel to the flame."

In concluding one of their advertisements The Joslin Dry Goods people say: "Customers who trade here will have little if any reason to complain of the temper of our salespeople. The whole organization has the spirit of our slogan: 'The Store Accommodating.'

"Customers who come here will receive that genuine courtesy, that consideration, they so thoroughly understand and so thoroughly appreciate.

"Our salespeople cooperate with us on this plan of making friends. No sale is successful until the customer is satisfied. No trade is honest until the customer is treated with genuine respect."—The Silent Partner.

A SUFFRAGE VICTORY PREDICTED

Advancment of the woman suffrage amendment to third reading in the Senate by a vote of 29 to 13 is almost certain indication of its passage when it is taken up next week. For that all advocates of political equality without sex distinctions will rejoice. The woman suffrage workers have made a plucky fight this year under new and trying conditions. They deserve the success which apparently they have within their grasp.

It may be considered unfortunate that they have strayed out of "the sphere" which is theirs "by nature and consent of man," as Senator Brown felicitously puts it. But regardless of nature and the consent of man, hundreds of thousands of women each day are adventuring outside that "sphere" because they must, in order to live. If the vote, with its privileges and duties, means any advantage to the male who earns his own living and the living of others, by every standard of equality and fair dealing his sisters should have the same advantage.—N. Y. Tribune.

EXPLOITATION AND TAXES

That is a worth-while bill which Governor Whitman has signed, giving villages the right to appropriate moneys by vote of the people for the exploitation of the resources and advantages of the communities. There is no reason why villages should not set forth their wares just as merchants do. Boards of trade and chambers of commerce have exploited their communities. The boards of trade and chambers of commerce are maintained by the subscriptions of certain individuals. The benefits which acrue from their labors when along the lines of exploiting are beneficial to all property owners there. It is not to be said that chambers of commerce and boards of trade should bem aintained by tax on all the residents of the community, but there seems no valid reason why the exploitation of the advantages of the community should not be borne by the community at large. The plan is to enlarge the scope of the law to take in third class cities. If it is worth while for villages, it is also a thing to be recommended for cities. —Watertown Times.

GOLD BRICK OPINIONS

There are a lot of people who are willing to match their opinion and haphazard observation against the most scientific and painstaking record. There are people who will swear by the equinoctial storm, the influence of the moon on crops, the hazel stick method of finding the place to dig a well, and the fake weather prophet.

The element of mystery coupled with instances of corroboration make a powerful appeal. The mystery alone often is sufficient to make the opinion certain. The idea that a condition of the moon will make the newly planted seed grow better is so preposterous that it is attractive to the mind. Frequently enough the more unreasonable an idea is, the more apt a person is to say, "It may be so, for strange things happen." Belief and conviction is only a short step away. The mind and the way it works is a most remarkable study, and it is one of the youngest sciences.

Fake weather prophets sometimes get more credence than the Government Weather Bureau with all its observation stations and with all its experience. If the fake prophet can hit it once in a while, as any man can do if he is a master of ambiguity, and comes within a week of the fact, it is sufficient to secure him a considerable following.

Goldbrick opinions are far more common and have a much wider circulation than wildcat mining stock ever had. There is always a sad awakening to the owner of theg old brick, but a man can carry a worthless notion around for life and nourish it and cherish it and protect it from assault and interpret all facts in a way to support it. Everybody has such notions in one respect or another.

When the United States Government Bureau states that there is nothing to the new system of long-range weather forecasting founded on sun spots, it merely puts science up against one of the more recent notions that has grown up since sun spots became a common subject of conversation. It will require a long time for science to prevail over the notion, however, that sun spots control storms, and it doesn't matter if the storm hits one part of the State and is fair in another part, not to mention different weather over some millions of square miles of other lands.—Utica Observer.

LITTLE HOLLAND IS IN A TIGHT PLACE

Little Holland is in a tight place. Like the United States, she suffers under the aggressions of German submarine warfare and British disregard of international law and neutral rights. And, unlike our Government, the Dutch Government does not resent the aggressions of one Power and tamely submit to those of another.

Hollanders do not love Germany overmuch, but they hate England with a hatred fed by the memory of bitter wrongs. They have never forgotten the violation of their neutrality and the robbery of their territory as a result of Dutch protest against theh ighhanded treatment of neutral shipping by the British navy during our war for independence, nor the forcible partition of the Kingdom of Holland by England and France in 1839.

Both the German and British press seemed to be completely puzzled by Holland's sudden military preparation as if for immediate, actual war. And the governments are not giving out any information.

There are two plausible explanations, in the absence of exact knowledge.

One is that Germany desires to use the Scheldt as an outlet for marine attacks upon England.

The other is that England has secretly determined to violate the neutrality of Holland in order to invade Germany.

Apparently, it is this second danger which Holland suspects, or, perhaps, has reason to know is impending.

Americans of the sentimental type will doubtless refuse to believe that England would forcibly violate the neutrality of Holland, after insisting that she is waging war on Germany solely because of that Power's violation of the neutrality of Belgium. But the Dutch people are not of the sentimentalist type. They are a hard-headed folk who look facts in the face and do not work themselves up into a state of ecstatic admiration of the virtuous aims of any of their quarreling neighbors.

There is one thing certain. If either the British or the Germans attempt to violate Holland's territory and sovereignty, as they have violated the territory and soverignty of Bedgium and Greece they will know they have had a fight.

The brave little nation has its citizen armies and its dykes and it has shown the world more than once that it is able and ready to use both in defense of its rights and its existence.—N. Y. American.

HOW TO BUILD A BUNGALOW

There is probably nobody in this world who hasn't at some period in his career desired to own a bungalow. A bungalow is a long, low rakish looking house with a porch in front and an ash can behind. You get into it by going on your hands and knees and you crawl out backward, for there generally isn't room inside to turn around without upsetting $2 or $3 worth of furniture. The roof is so close to the floor that when you get into a bungalow you feel like a porcine portion of a ham sandwich.

One way to build a bungalow is to follow the advice of the magazines. According to them you can build a bungalow for any price from $4.50 up to $3 000,000, and you can go a little higher than the last named figure if you want to have plumbing in it.

The magazine recipe for a $4,50 bungalow is about as follows:

|---|---|
| Lumber | $1 01 |
| Brick | .39 |
| Paint | .10 |
| Carpenter work | .71 |
| Plastering | .96 |
| Tinwork | .65 |
| Heating | .39 |
| Extras | .29 |

Of course, it can be done a little cheaper by leaving out the roof and the sidewalks, but it seems as though anybody ought to be able to afford a bungalow at the figure named. We have a friend who is building one of the $4.50 variety after a magazine recipe. Up to date it has cost him only $8,796 53, and it is nearly half done.—Brooklyn Eagle.

"THE ONLY GIRL"

"The Only Girl"—she of the lilting song and the graceful dance is coming to the Quirk, one night only, Tuesday, April 11th, to tell in a burst of song, the tale of her trials and triumphs, her piques and relentings. It is a story of love and romance, seductively charming, embellished with coaxing melody and contagious comedy. "The Only Girl" is the collaborated work of Victor Herbert and Henry Blossom, and is presented by Joe Weber, who produced it at the Lyric Theatre, New York, where it ran for nearly one entire year. The chorus, while not large the girls have been selected for their distinct types of beauty, and it is said to be more satisfying than a stage full of ordinary chorus girls. Another feature of the performance is an augmented orchestra.

AUTHORITY SPEAKS

Frances Evelyn, Countess of Warwick, Writes For Papers.

IS AN ETIQUETTE EXPERT.

One of England's Most Popular Hostesses Will Give a Series of Articles on the Charm and Dignity of Good Manners In Social Life.

It is announced that Frances Evelyn, countess of Warwick, will write a series of articles on etiquette for newspapers. In her introduction the countess states:

"If parents were more with their children familiarity with all the details of etiquette would be inherited rather than acquired. While mothers are content to leave their little ones to others, boys will tend to become rough and self conscious and girls will regard instructions as a lesson and resent it accordingly. I have made it a rule to have my children round me on every possible occasion.

COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

"The tendency toward carelessness must be repressed by all of us, and etiquette has done much to add to the charm and dignity of life. We need more study of demeanor than do the French, Italians and Spaniards, for the Latin races have a natural grace that is only seldom found among us. The Italian peasant of the Maremma, the Spanish shepherd of the Asturias, will astonish you by his perfect courtesy, his instinctive knowledge of the right word, the appropriate action.

"We are rougher and more rude until we have been polished on the grindstone of polite custom or until we have traveled and lost our insularity.

"After all, our behavior is the reflection of our personality, and while, if that personality be gracious, knowledge of etiquette will set it off to complete advantage, an aggressive personality cannot be made tolerable by any amount of perfectly correct action.

"Yet knowledge is power. I think it was Francis Bacon who said that the man who goes to a foreign country without a knowledge of its language goes to school and not to travel, and in the same way the men or women who seek the pleasures of social life without knowing either how to entertain or to be entertained miss the fundamental pleasures of intercourse."

Filipino Embroidery.

Long have we praised and bought the hand made French lingerie, and long have the women of fashion depended on French hand work. It is only recently that the Madeira eyelet and solid embroidery have made inroads on the very secure position which the French work so long monopolized. Now all this is to be changed, for the Filipino work is as wonderful in execution as either of the other two ever pretended to be. Besides, the material is finer and the prices lower. The labor is cheaper, whether Chinese, Japanese or Filipinos do the embroidery, and, best of all, there is no duty on these garments. There is hardly a doubt but that there will be a great demand for the Filipino embroidery.

Spring Lounging Robes.

The new tea gowns, negligees and lounging robes are very pretty and made of fine fabrics. Fancy or corded cottons are much used for these garments. Cotton crapes with heavy cotton embroidery are largely used, especially in blue, lavender, rose or tan, with the embroidery in white. Instead of embroidery, they may be trimmed with ribbon or lace. The voluminous effects in dresses are also used in negligees. Sheer and light weight fabrics are most favored.

Cottage Pudding.

One cupful of sugar, one cupful of sweet milk, two egg yolks, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two cupfuls of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Cream sugar and egg yolks. Add milk and melted butter, flour and baking powder sifted together. Bake in square tin. Use white of eggs for meringue.

Baked Potato, Surprise.

Take a medium sized baked potato, scoop it out and mash the contents with a celery cream sauce; fill the potato, sprinkle with cheese and breadcrumbs and put back in the oven to brown.

DELICATE MONSTERS.

How Warships Are Lined to Protect Them From Fire and Water.

Although it may look very strong, a battleship is really a very delicate monster. Its vital parts have to be protected by several coverings of a material chiefly obtained from cocoanuts. This is to prevent certain portions becoming either too cold or too hot. For instance, it will be seen that the results would be exciting if the powder magazines became overheated.

A dreadnaught is entirely clothed in a suit of underwear to protect it from fire and water. The actual construction of the material is a secret, but it is known to be for the most part cellulose, which is obtained from the fibrous rind of the cocoanut.

Cellulose swells when it touches salt water. Therefore if a hole should be made in the ship's side, say, by a shot this cellulose expands and covers the opening, so preventing an inrush of water. The cellulose is also treated to make it fireproof.

Mineral wool is a material used upon the latest type of battleship. It looks like wool, but is really composed of snowy threads of a sort of glass. The men who pack mineral wool have to wear masks to prevent the needlelike particles from being inhaled. It is a remarkable nonconductor of heat and is used to cover the refrigerators and cold storage chambers and also the explosive stores.

The boilers and steam pipes of a dreadnaught have "jackets" in order to prevent waste of fuel. Sometimes these jackets are of mineral wool, sometimes wool and sometimes ordinary blanketing.—Pearson's.

VALE OF KASHMIR.

A Beautiful Spot With a Record of Natural Calamities.

Beautiful and unfortunate is the wonderful vale of Kashmir, lying high among the Himalayas, ringed with gigantic peaks, "clothed in evergreen fir and deodar, the light green bed of Jehlam strung across its dun breast like a jade necklace, blushing with the ghostly pink of peach and plum blossoms."

Kashmir has a persistent record of natural calamity. Jehlam overflows its banks at intervals and sends destroying floods that wipe out whole districts. The giant peaks around the valley stir now and again in their sleep of ages and shake the flats with mighty earthquakes. Famine and cholera kill more than the river and the trembling mountains.

Fire frequently sweeps the fields and cities. As one looks up at the hills on either side from the bed of Jehlam it is seen that one slope is covered with cool, dark forest, while the other grows nothing but long grass. A spark in this grass starts the blaze. Among the Himalayas the air is biting cold and the Kashmiri carries a little charcoal brazier under his robe to warm his body. These peripatetic furnaces start many a flame.

With a history dotted with such calamitous landmarks the people of Kashmir have acquired a pessimistic expression and disposition. They are superstitious, too, ascribing all manner of miraculous attributes and fairy inhabitants to the mountain springs.—Argonaut.

Magic of a Century.

An examination of American cities a century ago presents many curiosities. In 1800 not New York, but Philadelphia, was our largest city—a pre-eminence it held until 1830. After Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore and Boston, Charleston, S. C., was the largest American city. But I defy any one to give the name of the sixth largest American town in 1800. It was Northern Liberties. How many Americans today ever heard of this metropolis? An antiquarian research discloses that it is now part of Philadelphia. After Northern Liberties, our biggest city was Southwark, Pa.; then came Salem., Mass. Such were the places a hundred years ago which entered in the competition for primacy.—World's Work.

First Test of the Air Pump.

The first public test of the air pump was in 1654, by its inventor, Otto von Guericke, in the presence of Emperor Ferdinand of Germany.

Guericke applied the carefully ground edges of metallic hemispheres, two feet in diameter, to each other. After exhausting the air by his apparatus he attached fifteen horses to each hemisphere. In vain did they attempt to separate them because of the enormous pressure of the atmosphere. The experiment was a great success.

SPRING CLEANING.

Do Most Housewives Renovate Their Beds?

AN OFT NEGLECTED SPOT.

Some People Don't Know How Uncomfortable Their Beds Are Until They Try the Luxury of a Real One. Rules For Renovating Bedding.

In going over her home on a still hunt for germs and pollution does the up to date housewife always include her beds and bedding in her investigation?

An overhauling of our beds may startle us. Ten to one the springs sag, they may be rusty, very probably there will be much dust, and they may creak and groan with the slightest touch.

The mattress may be filled with unthinkable things, and it may never have been remade.

We may find no mattress protectors comforts falling to pieces with age, wornout quilts or no protectors at all. The pillows may be heavy and musty and the ticking long since lost its freshness.

If we would keep our bedding absolutely sanitary we should observe the following rules:

Every mattress and pillow in constant use should be sent out of the house and renovated once a year.

The vacuum cleaner should be used on mattress, pillows and bedsprings frequently.

Blankets should be sent to the cleaner each year rather than washed at home, as the cleaning is more thorough and the blankets remain soft and fluffy.

A special sheet of thin muslin should go over the blankets under the counterpane. This protects them from dust and dirt.

The thrifty housewive makes also a case for her mattress, which is of unbleached cotton and can be laundered, thus insuring hygienic conditions besides saving the expense of having the mattress, which becomes soiled, recovered before it shows wear.

Now is an opportune time to buy bedding, which can be had at special sales prices that count for economy. So it behooves the wise housekeeper or the inexperienced one to save money while she can and make her family comfortable while they sleep. Many a man hasn't known why he felt tired upon getting up until a real comfort in his bed suddenly brought him to a realization of how uncomfortable the old one was.

suits. White braid gives the tailored finish, and a slouch hat of white duck is both cool and suitable.

Tips For the Housekeeper.

When frying eggs place a cover over the frying pan. This cooks the egg evenly and without turning. Poached eggs should be done the same way.

Apple parings and cores should be stewed to a pulp and then strained. This will make a jelly which spread on apple tart will greatly improve it. It can also be used for flavoring tapioca pudding.

Orange peel and lemon peel may be used for flavoring sauces and stewed fruit. They can be dried and kept in a glass covered jar until used.

If potted cheese gets crumbly or dry in the pot mix into it a tablespoonful of boiling water and have the spoon hot before measuring the water. Mix thoroughly and the cheese will be freshened and improved.

Millinery Details.

More odd trimmings appear on the spring hats than one can keep track of. It should not be a hard matter to have a very individual hat this season. A buttonholed taffeta rose, flowers which are transparent, having the appearance of being candied; caterpillars clinging to foliage, pearl pins, plenty of lace, the single wide velvet streamer, braided ribbon and applique may each be made use of to great advantage. There is a trend toward high directoire hats with more or less of a scoop.

WISHING AND GETTING.

An Old Man's Realized Day Dream and the Moral It Teaches.

They had started in the most primitive way, the man and his wife, back in the little log house, but they were dreaming of the day when they would own a farm of their own and not have to work so hard. After a time their hard toil was rewarded, and they owned a farm. Then it seemed desirable to add to this tract, and they worked a little harder. A new house seemed a necessary accompaniment to the large farm, so the work could not stop.

A son came to the age when he must be educated and have his chance in life, and they toiled on. All the time the old man dreamed of the days ahead when he could stop work and take life easy. Somehow the days did not come, or he did not recognize them when they came, for he kept on working until he had grown old and worn. Then his health failed, and he had to stop work.

The son for whom they had given precious years out of their lives now showed his gratitude by his gentle, unfailing love and care. It seemed to others that the goal had been reached—that the old man could now enjoy life, surrounded as he was by every comfort and attention. But he was quiet and sad, sitting with head bowed on his toil worn hands.

A neighbor, stopping in for a little visit, asked, "How are you getting along, grandpa?" Then the secret of all his sadness burst forth as he answered earnestly, "Oh, if I could only get out and work!"

What queer things our dreams are after all!—Indianapolis News.

PRETTY ROUGH SPORT.

The Game of "the Bounding Brothers of the Bosporus."

Many extraordinary forms of amusement have been devised by army officers from the earliest times down to the present day, but none perhaps have more startling characteristics than the following new and original game, which Sir Robert Baden-Powel describes in "Memories of India:"

It was introduced into the mess by a brother of our colonel, who came to stay with him. We believed him to be a quiet, harmless planter from Behar, and so he seemed throughout the evening, both during and after dinner, when he remained watching us playing the fool in various ways for our own amusement. But evidently our ways did not strike him as original, and he therefore invited us to play the great game of the bounding brothers of the Bosporus, and when he had once shown us we joined most heartily in the sport.

The game had few rules, but a certain amount of etiquette. The apparatus consisted of all the furniture, which was piled in a heap near the center of the room, and a writing table, which was placed a couple of yards from it. You were expected then to clap your hands three times—that was the etiquette of the game—then run at the table and turn heels over head on it into the pile of furniture, shouting as you did so, "I am a bounding brother of the Bosporus!" That was all. It was quite simple, but how it hurt when you landed on the upturned legs of a chair or the side of a table!

Ada Rehan's Bandsman.

Miss Ada Rehan used to say that the finest appreciation of her acting she ever observed came from a bandsman in the orchestra of a Birmingham theater. When she played the angry Katharine she had one piece of superb fury—a swift march to the back of the stage, a right about turn and then a straight march down the stage, pulling up short and sharp at the footlights. One night she saw a bandsman sitting directly in her line of advance shrink back in his chair at the moment of the full stop at the footlights.

"Sure, he thought, I wasn't going to stop on the stage," Miss Rehan said. "I wonder if he is married to a Katharine."

The next day she sent him a box of cigars.—Manchester Guardian.

Home Ties.

A sedate banker of Hamilton, Canada, was sitting in his office one morning when his ten-year-old hopeful drifted in, bearing with him an expression of unutterable gloom.

"Anything gone wrong, boy?" interrogated the financier. "Why, at your age you ought to be cheerful all the time."

"I know it, Frank; I know it," responded the youngster. "I'm doin' the best I can; but, honest, I had a terrible time up at the house with your wife this morning."—Saturday Evening Post.

The Parental Bulwark.

"I'm going to be a burglar when I grow up."

"Why, Johnny, that's very wicked, and besides, burglars are sent to prison."

"Not me. My father's a lawyer."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

STEPS ARE TAKEN TO AID RED CROSS

Name E. A. Moree, Director of Atlantic Division.

MORE MEMBERS ARE SOUGHT

One of New Appointee's First Duties Is to Assist In Organizing New Chapters—Moree Lately Has Been Actively Engaged In Field of Public Health. His Division Covers Large Area.

Washington.—Ernest P. Bicknell, director general of civilian relief of the American Red Cross, announced the appointment of Edward A. Moree of Yonkers, N. Y., as director of the Atlantic division of the Red Cross, with headquarters in New York city.

In announcing the appointment Mr. Bicknell said that filling the post is one of the steps in the campaign of the Red Cross for a million members and that one of Mr. Moree's first duties would be to assist in organizing new chapters and in campaigning for new members of present chapters.

The Atlantic division of the Red Cross is east and south of the Ohio river and east of the Mississippi river (this includes twenty-one states) and has a population of nearly 50,000,000 persons.

To accept the position Mr. Moree resigned as assistant secretary of the New York State Charities Aid association.

EDWARD A. MOREE.

He was a member of the association's staff for six years. As director of the extension work and later as assistant secretary he assumed an important part in organizing the tuberculosis movement in that state. His chief interest and activity in recent years have been in the field of public health.

He served as assistant to the secretary of the commission which three years ago investigated the public health situation in that state and had much to do with framing and in securing the passage of the health law under which the New York state department of health was reorganized by Dr. Hermann M. Biggs. Mr. Moree is now advisory expert in public health education in that department. He has been a frequent speaker before state and national health organizations on the subject of public health organization and legislation.

Mr. Moree was New York state manager of the Red Cross Christmas seal sale the first two years that the State Charities Aid association conducted the sale on a state wide basis. He mapped out the plan of campaign and organization which has since been followed with few changes in the state and which has been adopted, in many of its chief aspects, in many other states in the union.

Previous to entering social work Mr. Moree was in the newspaper profession, serving in many capacities on various New York papers. Going to New York from Elmira, Mr. Moree took the position of editor of the educational department of the Brooklyn Eagle, from which position he went to the New York Tribune as New Jersey editor. After four years' service with the Tribune he resigned as night city editor and started a newspaper in Geneva, N. Y., but later entered social work with the Russell Sage foundation.

WANTED, A POSTMASTER.

Office Discontinued Because No One For the Job Could Be Found.

Marinette, Wis. — The postoffice at Washington Harbor, Door county, has been discontinued for the reason that ill health prevented the postmaster, L. P. Ottosen, from performing his duties, and he resigned.

Uncle Sam made every effort to get a man to replace the postmaster, without success. The job was not only offered to several, but advertisements were inserted in Door county papers offering the place to any one who desired it, but without success.

The postoffice, which literally went begging, had to be discontinued because no one would take it. The mail patrons will be supplied by rural delivery from Detroit Harbor, but the people are parting with their postoffice ruefully, because it gave them a gathering place and, as one man put it, "lent dignity to the village."

SAY HIDDEN GOLD IS MYTH.

California Travelers Find No Treasure In Patagonia.

San Francisco.—Hidden gold in Patagonia, to which Captain Thomas Owens was to lead the band of adventurers on the schooner Academy, was a myth, according to four members of the ill fated expedition, who returned to San Francisco on the Pacific mailer Newport from Balboa. They said that Owens' real name is John Owen Whoffer, that he was a poor navigator and that for three and a half months they sailed aimlessly around the Pacific until they finally reached the Colombian coast.

The Academy left San Francisco June 21 of last year bound for Patagonia, where Captain Owens said there was gold that rivaled the wealth of the Incas. With him were several Californians who had invested in the enterprise with hopes of great gain.

Eugene L. Haile, H. E. Schuck, William Simms and H. F. Radke, who came home on the Newport, were authority for the statement that Owens was incompetent, that he tried to turn the Academy back to San Francisco and that he proposed to sell the schooner in Callao and buy a tug to take them to the fabulous mines.

OFFICE FOR EACH CITIZEN.

California Town, With Nine Men, Has Nine Jobs to Fill.

Coram, Cal.—This town, the smallest in the state, has a registered population of twenty-one, and only nine of these are men. C. W. Baker, a town trustee, does not want to run again, as he is justice of the peace of Keswick township and has honor enough. The other men have all consented to accept the offices, of which there are nine.

No nomination petitions have been filed. The election on April 10 will be conducted on the "write in" plan. Women will sit on the election board, as it is against the law for candidates to conduct an election.

Mayor George O'Grady is mining at present in Siskiyou county with his partner, City Clerk Kinyon. The city marshal and city treasurer are both gone.

The only source of revenue is the $25 a quarter license collected from each of the two saloons. The money is ample, for there are funds in the treasury and there are no debts.

RELATES HARDSHIPS IN PURSUIT OF VILLA

Indian Scout Says Difficulties Face U. S. Army.

Denver.—Some of the difficulties that face the United States army in its pursuit of Villa were told here by James H. Cook, who in 1885 was chief scout for the Eighth United States cavalry that crossed into Mexico and captured Geronimo, the Apache chief. He led the American soldiers over much of the country the United States soldiers must cover to get Villa. He said:

"A veritable zone of death will have to be traversed by the American troopers. They will have to go over some of the worst country in the world. If Villa chooses he can fight as Geronimo and his followers did—go back into the mountains, kill his horses, scatter on foot and pick our soldiers off one by one from behind rocks. It may take us months, even years, to get Villa.

"But no men on earth are better for the task than the officers in charge of the American expedition. I personally know Lieutenant Colonel D. C. Cabell, now chief of staff to General Pershing. He was with me on the Geronimo expedition and knows the country as well as any white man.

"The aeroplane will assist our troops in the campaign, but it cannot match with all the difficulties of the region. Between the peaks are deep canyons, sometimes 1,000 feet deep and less than forty feet wide. These ravines cannot be crossed by any except the old Indians of the country. They can get over on foot.

"The only thing that makes the expedition look hopeful to me is my faith in the men who command it."

CONVICTS TO PLANT COTTON.

They Will Cultivate 1,300 Acres of a Prison Farm.

McAlester, Okla.—Thirteen hundred acres of the state prison farm will be planted to cotton this year. All work except the overseeing of the labor will be done by prisoners.

The land on which this cotton will be produced was a few years ago merely rocky and a waste. Hills rock covered and eroded by rains and gullies deeply cut by spring floods surrounded the concrete walls of the penitentiary. Hard labor and careful management have changed the surface to a rolling, well drained seed bed.

Rocks were removed from the surface. Gullies were filled up after drains had been laid. Dams and riprap were emplaced to hold back the fine soil carried down by showers.

In the coming year almost the entire acreage will be devoted to cotton. Of the land still rocky and unimproved hog and cattle pastures have been made. Bermuda grass is spreading, and before many years at the present rate of development enough beef and dairy supplies will be produced to feed the convicts.

"A deed transferring property in the town of Granby from Stanley P. Emerick of New York, to his father, F. A. Emerick of this city, was filed in the County Clerk's office this morning. A total of 200 acres of land is transferred and the consideration is $12,000. The property was purchased by Stanley Emerick, October 27, 1915, and it was announced shortly thereafter that F. A. Emerick intended throwing open the estate to the public.

"The site borders on the Oswego river and the West River road and is scenic point of view, in this part of the state. It is midway between Oswego and Fulton and would make an ideal public park. The property includes what remains of Battle Island, one and one-half acres. The larger part of the originol island was submerged by the barge canal operations and is now covered by water.

URGES ADOPTION OF GARY SYSTEM

Which Means Churches Should Be Open Seven Days Each Week --- Plan Meets Approval in Syracuse

Syracuse—A system of religous instruction, cooperative denominational and interdenominational, in the churches, conducted by trained and paid teachers, for the children is inevitable if the churches are to propagate themselves, according to Rev. Harry Webb Farrington of Boston, who is in this city to speak in the interest of the Gary system of church schools.

Mr. Farrington is a graduate of Syracuse University, Boston University Theological Seminary and the Harvard Graduate School. He played on the Syracuse 'Varsity football eleven three years and is author of many college songs. The system which he represents was established at Gary, Ind., by three Syracuse clergymen, Rabbi Stolz, Rev. Fred Walton and Mr. Farrington. Mr. Walton is a Prebyterian and Mr. Farrington was sent to Gary by the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Following a brief review of the entire Gary system Mr. Farrington described in detail the principle of the Gary church school idea in an address last evening at the First M. E. church. The plan would mean a notable revolution in the relation of the church to the community precipitate it into the community educational system as a potent factor in implanting ethical and moral standards only superficially touched by the public schools.

Churches Open Seven Days

Any religious educational system, Gary or otherwise, established upon the principles advocated by Mr. Farrington, would open the churches seven days a week and practically force the pastors to become active teachers as well as preachers with well defined daily school duties.

"It must be gathered that school sessions for religious instruction during the week in the churches will eliminate the Sunday school, for they will not," said Mr. Farrington. "Properly handled, the week-day classes become supplementary to the Sunday school. The pastor of thec hurch becomes a teacher and possibly a supervisor of the instruction. The curriculum includes Bible study, religious history, biography, moral standards, ethics, church and home life and general religious teachings applicable to every day life.

"This work may be denominational or undenominational. This phase of the education is optional with the parents. There is no question in my mind that once such a system is established, parents will readily subscribe to it and that the educational system will be more complete than it has ever been. To be successful every effort must be made to conduct this religious training without creed prejudice.

Fits Education to Child

"It is the fundamental principle of religion that is desired. Denominational loyalty in a country where religious freedom exists as it does here will be a matter entirely in the hands of parents and their children. The Gary system corelates every child welfare organization the child's education is not complete. We should fit the education to the child, not the child to education.

"At Gary the public school population is 5,000 and reports for last year showed that out of this entire population there were only three delinquents. This seems amazing, but the proofs are within the reach of any doubting person. One commendable feature of the system is that instead of children being bunched together one day in the week they are distributed over an entire week and they can attend the church school at times most convenient to children, parents and teachers.

"The two reasons why I believe church schools are inevitable are these:

It is the only practical method by which the church can propagate itself, establish a voluntary and willing paying membership and be an active, serviceable organization to society.

The personality of the church can be brought into contact with the developing child and inculcate in it at an early age religious consciousness as a basic principle of every other activity in life.

Surface Only Brushed

"Another reason why I believe this class of church work is bound to come is the general tendency everywhere to make the churches more institutional in character. The surface has only been brushed so far, but we see this principle reflected in the gymnasium, reading room, clubs, entertainments, lunch facilities and other special features at one time considered entirely outside of the jurisdiction of church life.

"This work will call for the best teaching talent that will command salaries worthy of the name because the supporting element in the practical church will demand efficient instruction. So-called non-religious classes will become contributors to such a system because the results will be seen, not assumed."

Mr. Farrington will address the students of Syracuse University at chapel this morning and speak at the Delaware Baptist church this evening and at the philosophical seminary, Hall of Languages, Syracuse University at 4 o'clock, this afternoon.

The Chorus Choir of the Tabernacle Evangelistic campaign will meet for the first rehearsal at the Tabernacle on Saturday evening at 7:30. H. C. Warth, chorister, will direct the singing which will begin at 8 o'clock.

RECEIVERS MUST PAY NO INTEREST ON BONDS

Syracuse—C. Loomis Allen and Henderick S. Holden, receivers of the Empire United Railways, Inc., was instructed by Justice W. S. Andrews in Special Term of Supreme Court Saturday not to pay interest due May 1 on the underlying bonds of the roads composing the system.

The total amount involved approximates $313,000, of which $244,800 is for twelve months interest on Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern bonds, and the balance the interest for 6 months for similar securities originally issued by the Syracuse, Lake shore & Northern, and the Auburn & Northern Railroad companies.

Justice Andrews set next Saturday as the date for taking testimony to determine whether permission will be given to purchase the property of the Monroe County Belt Line for $45,000.

The Equitable Trust company of New York has given notice that it will make a motion before Justice Andrews next Saturday for permission to begin foreclosure proceedings under the Empire United bonds and for the appointment of Mr. Allen and Mr. Holden, temporary receivers of the company, receivers under the mortgage.

MISSIONARY CIRCLES WILL MEET WEDNESDAY

LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION ELECTS NEW OFFICERS

Half a hundred teachers from colleges, normal, high and private schools of the state attended a meeting of the New York State Modern Language Association in the Administration Building of Syracuse University Saturday.

Miss Agnes Carson of Cortland Normal school was elected president, Prof. A. H. Patterson of the University, vice president, and A. B. Mason of North High school, secretary.

The next meeting will be held with the other educational organizations which convene in Syracuse at Christmas time.

The teachers were welcomed by H. H. Denham, principal of Technical High School. "Obtaining the Best Results in Language Teaching" was the subject of an address by Prof. W. C. Lowe of the University. Prof. H. C. Neel spoke in French on "Speaking French in the Classroom," and there was an address by William Schaffrath of Central High school on "Language and Grammar."

STORAGE PLANT PROVED TO BE UNPOPULAR

Things unpleasant were said at Saturday's meeting of the Oswego Coöperative Association, held in Oswego. The main proposition was the erection of a cooler and packing plant. The Association came in for some sharp criticism, among the speakers being.

Mr. F. A. Place who said that his son, Thorpe, had consigned about $100 worth of fruit to the association for disposal had never received returns. Mr. White, the secretary, said that there must be some mistake and that he would look it up, but Mr. Place reported that he had promised to do that the last time he spoke about it.

The inference drawn from the controversy in the meeting is that many of the members do not believe that on enterprise of the character proposed can be conducted without considerable loss to the investors, and they pointed to the fact that many dealers who put in apples last year are now selling them almost a dallar a barrel less than they paid. If the association had held its apples it was pointed out that the individual members would be the losers, not only on the price of thef ruit, but in the maintenance of thep lant as well.

REPUBLICANS RE-ELECT FORMER OFFICERS

Oswego—Willard C. Richards of Parish, deputy compensation commissioner, was re-elected chairman o fthe Republican County Committee Saturday. Other officers elected were: Vice chairman, Norman S. Bentley, Oswego; secretary, H. Putnam Allen, Fulton, and treasurer, John S. Parsons, Oswego.

Hydorn, Sandy Creek; James Buckley, Altmar; Ansel Brown, Richland; David Enos, Scriba; W. L. Buck, Mexico; A. P. Merriam, Schroeppel, and William Knowlton, Volney. D. O. Whitney of Albion was indorsed for reappointment as the Republican commissioner of elections and the Board of Supervisors will be asked to appoint him. A patrolman for the Volney-Palermo state highway was recommended.

The Democratic County Committee will organize at the Court House at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. James Gray of Parish will be re-elected chairman without opposition. Thomas D. Niles probably will be recommended foor reappointment as the Democratic election commissioner.

Scene from "NOT GUILTY" at the Quirk Today

Cyril Scott, the star of "Not Guilty," which is to be shown at the Quirk theatre today, on the Equitable programme, gives full play to his wonderful dramatic talents in a story which calls for the utmost the star has in him. The play is out of the ordinary, some of the scenes, notably those taken in Sing Sing prison, in the Governor's room at the Capitol, in Albany,and in the Governor's mansion, in the same city, are the first ever shown in films of those places, and they are only a small part of the striking features of this wonderful presentation. The story itself is a powerful arraignment of thep ractice of allowing circumstantial evidence and false testimony to place a man's life in jeopardy, and aside from its terrific presentation of the law's possibilities, reveals in a striking way the power of a mother's love surmounting all obstacles, and saving the life of her unjustly convicted son. Four other reels will also be shown. 9—reels—9. Count them.

GRAIN MARKET IN OVERSOLD POSITION

Chicago—The wheat market is now in an oversold position. Under these conditions the bear shorts are likely to be driven to cover. The larger professionals in the trade, and who are in the market in a big way from day to day, feel that prices are likely to go higher, and they are long, goodly amounts of the July future.

They assert that while the Government crop report was a bullish document, it failed to reflect the actual losses in the soft Winter Wheat States, and that with growing weather thed amage will be shown much greater than reflected by the figure sent out Friday.

WOULD SIMPLIFY RAILROAD REGULATION

Philadelphia — Ten leading trade and business organizations, under a joint committee on reasonable regulation of railroads have announced the launching of a campaign for the centralizing and simplifying of railroad regulation.

It has as its object the removal of railroads from the jurisdiction of State commissions and placing them exclusively under the Federal Government.

Thousands of copies of a "campaign booklet" are being sent to every civic body of importance in the country.

The joint committee was formed about a year ago to study railway regulation. Recently the committee completed a nine months' study of the problem, which convinced them that thed ual regulation by the Federal and State governments is one of the most apparent existing evils.

POWELL'S MEN MUST UPHOLD THE HONORS

"Do it again," is the way Van Vuren feels about the defeat administered to his team of bowlers by Powell's All-Fulton five, when the teams met last week. The intrepid leader of the stars has accordingly challenged the Powell men to another meeting which will be on the Onyx alleys Wednesday evening.

By winning last week's match, Powell's team now hold all rights to championship claims of the city. Van Buren, however, is confident that his five is superior to the other team and he sought another game to uphold his centention.

SIMPLE LIFE BEST

Wear and Tear Cause Statesmen to Die Young.

SAYS WORK ISN'T TO BLAME.

Yale Professor, After an Exhaustive Study on Question of Vitality of Our Public Men, Declares Quiet Life Is the Long One.

New Haven, Conn.—That the simple life is the long one and that the convivial social life of the nation's representatives in congress is not conducive to longevity, but has, on the contrary, been the means of taking off at a too early age many of the best men of the country, are deductions made by Professor Irving Fisher, one of the best known political economists in the country, after an exhaustive study.

"Presidents, vice presidents and congressmen are a select group, endowed at the outset with unusual vitality. The vitality of most of them is severely taxed and materially reduced by the heavy responsibilities and bad personal hygiene incident to a public career. A minority escape the worst of these conditions and retain the major part of their natural endowment of vitality. Bad hygiene has been more destructive than the weight of responsibility.

"This conclusion is suggested by the fact that the vice presidents suffer a greater curtailment of life than the presidents, although vice presidents have far less responsibility, but spend much more time in Washington social life than the presidents. It is also suggested by the fact that the civil war period, with its greater weight of responsibility but more simple living, showed a lower mortality than the periods preceding and following, with less weight of responsibility but less simple living."

Professor Fisher said that historically there has been a progressive decrease in those causes of death consisting of infections which kill their victims chiefly at the earlier ages, but a progressive change for the worse in those causes of death consisting of the wear and tear diseases or degenerative diseases which kill their victims chiefly at the later years.

"These opposite changes," Professor Fisher says, "in the infectious and degenerative diseases would explain the improvement in mortality at the earlier ages and, on the other hand, the nonimprovement and, in the case of Yale graduates, even positive retrogression in the mortality of the older ages. Again, they would explain the marked exceptionality of the older ages in the civil war period. For if it was plain living which explained the low mortality of that period we should expect the more marked influence of that factor to appear just as it does, at the older ages at which the wear and tear mortality is chiefly registered.

"The damage to vitality which we find in public life is not, therefore, put forward as an argument against entering public service, nor will a knowledge of the facts probably tend in that direction, certainly not among those who place public interests above personal interests, as every public man should. But knowledge is power, and a knowledge of the facts should enable us to protect our public men or enable them to protect themselves and to do so in the public interest. This can be accomplished by better general health conditions in the country and its capital, by better health customs and habits, by better ideals and by a more systematic application of the perfect ideals already existing."

In connection with the lives of the presidents of the United States, Professor Fisher says:

"The longevity of each president is reckoned from the date of inauguration—that is, from the time of his first being president. Thus Washington became president at the age of fifty-seven, when the 'expectation' of life, according to the American experience table, was sixteen years. He actually lived, however, only eleven years instead of the sixteen. John Adams, on the other hand, lived after inauguration twenty-nine years, which was two and three times his expectation of thirteen years."

PYREX ("FIRE-GLASS")

Glass Dishes for Baking

Since the beginning of time, baking has been done "in the dark," in utensils impervious to light. No one through all the ages has ever before been able to bake in a glass dish, for the heat has always broken the glass.

Now science brings Pyrex, an absolutely new and wonderful substance that does not break in the oven. Pyrex has the transparency, the glisten, the look of glass, but it is no more the ordinary glass of commerce than a diamond is a rhinestone!

Pyrex draws back the curtain from your baking, lets in the light, and enables you to see what is going on inside the dish. Thus for the first time in the history of the world, baking can be done with scientific exactness.

Made by secret process,Pyrex is both durable and charming, ly dainty. You bake faster and better, bake and serve in the same dish, wash the dishes with the utmost ease, polish them to scintillating purity.

It is apparent that the city's basketball players are loth to step aside and leave to the baseball players a field free for action. A challenge has been issued by the Bachelors' team for a game with the champion High School five, the result to determine who is who in basketball lore.

The challengers, composed of W. Ingamells and George Ward forwards, H. Ingamells center, and D. Richardson andn John Ward guards, state the high school quintet cannot assume the championship title by reason of their defeat of the Maccabees.

One more game remains to be played in the three-game series between the high school quintet and the Maccabee five by reason of the contract which had been drawn up prior to the commencement of actual hositilites. Having made a far better showing in the second encounter than they did in the first the Maccabees are confident of their ability to defeat the school boys. Their followers are asking bets with theh igh school supporters.

WHY NOT ELECT A BUSINESS MAN?

Candidate For President Should Have Commercial Training.

GOVERNMENT IS A BUSINESS

Set Back Professional Politicians, Horn Blowing Orators and Briefless Lawyers and Place at the Head of the Biggest Corporation In the World an Experienced Man.

WHY can't we have a business man in the Presidential chair next time, is the query of a prominent New York newspaper.

Government is a BUSINESS, and a BIG BUSINESS.

Seagoing and overland commerce, taxation, tariffs, rate regulation, monopoly regulation, the mails and parcels posts, conservation of resources, development and maintenance of waterways, the huge payrolls of Government employes, the courts of justice, the national revenue collectors and police, the army and navy—what are all these but pure business problems, demanding the same trained and capable business executive direction that any great business concern demands?

What board of directors would think of hiring a professor of Sanskrit to be president of a great railroad?

What huge shipbuilding or engineering concern would select a peripatetic stump orator or a lyceum lecturer to direct its activities?

Big Business Men Needed.

Big business concerns seek big business men with big business brains to be executive chiefs.

Now, here is this big business corporation in which every one of us, big and little, is a stockholder—the United States of America.

It is the BIGGEST BUSINESS CONCERN the world ever saw.

And what do we do every four years by way of selecting a head for this wonderful, gigantic business concern?

Why, we always select a man who has never shown enough business ability to run a one-horse draying concern.

In the fifty years that have elapsed since Abraham Lincoln died not one of the eleven Chief Executives of this colossal business corporation called the United States has had the SLIGHTEST BUSINESS TRAINING or any acquaintance with the complex, varied, ramifying and interrelated problems of finance, production, transportation and world exchange upon which depend the welfare and prosperity of the whole people and of each individual citizen.

Hindrance of Prosperity.

Is it any wonder that our national business is one long serial story of stupid HINDRANCE OF PROSPERITY, stupid depression of commerce and trade, stupid opposition to the forward impulses of business co-operation and consolidation and of wasteful and criminally extravagant expenditure of the people's money to the tune of thousands of millions?

Is it any wonder that we WASTE each year an amount of money that would fortify our coasts, stock our magazines with ammunition, equip our navy properly and SECURE BEYOND ANY POSSIBLE DANGER the safety of our country?

Suppose that just once, by way of experiment, we gently, but firmly and positively, set the whole lot of professional politicians, horn-blowing orators, briefless lawyers, pretty phrasemakers, theoretical schoolmasters and all that sort on a shelf in the back woodshed and put a BIG, BRAINY, CAPABLE, EXPERIENCED BUSINESS MAN, who has done big things well all his life, in the chair of the President of the United States?

What do you think about this, citizens?

For an Idea, Not an Individual.

The views expressed in the above editorial are exactly the views held by THOUSANDS OF INFLUENTIAL BUSINESS MEN throughout the country. As an outgrowth of this sentiment there has been formed an organization called the Business Men's Presidential League, which has for its object the exploitation of an idea instead of an individual. What it seeks to bring about is the nomination of a candidate for president WHO CAN BE ELECTED, also to prevent action next June at Chicago that would be party suicide.

An All Round Business Man.

To win next November the Republican party must DESERVE TO WIN. That means we must have a candidate who first of all merits and commands the confidence of the business men of the nation. Among the prominent men mentioned as candidates who would meet this demand is General Coleman du Pont, of Delaware. Du Pont is distinctly a business man. He has been everything, from a miner, working with a pick and shovel, to the director of one of our greatest industrial corporations. He has built and managed railroads and is a banker and a farmer. In every line his activities have been SIGNALLY SUCCESSFUL, and no man has had a more varied experience to equip him for the Presidency. He is the kind of man who could save to the taxpayers of this country the three hundred million dollars that the late Senator Aldrich said were wasted annually in running the public business.

SNEEZING OMENS.

At One Time to Sneeze Was Regarded as a Death Warrant.

Sneezing from very remote times has been regarded with superstition.

Our forefathers went to bed again if they sneezed while putting on their shoes. A sneeze to the right was deemed lucky; to the left, of evil portent. To sneeze near a burial place was very unlucky.

Tradition has it that sneezing was at first a fatal sign—every human being sneezed but once and then died—but Jacob petitioned the Creator to remove the sneezing ban and succeeded. Thence arose the once universal custom of saluting a sneezer with "God bless you!" or "May you live long!" The custom still obtains in some parts of Europe.

In England not only was a sneezer blessed, but friends raised their hats to him as well. In an old book, "The Code of Conduct," it is directed that "if his lordship sneezes ye are not to bawl out, 'God bless you!' but bow to him handsomely." All over the world the sneeze was recognized. Whole nations were under orders to make exclamations when their king sneezed.

Sneezing was believed to be a sure cure for hiccough and was also looked upon as a sign of sanity. If ancient and universal belief goes for anything it is good to sneeze.—London Telegraph.

WHEN WORK BECOMES PLAY.

The Secret of Contentment Is Found In Proper Employment.

A philosopher once said that "no man properly employed was ever miserable." And a more truthful statement was never made.

To be properly employed one must be engaged in a business in which he has faith and confidence and for which he has respect. If he doubts the legitimacy of the business, if he must resort to practices which he feels are questionable, if he isn't proud of his occupation, he is not properly employed. If the work he is given to perform palls upon him, if he feels that he ought to be doing something else, if he envies the other employee his place in the shop or factory, then the work deadens and destroys, and misery follows.

The writers got things balled up when they talked about work and play. Too great a distinction was drawn. Play was pictured as something that gave happiness and work as something which one performed only because he was hungry.

The truth is, it is all play or ought to be, for the man who is properly employed is only engaged in playing. He gets as much delight from it as he formerly got from the childish games or should. Certainly there can be no misery where a man has found his work.—Dayton News.

Knew Just How.

Many years ago in Paris, at the first presentation of a tragedy that had for its closing scene the murder of a Swedish king which had taken place nearly half a century earlier, all went well till the murder scene came on, when a very dignified old gentleman in the stage box called out angrily:

"Absurd! They've got it all wrong!"

The manager himself heard this plain spoken comment, and, being naturally disturbed by so sweeping a condemnation, he sought out the critic and politely begged to know what fault he had to find with it.

"Why, my good sir," cried the old man, with an air of authority, "the whole grouping of the scene is incorrect! You have made them kill the king to the right of the door, whereas we murdered him on the left!"

Barbarous Tattooing.

Formerly the Marquesans had such a barbarous manner of doing their tattoo work that it often took nearly six months to heal that which had been done in a single day. They covered the whole body of the males with crudely imitated rough designs, circles, curves and many designs of small work, including round and angular spots, even to the finger nails and the top of the head. Thus, beginning at virility, some were upward of thirty years old before their tattooing was completed. Marquesan tattooing was perhaps more remarkable in appearance than that of any other primitive race.

SECTIONALISM CONDEMNED

TACTICS OF NEW YORK CITY DEMOCRATS EXPOSED BY SENATOR BROWN.

A GRAB FOR HIGHWAY MONEY

Brown Ridicules the Attempt to Divert Funds Appropriated to the Construction of State Roads—New York City Itself Wanted to Improve the State Highways.

Albany, April 10.—Mayor Mitchel of New York City, representing the Wilson Democracy, and Senator Robert F. Wagner, the Tammany leader in the Senate, have been working industriously for months to build up a New York City party on the plea that the rest of the state is living on the greater city.

It is like the Glynn economy issue,—good enough until after election—and might serve to divert attention from the real issue in the coming campaign.

In the Senate, Senator Wagner has harped incessantly on his claim that New York City pays sixty-eight per cent. of the state taxes and gets practically nothing in return, and now, with Mayor Mitchel, he is demanding that a share of the money appropriated for the building of state highways be turned over to the City of New York.

Roused Brown's Ire.

This demand aroused the indignation of Senator Brown who has been doing his utmost throughout the session to give New York fair treatment and remove some of the hostility and sectionalism so industriously cultivated by Senator Wagner, Mayor Mitchel and the Democratic press. When he found that his attitude was being taken advantage of to urge impossible and absurd claims, he turned on the Democratic leader in the Senate, briefly sketched the history of the highway referendums, showed the absurdity of the Wagner-Mitchel demand and, plainly intimated that the up-state counties were getting more than a little tired of the pretensions of a few Democratic partisans to speak for the whole City of New York.

Money for Everybody.

"1912," said Senator Brown, "with a Democratic Governor and a Democratic Senate, which my friend Senator Wagner ably led, you passed a referendum bill for $50,000,000. You provided that this second fifty millions should be used only in counties having towns, and that excluded the counties of the City of New York and no other. Away it went. It was the grand old policy of money for everybody, everywhere, all the time. New York City has been pursuing that policy for a period of years; money for every proposal that could be suggested in the City of New York; money for every proposal that could be suggested in the state—New York City ready to pay one quarter of the income tax of the whole United States. The representatives of the City of New York voted to accept the income tax amendment when their city was on the verge of the debt limit.

Sudden Change in Policy.

"The policy suddenly changed, and now that it has changed, they are harking back and claiming that the state, some imaginary entity,—which was themselves in reality—some imaginary entity has done something to the City of New York that was culpable or which ought to be corrected.

"If the question had been submitted to the people of the state in 1906, whether or not fifty millions should be raised, of which the City of New York paid no part, the expenditure never would have been made—never. If the question had been submitted in 1912 to the people of the state to raise fifty millions outside of the City of New York, it never would have been raised. You are responsible for it. You (indicating Senator Wagner) initiated it. You carried it through. You got the state committed to this policy and nobody else. Your spirit of progress and expenditure was behind it, and you have gone too far for your own purse.

Fair to New York City.

"We will do everything we can to correct such conditions as you have created which are embarrassing to the City of New York. We will not do one unfair thing by you. We will go a long way so that we shall not be accused of neglecting this great municipality whose munificence and generosity have been equal to her carelessness; but it ill becomes the City of New York now, on a bill to carry into execution the policy which she initiated and fastened upon the state, to raise a question as to the propriety of our action.

Asking the Impossible.

"Let us not harp upon impossible things, on matters that do not commend themselves to any informed mind. Let us meet the problems of the state as citizens of the whole state—the Empire state—not in the spirit of sectionalism and secession. If the great metropolis in which we all take pride has suffered any injustice at the hands of the state government, it should and will be corrected; but on the other hand the great rural counties are as essential to the prosperity and welfare of the state as is the city. Only in a spirit of mutual forbearance and mutual well wishing can the greater good be accomplished.

Sectionalism Shortsighted.

"Any attempt to gain temporary political advantage by fostering sectionalism must in the end react upon those who foment such an issue. We must be fair to the city, for it would be unfortunate should her citizens justly believe themselves discriminated against; but being fair to the city doesn't mean being grossly unfair to the great rural counties, whose rights must be conserved at all hazards."

Nelson as a Courtier.

Nelson was the hero of England even in his own time, but not apparently of the court. Samuel Rogers recounts a conversation with him which appears in the life of the poet by R. Ellis Roberts. "I heard him once during dinner," says Rogers, "utter many bitter complaints (which Lady Hamilton vainly attempted to check) of the way he had been treated at court that forenoon—the queen had not condescended to take the slightest notice of him. In truth, Nelson was hated at court; they were jealous of him." But then it must be remembered that Rogers was renowned as a particularly ill natured gossip.

Mrs. Whitney's Recipes.

MRS. HARRY PAYNE WHITNEY recently held a food bazaar at her home in behalf of a hospital. Among her favorite recipes are these:

Balmoral Dessert Biscuits (H. M. the Queen's Baker, Balmoral Castle, 1856). —These are no thicker than passover cakes and very "short." One-half pound of flour, one ounce of butter, four yolks of eggs, only two whites. Mix the above into a stiff paste, roll out very thin and cut into round shapes size of top of teacup, with a wavy edge pastry cutter. Bake in slow oven. The biscuits should be quite thin, blistered all over, but not browned and not pricked. The blisters are the same color as the biscuits, not darker. These are only good when quite fresh from the oven.

Lady Heywood's Milk Lemonade.—To the juice of nine lemons add one pound of fine loaf sugar. Pour on this one quart of boiling hot milk and let it stand all night. Into a separate vessel peel three lemons as thin as possible. Pour into it one pint of warm water (90 degrees heat). This also must stand all night, covered, of course. Next morning put both together and strain through a very fine jelly bag till perfectly clear and bright. Add sherry to your taste.

Grandmother's White Soup.—Two quarts stock of veal, lamb or chicken, an onion boiled with it, one quart milk and cream, mixed; a suspicion of mace, yolks of two eggs, a little cornstarch of flour to thicken. Soak a little macaroni till tender. Put it in the tureen just before serving.

Chicken Basket.—Make a ring of mashed potatoes. Fill the center with creamed chicken. Sprinkle browned breadcrumbs on top.

Codfish Foam.—Make a white sauce of one tablespoonful of flour, one teaspoonful of butter, one cupful of hot milk. Stir until smooth and then add two tablespoonfuls of finely picked codfish, freshened, and the beaten whites of two eggs.

Johnnycake.—One cupful of cornmeal, one-half cupful flour, one teaspoonful soda, salt, two tablespoonfuls molasses, one tablespoonful sugar, sour milk to mix.

HOW TO PREPARE FRENCH SOUPS THAT ARE WHOLESOME.

A bowl of good hot soup is very acceptable. But how often is it good?

Soup should never be used the same day, if possible. Allow it to stand one night and all the flavorings will blend together, which makes all the difference when reheated.

It is a great mistake to put odds and ends of vegetables into the stock pot. The pot should be kept for bones and trimmings of meat, your poultry giblets, bacon rind, etc. Vegetables cause fermentation.

The stock pot should be turned out into a clean enameled bowl every third day, thoroughly cleaned and some of the bones removed. Those that have been in longest will be easily recognized by the cook.

The idea of a stock pot is to have a good foundation for any soup you choose to make, tomato, lentil, celery and potato being four most popular and easily made.

If you have no stock the liquor in which fresh brussels sprouts, cauliflowers, celery, potatoes and onions are boiled all make an excellent start for a vegetable soup. In France they never throw away such liquors, having been taught that the salts and most of the goodness of the articles cooked is in the water.

Half a cupful of milk added to most soups just before serving gives them that soft, creamy taste that makes all the difference.

Stock made from mutton bones blends with turnips, onions, parsley, barley, rice, etc.

Beef stock blends with carrots, lentils, split peas, tomatoes, celery and green pea flour. Onions, unless disliked, go with everything.

A SPRING RENEWAL.

How to Utilize a Castoff Feather Bed by Making Pillows of It.

A few women are fortunate in having inherited a number of old bed pillows and bolsters, and there is nothing like old fashioned feathers for dividing up into filling for sofa pillows while they last. These feathers can always be put together again for bed use if needed, and meanwhile they might just as well be used for sofa pillows as to be laid away in the storeroom.

However, not every one is so fortunate as to have accumulated the feathered bed coverings of her ancestors, and then it is found that to buy new feathers is expensive. The cheaper pillows bought ready made are filled with cotton or with soft clippings from linen and cotton rags, and a good homemade filling for a pillow may be made by cutting a roll of cotton into small squares and heating them in a pan in the oven for half an hour, taking care not to let the cotton scorch. Every square will, according to best authority, swell to twice its original size and become as light and fluffy for filling as feathers.

How to Make Attractive Luncheon Sets to Replace a Burden.

Many of the new luncheon sets are square instead of round. Whether it is merely a passing fad or a fashion here to stay remains to be seen. These square sets have a wide hem and a drawnwork border three-quarters of an inch wide, and a feature of this new drawnwork is the introduction of colored threads.

Swedish weaving is another form of needlework being revived and is applied to household linens. It is really based on drawnwork, but is slightly different, worked in color and quite simple. The delightful part is that after one has acquired a working knowledge of the few stitches used one can create one's own design.

How to Pack Books So the Covers Won't Rub.

To pack books in small packing cases stand the parcels on end with the edges next to the sides of the cases and the back of the bindings pointed toward the inward, and pack them with crumpled newspapers to ease the pressure on the round part of the books, which may otherwise be pressed flat. Line the case with wrapping paper. Lay a thickness of wrapping paper over the top and fasten on the cover with screws in preference to nails.

How to Treat a Bad Burn Before the Doctor Comes.

The best immediate application for a burn or scald is carron oil. This preparation of equal parts of linseed oil and lime water should be kept always at hand when there are young children about. When a child receives a burn or scald shake the bottle of carron oil thoroughly; then saturate some lint, gauze or muslin with it and put on the burned surface. Clean olive oil or vaseline are good substitutes for the carron oil.

A PRINCESS' LOT

The Grand Duchess of Luxemburg Is Closely Guarded.

REPORTED TO BE ENGAGED.

Barely Twenty-one Years Old, the Youngest Ruler In Europe, Marie Adelaide Is Practically a Prisoner In Her Own Palace.

It is reported that the young Grand Duchess of Luxemburg will marry soon, but the name of the fortunate bridegroom to be is withheld.

Marie Adelaide is one of the most pathetic as well as one of the most romantic figures in the world today. This pretty young girl, barely twenty-one years old, was adored by her prosperous little country before the war broke out. Today she is practically a prisoner in her own palace. Unable to get out without a military escort and forced to look from her prison windows upon a people starving, terrified and forced to live upon charity, she has striven bravely to assert her rights and those of her people in the face of the overwhelming power of the German empire, but the struggle is naturally a hopeless one.

To complete her misery great pressure has been brought to bear upon her to marry a German prince, but this she has refused to do, as she bitterly resents the German invasion of her country. For more than a year the kaiser's agents have worked hard to persuade the youngest ruler in Europe to become the bride of a German prince, the object being to insure the future control of Luxemburg. So strong did this pressure become that the spirited young duchess revolted against it and, stamping her foot on the floor of her palace, exclaimed:

"I really must be left alone. If I cannot find peace in my own palace I shall soon be forced to seek it in a convent."

The grand duchess is the oldest of six sisters. Her family is a branch of the house of Orange, which rules in Holland. When Wilhelmina became queen of Holland she could not succeed to Luxemburg because of the Salic law. A cousin of Wilhelmina's became Grand Duke of Luxemburg. When he died in 1912, leaving only girl children, the Luxemburg parliament passed a new law making his daughters eligible to the throne.

Colors For Middle Age.

It is safe to say that few women of middle age can wear brown successfully. When the hair is turning white or gray it is particularly unbecoming, as the gray and brown do not harmonize in the least. Brown seems to bring out all the unbecoming yellow qualities in gray hair. Dark blue, on the other hand, lends it a bluish white tinge that is soft and particularly lovely. If your face is sallow never wear green. If, however, your hair is turning gray, but your skin is white and clear, with a soft pink flush in the cheeks, take to green kindly, as it will be most becoming. Lavender and purple are really beautiful on most middle aged women, while black and gray are equally successful. White, however, seldom looks well unless the skin is almost flawless.

Cream of Beet Soup.

Materials: One cupful of beets well cooked, one pint of mutton stock, two teaspoonfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of butter, one pint of milk, salt and pepper.

Utensils: Two saucepans, fine sieve, spoon and cup.

Directions: Cut the beets fine and simmer in the mutton stock fifteen minutes. Rub through sieve. Mix the butter and flour and add to the mutton stock and beet puree. Heat thoroughly, stirring constantly, and add to a pint of hot milk; season with salt and pepper.

Cinnamon Apples.

Core and wash six good sized tart apples. Mix together three rounding tablespoonfuls of sugar with one teaspoonful of cinnamon. Place the apples in a baking pan with three tablespoonfuls of water. Sprinkle over the prepared sugar and bake in a hot oven until tender. Serve hot or cold with thick, sweet cream.

VETERAN WAITED DEATH, BUT NOW LIKES LIFE

After Digging Own Grave He Falls In Love and Is Hoping He Will Live Longer—Notes Cause Happiness.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Out in Forest Home cemetery there is an open grave waiting for Francis Marion Collins, an inmate of the Soldiers' home in this city.

Five years ago, after Collins had been denied permission by the cemetery authorities to dig his own grave, he went to the city of the dead one dark, rainy night and by the light of a lantern prepared it. Collins is aged eighty-nine. He had a tombstone, inscribed, as he had directed, with everything but the date of his death, erected.

But, though Collins is nearly four score and ten years old and ready to die, he doesn't want to give up the ghost just yet. After making preparations for the last act of the long drama of his life he turned eagerly to life and love. In fact, he has a sweetheart now. Her first name is Annette. He won't tell the rest. She is keeping the veteran interested in life by writing him interesting love letters and visiting him at the home several times a year.

Collins served four years during the war in Company I, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Pennsylvania infantry, Army of the Potomac.

Just What Is Needed for Morning Wear.

For the informalities of morning there are this waist of dotted dimity and skirt of mixed grey and brown jersette. The waist is trimmed with a round yoke over which turns down a collar of white organdy trimmed with embroidery. A pretty idea is to work the embroidery in threads which correspond with the color of the dots in the dimity. The long one-piece sleeves are gathered into deep cuffs of self or plain material. Since the cuffs and collar receive the most strenuous attention from the laundress, it is advisable to make them of white because the color lasts longer.

By closely following the construction guide, it is possible to make the waist in a few hours. First, turn the hem in front on small "o" perforations, then turn under the front edge of the yoke on slot perforations. Gather the upper and lower edges of front and back between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above lower edge. Sew yoke to upper edge and close underarm and shoulder seams as notched. Next, sew the collar to neck edge, center-backs even and along either line of small "o" perforations in front.

Close the sleeve seam as notched and gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of deep cuff as notched, sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve; and bring seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

The yoke may be attached to the waist with veining or narrow insertion, either of which gives a dainty effect to sheer materials.

Plays Golf While Portugal Prepares For War.

LAND SIDES WITH ALLIES.

Former Ruler Apparently Is Not Worried Over Course Republic Is Pursuing—Germany Has Formally Declared War on Portugal, Although a State of War Has Existed.

London.—While former King Manuel of Portugal is playing golf and taking life easy in England, the little republic of Portugal, once his domain, is completing preparations for war on the side of the allies. Germany has formally declared war on Portugal, although a state of war has practically existed between the two countries since the German troops invaded Portuguese Africa in 1914.

Soon after this invasion Portugal sent re-enforcements to her African possessions, and there have been a number of clashes between the German and Portugal colonial troops.

The total war strength of the Portuguese army is 260,000 men. It is estimated that fully 160,000 soldiers have been mobilized for some months to be ready for the conflict. It is over a year since the Portuguese government decided to co-operate with the allies whenever the step seemed necessary. While Portugal has been preparing for war for some time, internal political conditions have delayed matters. A peace party has made its strength felt in that republic, but with Germany's declaration of war party lines will be obliterated.

Portugal has an alliance with Great Britain dating from 1703 that requires the Portuguese government to furnish Great Britain with 10,000 soldiers when the latter is at war. While these troops have not been put at the disposal of Great Britain in the European theater of war, the Portuguese have been co-operating with the troops of the allies in Africa.

While the peace strength of the Portuguese army is only 30,000, with 8,105 more men in the colonial army, the government has 230,000 reserves and 871,476 available men for war purposes. The navy of the republic, however, is one of the smallest in the world. It consists of one second class cruiser, four third class cruisers, fifteen gunboats, five destroyers, four torpedo boats and one submarine.

Most of these vessels are of an antiquated type. The Vasco da Gama, the star ship of the navy, has been in service since 1878. It cost $600,000 and is of 3,030 tons displacement. It is equipped with two eight-inch guns, one six-inch, one twelve-pounder and eight three-pounders. The Vasco da Gama has a complement of 259 officers and men.

Portugal, with the Azores and Madeira island, has a population of 5,957,985 and an area of 35,490 square miles. The population of the republic's colonial possessions in Africa is 8,300,000, and these colonies have an area of 823,334 square miles. The colonies in Asia have an area of 8,933 square miles and a population of 950,000. Portuguese Africa is made up of Angola, the Kongo, Guinea, East Africa and some islands.

Many Portuguese have been bitter toward Germany for many years. They have felt that the kaiser's government has had designs on the Azores and Angola. The war party in the republic has long been enthusiastic to enter the contest on the side of the allies not only on account of the treaty with Great Britain, but on account of the long standing grievance against Germany.

The wealth of Portugal is estimated at $2,500,000,000. The national debt amounts to $947,603,000. The revenue of the country is $81,060,000 a year, with an additional yearly revenue of $17,186,000 from the colonies.

The Only Thing They Ever Did.

John Bright's powers of sarcasm were almost unrivaled. Some of his sharpest utterances were against members of the nobility. When boasts had been made of the antiquity of a prominent family, that their ancestors came over with the Conqueror, his prompt reply was, "I never heard that they did anything else."

VARIOUS INITIALS.

Hints About Marking Child's Garments So They Won't Mix.

One can buy in the various stores initials by the yard, worked in red or blue outline stitch on narrow strips of linen tape, three-eighths or a half inch wide.

These letters are used for marking plain underclothing, etc. They are of great use to the mother with a large family, who has neither money nor time to spare on embroidery and who finds it necessary to have some distinguishing mark on the clothing, especially when there are two children the same size.

The letters are cut off from the strip when needed and overcast on the inside of the garment, any place where it will be invisible when worn.

When this system is used even stockings are easily paired. Sew each child's initial at the top of the stocking on the inside; then put a cross stitch in red under the letter on each stocking of the first pair. Use a blue cross stitch on the second, yellow on the third, etc.

It is an easy matter to sort even a large pile of stockings, two M's with red crosses being a pair of Mary's stockings, two M's with green crosses another pair, while two J's with blue crosses are a pair of stockings belonging to Jack.

If two children have the same initial use the blue letters for one and red for the other.

Street and Motor Coats.

The ripple coat for spring is made in both cloth and silk. Belts are placed at the normal waist line, at slightly higher than normal or a few inches below the point. Some are short waisted in the front and long waisted in the back. Both styles are liked.

Many coats have high collars and button up to the throat. They are made so that they can be worn open or closed. Oblong sailor collars, draped collars, ruche effect collars, cape collars and simple notched collars are approved. The cape collar is made detachable, being fastened with clasps or with buttons.

Sleeves are dressy, both in cut and by means of fancy cuffs. Motor coats are in plain colors, stripes, checks, plaids and mixtures.

Your New Veil.

If you would preserve that new novelty veil of yours and get from it the greatest possible wear do not fold it when putting it away. Instead take a piece of cardboard, around which you may roll it without creases, cover it with tissue paper and keep it in the box with your hat, and it will always be in the best condition and ready for wear.

Child's Cereal Set.

Nowadays there are many American wares of rather coarse clay finished in beautiful colors and made in pretty shapes. A child's set, consisting of a plate, bowl and milk jug—a cereal set—is yellow, and around the top of the jug and bowl and around the edge of the plate is a decoration of white ducklings.

MINIMUM LIVING FOR FAMILY OF FOUR IN N. Y.

New York—The minimum amount of money upon which a family of four can exist in New York is $580.32 a year. This deduction was made yesterday by Edward F. Brown, executive secretary of the School Lunch Committee, speaking in the Church of the Messiah.

Mr. Brown pointed out that the subway workers are now striking for a minimum wage of $2 a day, or $624 a year. If these workers can live on the minimum, he said, they would have left, even if they win the strike, $43.68 a year.

Mr. Brown estimates the minimum expenses of a family on a monthly basis as follows. Rent, $13; food, $22.11; fuel and light, $3.25; clothing, $580.32 a year.

"Figuring up on this basis," he said, "I have not, as you will see, taken into account the doctor, the druggist, the undertaker, insurance or the bare recreational needs. Even the experts can hardly tell us how mental, moral and physical starvation can be averted on this impossible budget.

"According to the reports of the school doctors, 40,000 children in the public schools are starved. Every day they eat insufficient food properly to keep body and soul together."

"While death from actual starvation is not of frequent occurance among the children, so far as we know, death from disease due to improper food becomes more and more menacing.

"Forty-three per cent of the total cost of living is spen for food. The chance of securing an adequate supply of wholesome food usually declines with the limited income of the bread-winner.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

No charge made for this space.

This is a beautiful day and you should immediately make up your mind to plant those flowers. Make your city, your yard, your garden look like a little heaven this year. It will increase the value and looks of your property and will make you feel good yourself.

* * *

We have faith in your signature; we believe in you and your name. Have you paid those dues? Remember that the plans laid out by the Chamber will make the expenditure of money a necessity.

* * *

The street department has been doing very good things; we wonder if it would not be possible to drag some of the dirt roads in the city; it would improve those roads quite considerable. Even if we don't have very much money, we may be able to do quite a number of things by pulling together.

* * *

There are other streets besides First, Cayuga and Oneida in the city of FULTON, some of those streets need looking after very badly.

* * *

The idea of some people to always stick their noses in other people's affairs is a very bad one. Get the habit of TAKING CARE OF YOUR OWN BUSINESS and you will have success. The person who has time to talk about others naturally NEGLECTS HIS OWN BUSINESS AND SHOWS THAT HE IS NOT THE RIGHT KIND OF A FELLOW.

* * *

We naturally all have out mistakes and shortcomings; we all will do more or less things, we should not do at all. But that does not mean that we have a right to ruin the reputation of others by simply hanging out the gossip sign. Things, as a general rule, are not as bad, as they are painted.

* * *

A little of the Western spirit would do FULTON a lot of good. Sometimes it pays not being too conservative. A little snap in your work and you will feel better when it is all over. A little ginger in your plans for the future and you will do a lot of good for FULTON.

* * *

Nothing is impossible in this world. Try to find this out and you will be surprised when you find that you are able to do things when you go after them in the right way.

* * *

Whatever you may start, put all the energy into it you have on hand and educate yourself to get still more energy by following the very good examples set by a few men in the city.

* * *

It is all well and good to be religious, but please don't forget that you should not be narrow, because that is NOT the meaning of the gospel of the Lord.

* * *

If you think that YOU are right and the OTHER fellow wrong, please think it over again and place yourself in the position of the other fellow and then make up your mind what you WOULD have done, if you had been in his place and the . . . well think for yourself.

* * *

We had a very good meeting last evening and ten men joined the military company. We are now going out to get still more and hope to have four squads in a short time.

* * *

The best thing for a young fellow is a military training; it makes you more manly; it is an education all by itself and worth the time you have to spend for it.

Germans Gain West of Meuse; May Trap Village Garrison

Paris—With a violence which even surpasses the first stages of the battle of Verdun the Germans since Sunday morning have been attacking with two full army corps and at least an extra division from Avocourt to Vacherauville. Under the delusion that the French retirement from Bethincourt was the beginning of a retreat the Germans launched their forces with all fury against the sides of the Avocourt-Cumieres loop, thinking in the confusion of French movement to break in the sides and cut off the garrison that had been holding the angle north of the Avocourt-Mort Homme-Cumieres line. On the west, near Avocourt some ground was gained in the effort to flank Hill No. 304, but on the east the defensive positions remained intact.

The main German effort yesterday, undertaken after further and most violent artillery preparation, was directed at the top of the loop from Haucourt and Bethincourt. It met with no success, but late last night, undismayed by their repulse during the afternoon the Germans were breaking ground for a renewal of the assaults.

The German attacks on Sunday night extended over a front thirteen miles long, from Hill No. 304 to Fort Douaumont. The War Office announcement in the afternoon said that in the fighting west of the Meuse for possession of Dead Man's Hill the Germans were repulsed except in af ront of 300 yards near Hill No. 295. East of the river the Germans assaults gained no appreciable results.

A third attack at the same time was delivered on a position strongly organized by the French northeast of Avocourt, the object seemingly being to drive in the French line far enough to turn Hill No. 304, which lies 800 yards to the south and constitutes what is characterized as the Gibraltar in the French line in that district. This attack met with more success than the others, but after the Germans had succeeded in getting a footing at some points in the first trenches the French counter-attacked, and the net result for the Germans was an increase in their losses from the French bayonets. It is stated that at the close of the day the French held exactly the same position as at the beginning of the attack.

LOUISA HAMMOND ASKS FOR DAMAGES

Judge Coville gave a hearing yesterday in the case of Mrs. Louisa Hammond, of this city, as administratrix of the estate of Leon Hammond, a call member of the fire department.

Mr. Hammond was made a callman on November 30th, 1915, and was injured in the line oof his duty December 27th, 1915, death resulting the same day. The petition says a claim for $2,500 has been filed, but that the city disputes thel iability. It then recites that no pension fund is maintained by Fulton for its fire department, that section 199 of the charter of Fulton grants to the firemen the same privileges and exemptions as are accorded by the laws of the State to volunteer firemen and that chapter 205 of the General Municipal laws, as amended in 1914, requires any city to pay the sum of $2,500 to the administratrix of a deceased volunteers fireman who had within one year thereafter died in the performance of his duty.

The city of Fulton was represented by City Attorney W. S. Hillick, who contended that the law giving the callman thep rivilege of volunteers does not accrue to them the right of compensation. By agreement of the attorneys it was decided to adjourn one week in order to permit briefs to be filed.

$12,500 Wanted by Board for First St. Improvement Work

As a sequel to the State's action in approving the plans for a brick pavement in East 1st st., between Rochester and Broadway, the oard of Public Works, last night, adopted resolutions which provide for a bond issue of $12,500, to be applied to the city's share in the improvement cost. This sum is slightly in excess of the amount required, as explained by City Attorney Hillick—made so to provide against probable extra expense which may result by finding it necessary to replace the water mains underlying the present pavement. Another factor entering into the excesss sum to be asked for is a provision against a second call for funds to complete the job. Opinions for and against the loan will be heard on Monday, May 3rd.

This particular street improvement is to be especially substantial, according to the opinion of men familiar with highway work. In the first place the street will remain its present width, 34 feet. Instead of a cushion of sand underneath the brick there will be laid a coating of concrete which will adhere to the brick, making a solid mass. Engineer Hill is authority for the statement that modern paving methods provide for this way of doing things.

Villa Wounded by Shot from Rifle in Hands of Enraged Father

El Paso, Texas—Villa and what is left of his band of raiders are in the State of Durango, between ElOro and Tepehuantes, with no American troops within a hundred miles of them.

Villa as as light wound in the left leg, inflicted by an enraged father at Minaca when the bandit tried to attack his daughter.

The Arrieta brothers, after burning American property and mistreating foreign business men, have fortified the city of Durango by the construction of fourteen adobe forts at the north and east ends of the city.

On the night of March 30, when Villa was known to be close to Chilhuahua City and believed to be about to make a raid on it, General Luis Guiterrez, Military Governor of the State, marched every soldier of his command north of the city, leaving foreigners and the Mexican population absolutely at the mercy of the bandits. It was thirty hours later, when it was known that Villa had gone south, that the garrison returned.

The mystery concerning the wound suffered by Villa is at last cleared up and the episode makes a tragic story. After his murder of foreigners at Guerrero and Minaca, Villa went to the home of George Locke, livery stable man and horsetrader, of Minaca, who brought out the first news of the killings. Locke had left, but his coachman, Andres Rehaza, and his daughter were there. Rehaza was a big, broad shouldered Mexican and his daughter is a very beautiful girl. Villa left after his first visit without molesting the girl, but later returned with two soldiers and demanded that the girl be turned over to him. When the father protested Villa ordered the soldiers to seize the girl. They were about to obey the order, when Rehaza drew a pistol and fired point blank at Villa.

One of the soldiers knocked down Rehaza's hand as he fired and the bullet struck the bandit in thel eft knee, crippling him, but not inflicting a serious wound. Rehaza was promptly dragged to the sidewalk and shot to death before his daughter. Nothing is said in the private messages which reached here today of the ultimate fate of the girl.

The thing that stands out big today is that Villa is now in a country where it will be difficult for any considerable force to follow him. How far south of Parral the American cavalry has gone is not known here, but Villa can keep moving ahead of it. The route he took is known to be that described in these despatches last night and his presence in then eighborhood of El Oro is confirmed by several private messages received here tonight.

45—PAGE NEWS ITEMS—45

Tuesday, April 11, 1916.

A writer in Leslie's Weekly furnishes food for thought in dis using the amenities of traveling, as follows: "With the knowledge of travelling conditions abroad and at home, and after having seen America pretty thoroughly, I must acknowledge that the dining car service, the sleepers and facilities generally on our trains and steamers are ahead of those of any other country. But it is true that the employees of our railroads are not as polite as they are abroad, excepting perhaps the porters, who do not regard their service as beneath them and are therefore willing to do their best to make every passenger comfortable. Of course they receive tips, but conductors would not accept them. One never found a conductor on a foreign train who was above accepting a gratuity. On the other hand, too frequently the traveler is apt to be discourteous when hurried or worried and often complains with little cause and is inappreciative of many small attentions. A pleasant 'Thank you,' and a genial smile can be as readily appreciated by the railroad or steamship attendant as by the traveler himself."

The late Henry James was American born, but lived abroad the great part of his threescore and odd years. He wrote of America, as a rule, and his "Daisy Miller" led to a popularization here of his name, which otherwise must have stood for peculiarity in literature. James' Daisy Miller was not a genuine type, but was at least a human creation. The tale appeared soon after the Centennial exhibition in Philadelphia, where on a large scale American manners and ideals were pitted against those of Europeans visiting the show and incidentally the country. It furnished wholesome food for reflection, and no doubt many of the newly and extravagantly rich American girls modified their deportment in the face of that cutting satire upon presumption. But the satire reacted, because the girl was so lovable in herself that the onus fell upon the parents responsible for her unsophistication and helplessness.

The war with pneumonia, the great decimator which is on from December to May, also calls for preparedness. Preparedness against pneumonia lies not so much in doing things as in not doing things. The don'ts in the case are many and can be summed up briefly in the commandment—don't overdo one's normal powers in anything whatever. Do not in the danger months eat too much, drink too much, work too hard nor play too hard nor work nor live nor sleep in vitiated air. It is said that tramps are seldom victims of pneumonia, for the reason that they continually breathe in the open.

The federal bank reserve act has been in operation about one year, and it is conceded that during this period the reserve resources of the United States have not had a fair test. This means that the law creating the new system has not had adequate trial. The federal reserve board, however, declares that "the year's experience has confirmed the board in its profound conviction that the act has been one of the most beneficial pieces of legislation ever adopted." The principle is sound, and it has worked to practical advantage.

Discussing government ownership recently, Senator Weeks of Massachusetts pointed out that it would cost the United States $15,000,000,000 to take over its railroads and that if the government owned the railways there would be a loss in the taxes it now obtains amounting to about $140,000,000 a year. These are striking figures.

A layman would have supposed himself presumptuous in advising the New York subway engineers that an underground highway needs adequate drains as well as a surface highway, but it seems that the warning would have been pat.

The recent sale of fifteen yearlings sired by the best racing stock of the old world to a single buyer for $50,000 is taken by turfmen as an indication that good judges are willing to invest in choice horseflesh.

THE TOWN MIRRORED

Perhaps the devil made some of the towns—large and small, but he is not going to be allowed to keep them. Evangelist Peacock is coming to lock horns with the wily gentleman in this town and then for an awakening to our own peculiar advantages and opportunities. Here we are going to get together and beautify our environment. A good beginning has been made on the ground surrounding one of the public school buildings, thanks to the particular department responsible for the work. But that is a mere bagatelle to the work remaining, which includes the improvement of living conditions, to say nothing about stimulating a semblance to real community life. Space we have to begin with. Commodious churches are here—enough to house whosoever will enter. The high school building is a relic of the last century. A change may come in that direction, too, as the most obtuse individual takes his turn when the grim reaper comes around, and the cemetery yawns for the men who can but will not see that we are not drifting along the line of providing proper educational advantages. Fresh air and pure water we have. The telephone and splendid transportation facilities link us with the markets of the country and enable us to get from the world its special advantages without the disadvantage of living elsewhere.

We have some well paved streets and many that would disgrace the most unpretentious hamlet in Kansas. We have a lighting system rated high by cities large and small. Our system of sewers does not provide a model for other towns the size of Fulton. Many towns have worked for a well-equipped boys' club and gymnasium and won. The same thing can be done here, but not until we are willing to give up something which gives us pleasure in order that the young men may have their turn.

It would be fine were a large percentage of our people to own their own homes, which would be the case if they could be organized into a savings and loan association. These and more good things can be had by pulling together, by alertness, by progressiveness. It takes loyal citizens, citizens with some action to make a town what it ought to be—a fine, clean, wholesome place in which to live and grow. If the Peacock campaign is productive of arousing a spirit which shall sweep aside some of the lethargy which hinders us from seizing more of the advantages within reach, then it will go down in history as a god-send.

THOUGHTS THAT SINK DEEP

The best stimulant known to mankind is that which stimulates thought—that impels good, hard thinking or sound reasoning on any subject worthy of earnest consideration. Such stimulant is not supplied in liquid form, as some imagine. It comes in different form, in something like the following:

"As society departs from the principles of Christ it is only a kind of civilized hell," declared Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch of Rochester, N. Y., at the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall, Chicago, recently.

"His first principle was that every human life and personality were sacred. This respect for human life is the very foundation of civilization. But you can see how we disregard it. Human life is cheap; cheap in war, cheap in peace. Men are often looked upon only as 'hands' to produce wealth.

"But I do not know any way in which the human personality is so despised as in prostitution.

"Unearned money is our curse today. Christ said property must serve the common good. Property is fundamental to our liberty and expression of personality, but it may be used to defeat these very ends."

A stimulant for thought will be found in every sentence of this excerpt. First turn over in your mind the impressive words, "Every human life and personality were sacred." That admonishes to considerate treatment of every individual, male or female, big or little, rich or poor. Disregard of such sacredness is unjust, iniquitous, indefensible. Violation of the principle of humanity is a kind of civilized hell, as Prof. Rauschenbusch puts it. Bear this in mind—not once a week only, but every day of the week, Sunday not excepted.

Property must serve the common good otherwise it is stripped of its useful purpose. Millions and millions of dollars are invested in railroads—not simply to earn money for their owners and operators, but to serve the common good; to enable people to travel long or short distances, as may serve their purpose, pleasure or convenience. A grist mill converts wheat into flour—not simply to make business for the owner of the mill but to feed the hungry with bread. And so on and so forth. Any business that does not in some way contribute to the common good is a perversion of property—a flagrant misuse, an unpardonable abuse thereof. Such misuse, such abuse, must be neutralized some way, somehow. The exact method of correcting or remedying should be deemed a part of the duty of statesmanship, of ethical power, of governmental function. It is not given to man to make use of property wholly for self-gratification, for satisfying purely mercenary purposes, or for catering to a greedy, grasping spirit. To prevent society from being perverted to a civilized hell, equity must be held in sight and the rights of mankind asserted at any and all times. Truly, "unearned money is our curse today." Millions and billions of unearned money are in possession of individuals who owe their personal and property safely to organized society, to the strong protecting arm of the law, and who yet vehemently demur to contributing of their abundance in proportion to the exactions upon the scant possessions of one who considers himself lucky if he can earn from two to three dollars a day while in the full vigor of his capability and before he is put out of commission on the plea of being too old to fill this or that position in mill, shop or factory.

Property is indeed fundamental to our liberty. It must not be permitted to serve as an instrumentality for humanity's enslavement.—Exchange.

OUR CASE AND BRITAIN'S

Those who defend the sea depredations of the European belligerents always ignore the initial lawlessness upon which they are based. Thus A. Maurice Low uses many words in an attempt to show that Great Britain's operations are the same as those of the United States during the Civil War, but he neglects to say that the United States proclaimed and maintained an effective blockade according to law, whereas Great Britain has not done anything of the kind. The doctrines of continuous voyage and enemy destination as held by American courts were applied to blockade-runners. Without going to the trouble of declaring and maintaining a true blockade, Great Britain applies them to neutral ships passing between neutral ports.

Such American precedents as bear upon the present situation have to do with Matamoros, a port on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande. Seizures of ships consigned to that city, even though their cargoes were notoriously intended for transshipment by land to the Confederacy, were disallowed on the ground that there could be no blockage of a neutral port. Mr. Low conveniently overlooks these judgments, just as the apologists for Germany's submarine outlawry refuse to notice the fact that the misdeeds of the U boats all proceed in the first instance from violation of the law requiring visit and search.—N. Y. World.

TEMPTING FACTIONALISM

Men who contemplate the present political situation free from the play of their own prejudices for and against candidates must see the lack of wisdom in the talk of nominating Colonel Roosevelt. The Sagamore Hill statesman and politician has a strong following that is his in all weather, but it is the vociferous following. Colonel Roosevelt is one of the cleverest of clever politicians. It is possible, though not probable, that he will be able to maneuver so as to land the Republican nomination. But getting the nomination and compelling people to vote for a candidate are two entirely different matters.

Colonel Roosevelt would have the opposition not alone of the united Democracy, but of a substantial number of Republicans who cannot and will not forget his course in 1912. Only a united Republican party can win from Wilson this year. Colonel Roosevelt said in 1912 that he was going to get a lot of Democratic votes, but it is a matter of political history that he failed in this, and if he could not get Democratic votes in 1912, he certainly could not get them this year.

There is much talk about stampeding the Republican convention and of "the one strong candidate that is accessible." The Republican national convention has never been stampeded in past decades, and, although presidential possibilities of commanding figures have hovered about, they have sometimes failed in their prposes. A case in point was 1888: Cleveland was president and a popular Democrat. People considered that he had made a fairly good president. Factional Republicans said that Blaine alone was the over-shadowing possibility to be. It was pointed out that there were other small fry on the stage, but that when the final test came Blaine would be brought forward as the only candidate possessing enough strength to win. But the prediction failed. A man from Indiana, Benjamin Harrison, not a nation-wide celebrity, not a political idol, was brought forward and nominated, and more important still, he was elected over a popular Democrat.

There is no reason to believe that Hughes will fail his fellow Republicans and his countrymen. If it develops that he is not available when the convention meets it by no means follows that Roosevelt must be accepted. Blaine represented a faction of the party and he failed. Roosevelt today is only an erstwhile Republican and the severe factionalism over his personality and political history far exceeds in intensity any feeling that existed in the days of the plumed knight.—Watertown Times.

WALKING FERNS.

These Curious Plants Travel About in a Novel Manner.

Some plants when they get the wanderlust and want to travel send out their seed children fastened to tiny air ships or winged kites. Others shoot their seeds like bullets from guns. This one reaches out his foot, takes a long step and travels just like you do when you visit the woods. That's why we call him the walking fern.

His fronds are green and heart shaped. They taper at the ends, and at each tip a bud forms. From this bud a cluster of small fronds and roots develop, dangling from the end of the frond like weight on the end of a spring.

As the cluster grows and gets heavier the top of the frond bends toward the earth. The weight of the rain and dew helps bend until finally the tip touches the earth. There the partially developed roots take hold and start a new plant.

So the fern keeps on walking, sending out new fronds, bending them to the earth and starting new plants. The plants are linked together by the fine threadlike fronds until instead of one walking fern they have a whole parade.

Unfortunately this interesting plant is more or less rare, although it is a native of the eastern United States. It doesn't thrive well as a cultivated plant, or perhaps we would see more of it.—Philadelphia North American.

FLIGHT OF THE ALBATROSS.

Wing Movements That a Chance Snap With a Camera Revealed.

During the voyage of a vessel from British Columbia to San Francisco the photographic test was applied to a long disputed point in natural history. A large albatross had been following the steamer and keeping pace with it for several hours, and the wonder grew among the watchers on board the ship how the bird was able to fly so swiftly while apparently keeping its wings extended without flapping them. As this is a common method of flight with the albatross, the explanation used to be offered that the bird took advantage of slight winds and air currents, and was so able to glide upon what might be called atmospheric slopes.

As the albatross sailed alongside the ship, about fifteen feet away, the naturalist snapped his camera at it and obtained a photograph that astonished him and his fellow passengers.

The photograph revealed, what no eye had caught, the wings of the albatross, each some five feet long, in the act of making a downward stroke. The explanation naturally suggested was that more or less frequently the bird must have made a stroke of this kind with its wings, although the eye could not detect the motion, and that the camera chanced to be snapped at precisely the right moment.—New York Post.

Some Big Trees.

What undoubtedly is the largest deciduous tree now growing in the United States is a sycamore near Worthington, Ind., which at five feet from the ground measures forty-two feet, three inches in circumference. Its height is approximately 150 feet. According to local claims, this remarkable specimen is inferior to one long since felled in the same district, which had a girth of sixty-seven feet. A valley oak which measures thirty-seven feet six inches in circumference was the largest nut bearing tree found during a contest. This is situated in San Benito county, Cal., and reaches to a height of 125 feet. In a good season it bears a ton of acorns. America's largest elm seems to be "the great elm" at Wethersfield, Conn., which at the base has a circumference of over fifty-five feet. It is supposed to be about 250 years old. — Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Naming the Aegean Sea.

The Aegean sea is remarkable among the seas of the world for the obscurity in which the origin of its name is involved. Even the ancients could not give a certain answer on the point. A popular view was that it was named after Aegeus, the father of Theseus, who threw himself into it when his son forgot to hoist the white sail upon his return from Crete as a signal that he had slain the Minotaur. But others derived the name from Aegea, a queen of the Amazons, who also perished in this sea; others from the town of Aegae, in Euboea (Negropont), and a fourth theory traced it to the word "aiges," goats, which the islands of the archipelago were fancifully thought to resemble.

Who Is to Blame?

It is a very conservative thing to say that there are four women to every man in the church membership of America. Many people are wont to lay the blame for this upon the churches. Quite a number of folks would like to lay it upon the men. Some fault the women for it. Is it not possible that the responsibility rests upon our social structure?—Bernard I. Bell in Atlantic.

EYES ON AVIATORS

Spectacular Air Battles In Europe Focus Attention.

AMAZING PROGRESS MADE.

Many a Sensation Is Produced When Bird-Men Meet In Air—Participants Could Give Story With Imperishable Vividness—Often Near Death.

London.—Europe's war has produced conditions that make aeroplaning the grimmest adventure known to man. War is man's oldest game. Aviation is his latest. Each day intrepid air men, under twenty-five years of age for the most part, like hawks make course above roof, tent, rampart and battlefield to thrust suddenly below premeditated thunderbolts of death. They fight duels in the air with other indomitable young men in enemy aeroplanes. When something goes wrong a mile or more above earth on a mild June evening in time of peace a queer sensation is produced. The percussive crack heard by thousands of air men above the European battle lines these days and nights in all kinds of weather produces a sensation much more queer. A lieutenant just out of his teens, a wing broken, clinging to his duty, his ears deafened, little knowing whether it is the whistling storm he hears or the whir of shot—thousands of such men can testify that an experience of the sort is a thing of imperishable vividness.

Cowdin and Thaw, among numerous Americans who have joined the fighting air men, can tell many such tales. Boelke, Immelmann, Guynemer, Bone, among the newcomers, and Vedrines, Beaumont and Garros, to mention a few of the veterans, are making ineffaceable records. These men use the aeroplane, or avion, as they call it, not merely as a scouting vehicle, but as a deadly instrument of offense.

Lieutenant Boelke of the German army recently brought down his thirteenth machine over the Forges forest. Lieutenant Baron von Althaus brought down his fourth aeroplane over enemy lines west of Lihons. The element of sport enters even into aeroplane warfare. After all, thinks the aviator, the shame is not so much in being caught as being caught by a mere amateur with a paltry record of two or three captures to his name.

Lieutenant Immelmann recently bagged his tenth enemy aeroplane. The gallantry and bravery of Lieutenant Warneford illustrates the spirit of these European aviators. Single handed he attacked a Zeppelin and destroyed it. A few days later, accompanied by the American writer Needham, he made a pleasure trip, and both men were killed in landing.

On intimate terms with death were those fifty air men who fought the greatest aerial battle of the war recently when the allied aeroplanes raided Mulhausen, Upper Alsace. Five German aeroplanes and three French fell, the occupants of all being killed.

On the outbreak of the war Adolphe Pegoud, the famous French aviator who gained renown in 1913 when he originated the feat of flying upside down in an aeroplane and looping the loop, joined the French squadron and was often mentioned for valor. He startled the American people when he came to this country and did the loop the loop. His daring feats will go down in aeronautic history.

Wild Beasts Kill Deer.

Eugene, Ore.—The snowfall has resulted in a great slaughter of deer by predatory animals, in the opinion of C. J. Hills of Oakridge. He tells of finding several carcasses, one indicating that the deer had been killed by a wildcat. At this point the snow was twenty feet deep, and the deer had been there apparently several days in a space ten feet square. It had eaten a bunch of maple bushes for food. As it could not get out of its snow prison it became easy prey.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—All Staatsburg turned out and, headed by the village cornet band, serenaded Timothy Herrick, eighty, who returned from a visit to Syracuse, bringing with him his bride, formerly Miss Martha Wallace, thirty-nine, a schoolteacher of that city.

Herrick, who for fifty years has been superintendent on the William B. Dinsmore estate, recently refurnished his cottage. Nothing was thought of this, however, until his arrival with the bride.

Herrick has six children, all married. His first wife died four years ago.

MASONIC GRAND LODGE TO MEET

Master Masons of State to Convene in Rochester on May 2nd.

The annual convocation of the Grand Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, of the state of New York will open in Masonic Temple, Rochester, on Tuesday morning, May 2d, and continue through Wednesday and Thursday. Thomas Penny, of Buffalo, will be chosen grand master and a deputy grand master will be taken from the metropolitan district. By a rule of the Grand Lodge, the deputy grand master must come from a metropolitan lodge when the grand master hails from up-state. By this arrangement the New York city lodges have the advantage of requiring their representative to serve but one term as deputy before being eligible to the office of grand master.

William Farmer, of Syracuse, will be chosen senior grand warden and Justice Tompkins, of Nyack, junior grand warden. The fraternity now numbers in the neighborhood of 200,000 members in the New York state jurisdiction. John B. Mullan is deputy for the thirty-third district, which includes twenty-nine lodges in Monroe and Livingston counties. The grand master will appoint a new district deputy within thirty days from the time he is installed.

To Lower Temple Debt

The Grand Lodge has little business other than routine to occupy its attention this year. The matter of liquidating the debt on the Masonic Temple in New York city, owned by the Masons of the state and from which the rentals furnish the revenue for the maintenance of the Masonic Home at Utica, will be vigorously pushed. More than $500,000 has been subscribed by the lodges and it is expected that this amount will be greatly augmented at the Grand Lodge session.

Justice George Freifeld, of Brooklyn, hass erved two terms as grand master. He has made great effort to free the temple of much of its debt. The master of each of the twenty-nine lodges in the thirty-third district will attend as a delegate. Among other Masons who will go from this section are Justice S. Nelson Sawyer and George McGowan, of Palmyra, past grand masters; Dr. Jared Reed, grand high priest, and Marvin I. Greenwood, past grand high priest of Newark; George A. Newell, of Medina; Arthur Warren, commissioner of appeals; J. Hungerford Smith, permanent member of the Grand Lodge; John B. Mullan, district deputy, and George G. Davis, grand steward.

NO EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION

Members of fraternal organizations are deeply interested in the attempt on the part of the Masonic odges of Watertown to have the new Masonic temple there excmpted from taxation.

The nights of Columbus, the Elks and the Odd Fellows own their own homes here and are subject to taxation as are allother owners of real estate. According to the assessors no building owned by af raternal order is entitled to exemption unless it can be shown that every cent received from the property is expended for the support of widows and orphans and the upkeep of fraternal homes.

The State Board of Tax Commissioners has taken the position outlined above and it is upon this that the local assessors take their stand. The State commission has declared as follows:

"The real property of a fraternal organization should be assessed by the assessors and entered upon the assessment roll for full value. A fraternal organization, claiming exemption from assessment, should make proper application to the assessors for such exemption, and should submit all data and facts necessary to enable the assessors to determine whether or not the property is or is not exempt from assessment. The courts have established no general rule for exempting property of fraternal organizations. Each case has been considered separately and the decision of the courts has applied only to the particular case in question. The charter, by-laws and other governing rules of thef raternal organizations claiming exemption should be carefully examined by the assessors. In order to secure exemption, the fraternal organization must be wholly within the provisions of the tax law. If its charter, by-laws or other governing rules go beyond the specific provisions of this section of the law, the property is not entitled to exemption from local assessment."

The assessors of Watertown do not believe that there is any such property in the city that is legally exempt, although last year the assessment against the Odd Fellows' Temple was taken off the books at the direction of the city attorney, after the lodge had placed the matter in the hands of its attorney. On the strength of this action the Masonic bodies Tuesday night protested against paying the tax on the Masonic temple this year and asked for a rebate. Until the present year the assessors say that fraternal organizations have paid taxes on their property in this city and the Odd Fellows' temple has been the only property of this kind to be exempted. This property will go back on the assessment roll this year."

MORTON'S PLEA FOR SINGLE TAX THEORY

James F. Morton, jr., secretary of the State Single Tax League, made an address in Rochester on Sunday in part as follows:

"Thomas A. Edison has made millions by exploitation, but by the energy of an unusually acute mind and creative imagination he has returned social service very largely the equivalent of the fortune they have brought him," said Mr. Morton.

"The new baron of England, William Waldorf Astor, is nothing more or less than a social parasite. Every dollar he owns or ever will own has come from land tribute. Land values are the result of a communal prosperity. If several million people had wanted to settle on Robinson Crusoe's island, Mr. Crusoe could have fixed his own price, but without the several millions his islands were valueless except for fictional purposes."

Yet the United States taxes Edison, pointed out the speaker, in the same percentages it taxes Astor and his brother plutocrats. The single-tax plan, he argued, would give equality and justice in proportion to production. The present plan, contended Mr. Morton, trusses labor, discourages industry and shifts the burden from one to the other in a bewildering way that possesses no grain of fairness.

"The old slave-owner," said Mr. Morton, "cracked his lash; the land monopolist says, 'get off the earth, for I own it, or pay my terms. Work for what I'm willing to give you.'"

"THE GIRL HE COULDN'T BUY"

In this complex age when so many things crowd upon one making appeal for their share of attention, the person who cannot afford to waste one bit of time, must select his amusements, as other things, with the utmost care. "The Girl He Couldn't Buy" which will hold the boards at the Quirk, matinee and night, Thursday, April 15th is said to be a dramatic offering worth while seeing. It is described as a drama of contemporary things dealing with a phase of modern life somewhat startling perhaps withal so true that its appeal is undeniable. It depicts the course of a young girl "Hope Nelson," who has been reared in a home of ease and refinement. She is suddenly cast upon her own resources thro failure in business of her father and his death shortly afterwards. Necessity compels her to accept a six dollar a week clerkship in one of New York's large department stores. Things move along fairly smooth until "Hope" loses her position and finds herself about to be turned into the streets by her landlady because she is unable to pay two weeks back room rent. Along comes her fathers former partner—a wealthy business man—with a resolution of all her troubles. She rejects his offer of assistance on account of the proposal that accompanies it. He with a frankness which ordinarily disarms those less forceful, laughs her argument aside as being absurd. It is upon this conflict between a mere stripling of a girl and the wealthy business man that Sumner Nichols has based the theme of his play. Running thro the drama is a rich vein of comedy, which produces more hearty laughs than a dozen musical comedies.

WOULD LIVE WHERE SHE KILLED HUSBAND

Frederick, Md.—"I want to go back to my home in the mountains to live. There I can be more alone than any place I know. I want to take my children up there and be alone with them in the woods."

This is the expressed desire of Mrs. Eloise Young English, who recently in this same mountain cabin shot and killed her husband to protect herself and their children from his anger.

"There are a lot of chickens up there, and the property is big," she said as if to convince herself that her plan was practicable. "I believe that I could get along very nicely though I do not expect to be happy again. I have never had a ray of sunshine since I married, and I surely do not hope for any now."

That Mrs. English has been completely exonerated from blame is shown in the attitude of Thomas Dunn English, the only son of the dead man by a former wife. Mr. English has offered to take his stepmother back to his own home in Brooklyn.

"Dunn has been awfully nice to me," said Mrs. English. "He begged me to go to New York to live with him. But I don't want to go. I appreciate his offer but I don't want to be under obligations to anybody.

"If it had been only myself I would not have shot Arthur. When he wanted to be he could be as nice as anybody could wish. But there were so many times that his temper would snap in an instant, and I was afraid of him. I knew at these moments he was perfectly capable of killing my children."

Watchful Waiting.

Mother—Gladys, you stood on the porch quite awhile with that young man last night. Gladys—Why, mother, I only stood there for a second. Mother—But I'm sure I heard the third and the fourth.—Pitt Panther

FREED CONVICTS ARE FLUSH.

Fifteen Men Out of Prison Had $704 Among Them.

Olympia, Wash.—Instead of the usual prison gift of $5 each, fifteen inmates of the state penitentiary at Walla Walla took away with them a total of $704, earned in wages, when released recently.

The leading capitalist of the crowd carried $92.70, the next $85.10; six had cash varying from $60 to $80 and the lowest $15.80, all earned at the rate of 50 cents a day and board on public road work in Douglas county.

Another detachment of thirty men has been ordered from the prison to the honor camp, which will close on completion of work in that section of the state July 1. Twenty prisoners have been selected to be sent April 1 to the Meskill quarry, in Lewis county.

DEATH IN EMPTY TIN CANS.

Punch Holes In Bottoms and Save Lives, Says U. S. Health Service.

Washington.—The United States public health service announces that the tin can is a menace. An official bulletin says:

"Malaria experts of the United States health service have found that discarded tin cans containing rainwater are breeding places for the mosquito, which is the sole agent in spreading malaria.

"A hole in the bottom of the empty can might have resulted in the saving of a human life. Certainly it would have assisted in preventing a debilitating illness. Empty tin cans have no business about the premises anyway, but if we must so decorate our back yards let us see to it that the can has a hole in the bottom."

A Happy Accident.

"Fortunately for me, he had. I told him that after the accident my temperature went to 104, and he sent me a check for the amount."—Life.

PYREX
("FIRE-GLASS")
Glass Dishes for Baking

Since the beginning of time, baking has been done "in the dark," in utensils impervious to light. No one through all the ages has ever before been able to bake in a glass dish, for the heat has always broken the glass.

Now science brings Pyrex, an absolutely new and wonderful substance that does not break in the oven. Pyrex has the transparency, the glisten, the look of glass, but it is no more the ordinary glass of commerce than a diamond is a rhinestone!

Pyrex draws back the curtain from your baking, lets in the light, and enables you to see what is going on inside the dish. Thus for the first time in the history of the world, baking can be done with scientific exactness.

Made by secret process, Pyrex is both durable and charming, ly dainty. You bake faster and better. bake and serve in the same dish, wash the dishes with the utmost ease, polish them to scintillating purity.

MATT MATCHES MARRED BY INJURED BONES

Thew restling program at Church's hall last night was marred by injuries received by participants in the final and semi-final bouts, with the result that no falls were scored and an exhibition match became necessary to fill out the program.

In trying to break from a hold which Mott had, a bar lock, Connelly, of Brooklyn, fractured two ribs. The men had wrestled for 16 minutes. Prior to this event, Ted Renous of Minetto and "Young" Wallace of Fulton engaged in twenty minutes of wrestling, but the local man quit on account of an injury he sustained.

Then occurred a match which has been looked forward to for a considerable length of time by the fans, an encounter between Mott and "Young" Tunk. Every hold known in wrestling, legitimate and illegitimate, was tried by the contestants. Neither man was able to secure a fall.

Although thew restlers were not matched in weight, Wallace being 35 pounds heavier than Renous, and Connolly having an advantage of 56 pounds, they appeared to have an equal chance of winning.

NO HOPE FOR BILL TO PROVIDE NURSES

Albany—The Jones bill intended to provide that only graduates of duly recognized hospital training schools shall be permitted to use the title "trained nurse," was reported for the consideration of the Senate yesterday by the Public Health Committee. The measure was referred to the committee of the whole. This reference so late in the session, coupled with the fact that the committee failed to recommend it for passage, forecasts the ultimate death of the measure. Similar bills have failed of passage during the last two sessions of the Legislature.

DIDN'T DEPEND ON WATER POWER

According to the Evidence Given by State Witness in Battle Island Case Yesterday

Syracuse—The state's best witness to date in the trial of the Battle Island Paper company of Fulton against the state on a claim of $1,875,000 was Thomas L. Tomlines, of Watertown, an expert in the Watertown Sulphite plant.

Mr. Tomlines charged that the company's acid plant was obsolete, that the company never actually depended on water power to run the plant, and that only 12 per cent, of the company's machinery was actually operated by water power.

The proxy testimony of Volkert Van Buren, III., who died several months ago at the age of 80 years, was one of the interesting features in the afternoon.

Mr. Van Buren's testimony was given through Edward M. Ellis, a state engineer, and from the records of another casse covering the same point.

Man Lived on Island

Van Buren, who lived all his life in a small house on Battle sland, was to have been called as aw itness in this case to prove the state's contention that it really owns part of the land claimed by the company.

Because of his death the evidence had to be offered through the engineer, who had a conversation with Mr. Van Buren, William Nottingham, George W. Driscoll and Charles E. Spencer, appearing for the claimants, objected to the admission of this evidence.

The court accepted it temporarily, but unless Deputy Attorney-General Edward J. Mone, representing the state, cites proper authorities, it will be stricken from the records today. The deputy attorney-general contends the right to offer this sort of evidence to prove the location of ancient landmarks.

The state is presenting a mass of technical evidence in its defense, and is covering every phase of the situation minutely. Many more witinesses will be sworn and indications were at adjournment yesterday afternoon that the trial will continue at least another week.

SUNDAY'S ORATORY WASTED IN BALTIMORE

Baltimore — Rev. Billy Sunday preached one of his trongest sermons to a large audience at the Tabernacle on Wednesday night when his subject was, "If Christ Should Come to Baltimore." The building was packed with eighteen thousand people and they were fairly responsive. Many of them looked for thrillers in the sermon and they were not disappointed, but perhaps the thrillers came in a way that they hardly expected.

"You wouldn't find Jesus Christ on a ballroom floor hugging some girl to death," exclaimed Sunday. The audience first gasped at the boldness of the statement and then it laughed. Billy did not mind the gasp, but the laughter made him angry. He raised his arms high above his head and stamped with his feet, as he yelled. with eyes blazing as no other eyes can blaze:

"O-h-h-!" Don't you laugh! Don't you laugh! You good church members can be found doing that any time! I wouldn't have to go outside of Baltimore, outside the corporate limits of the city, to find people damnable enough and mean enough and dirty enough to cry 'Crucify Him! Crucify Him!' if He should walk down Charles street tonight! Sodom and Gomorrah! They wouldn't be in it if Christ saw fit to bring just retribution on Baltimore for her sins!"

Theater Crowded With Followers of Creations in Art and Fashion

The Fashion Show given by the M. J. McDonald Co., at the Quirk theatre yesterday afternoon and evening was received by large and enthusiastic audiences.

The arrangement oof gowns exhibited by the models was decidedly artistic both as to line and color. The short, full skirts, some very hoop-like, give a breezy, easy air to the wearer. It indeed seemed that the mode must have been created by a believer in the germ theory. Surely no little germ upon the sidewalk can reach milady's modern skirts without a stepladder, and again what's to be done with the woman whose little (?) feet don't "creep in and out like little mice." However, the frivolous summer dresses, delightfully combined of organdy and taffeta, or organdy and chiffon, or crepe Georgette, are true creations. The full skirts are made even fuller by means of chiffon ruffles attached both to the inside and outside of the skirt thus giving the hooplike effect without any of the rigidity of the hoops. The bodice keeps the lines mainly of the simple basque, and the quaint old sleeves with the puffings and shirrings are decidedly in keeping. Hand embroidery is much used, and the color combinations exquisite. The collar effects are varied; the high soft lace collar, rolling open from the front adds a touch of comfort and attractiveness to the wearer.

The tub frocks are delightfully simple in line and the materials used present charming ideas in the new cotton voiles and crepes. The novelty cotton corduroys are fashioned simply into sport coats. The seperate skirt of serge or linen will again this season be popular, and will be worn with the simple blouse of crepe de chine or voile.

The hats shown are of two types, the old fashioned leghorn or the close fitting turban. The large plain sailor is also a favorite and adds the finishing touch to the suit of simple tailored lines. Flowers are used profusely, and when combined with the hat of poke-bonnet lines, add a harmonious note to the costume of hoopskirt lines.

$3,700,000 MAY BE SPENT ON ROADS

Albany—An appropriation of approximately $3,700,000 for the maintenance of state highways was passed in the Senate yesterday. The bill, introduced by Chairman Maier of the Ways and Means Committee, previously had been passed by the Assembly.

During the debate Minority Leader Wagner called attention to the fact that during the last year of Democratic administration only $2,000,000 was appropriated for highway maintenance.

"The difference between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000" he said, "Is what is to be patronage, money for labor and horse hire and the resurfacing of roads in the favored sections of the state. The patronage was needed last year to build up a new machine, which reached its consummation at the Republican State Committee meeting last Saturday."

"The state," said Majority Leader Brown in reply, "has between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 invested in a state highway plant. The question before the Senate is whether this plant shall be kept up or allowed to go to ruin."

On a roll call the bill was passed, 29 to 12. Two Republicans, Bennett of New York and Lawson of Brooklyn, voted in the negative, and one Democrat, Ramsperger of Buffalo, was recorded in the affirmative.

BUS LINES FROM SYRACUSE TO MALONE

Watertown—With the increase in the number of auto 'bus lines in the north country, it has been suggested to some of the 'bus owners to cooperate by issuing transfers for passengers from one line to another. If this practice is adopted, and a few places connected by lines not now in operation it will be possible for tourists and others to travel all the way from Syracuse to Malone by 'bus.

Out of Syracuse there are suburban 'bus lines in operation. From Lacona via Adams there is a line running to Watertown. From this city lines radiate to the St. Lawrence river to Carthage. From Carthage to Harrisville a line will be run this summer. Next week a line will start from Canton to Norfolk and another from Potsdam to aMlone.

Other lines are contemplated which would practically fill all of the gaps. The interest in auto travel for passengers may displace in popular interest the one time proposed electric lines from Syracuse north to the Island regions. It is pointed out that the auto could maintain a schedule during the season of the year when passenger travel is at its maximum—from spring until fall—and in the winter there is not the expense of keeping up a schedule, which would fall on an electric road.

THROW GLASS IN STREET COP WILL GET YOU

The throwing of glass into the streets is again this year causing auto mobile drivers trouble. R. L. McCully, president of the local automobile club today stated that the name of two offenders had been given him.

As the club again this year offers a reward of $10 for information leading to the arrest of such offenders some one is liable to get into trouble.

NO CARS AVAILABLE FOR SHELL SHIPMENTS

Watertown—It was stated at the New York Air Brake company office today that the present embargo on exports was seriously handicapping them. At present they say they are in need of 30 cars to ship shells into New York for export.

No trouble is being experienced on any other out-going materials which are for use in the United States. Other materials for the use of manufacturing here are also being readily received.

Activities at the three plants at the brake shop are still booming and more help is being added each day. It was announced this afternoon that 100 more men would be added today to the present large force now at work in the munition plants.

Last week over 200 additional hands were put to work. This number included a number of girls, which brings the total of nearly 200 women now being employed there.

The present force at the three plants will total about 4,300 men

PRICE OF LAND GOING UP BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS

Washington—Farm land values are increasing almost by leaps and bounds. Figures made public yesterday by the Department of Agriculture show that values for the United States, taken as a whole, increased 25.7 per cent. in the past four years and 11.5 last year. The figures are based upon reports from the department's field agents.

The value of farm lands, without improvements, is estimated at $45.50 per acre compared with $40.85 a year ago, $40.31 two years ago, $38.10 three years ago and $36.23 four years ago.

A BEAR AND A BUTTERFLY.

A large and ferocious bear once lived in the middle of a great forest, and so fierce and terrible was he that he had the forest all to himself, for all the animals who used to live there ran away when they saw him coming.

At last he met a butterfly. It was a beautiful blue and gold butterfly, and when the bear discovered it it was sitting on a wild rose eating breakfast. The bear was so delighted at finding something to scare that the roar he gave sounded almost amiable. Nevertheless it was such a roar as would have frightened a squirrel into a fit. But instead of showing any signs of fits the butterfly continued quietly eating breakfast, just as if the bear had not spoken. At this the bear was angry. So he gave seventeen of his loudest and fiercest roars. When he was all through the butterfly turned and said politely, "Excuse me; did you say anything?"

"Say anything?" repeated the bear. "Didn't you hear me? Aren't you frightened?"

"Frightened!" echoed the butterfly. "What should I be afraid of?"

"Why, of me, of course," said the bear. "Everybody's afraid of me."

At that the butterfly laughed and laughed. "You don't suppose you are so terrible, you silly creature!" she said. "You are the one that should be frightened. There is something always behind you, and it follows wherever you go."

The bear looked over his shoulder.

"Oh, you can't see it," said the butterfly. "But it's behind you all the same."

"Goodness gracious me!" cried the bear. "What is it?"

"I shan't tell you," replied the butterfly, "but if I were you I'd be careful how I behaved."

"Thank you so much for telling me," said the bear, quite meekly. "I'll be particularly careful, and I won't growl and romp and roar and scare things ever any more. Goodby, Miss Butterfly," and he tiptoed back to his forest.

When he had gone the butterfly laughed and laughed. "Silly thing!" she said. "Of course there's something behind him that he can't see, but it's only his own tail!"

Use of the Globe.

It is very interesting for children to trace paths of travel on the globe, which many of them possess, for it is really more fun, little boy or girl, than many of your toys, and if you have no globe ask your father to buy you one. It is certainly an interesting game, and if you do not believe just try it.

FREEDOM OF LIBERTY.

That Is What He Was Looking For, but It Wasn't on Tap.

The following amusing letter addressed to the New York World recently appeared in its columns.

"I kindly beg to offer you my insignify suggestions for protests concerning the untruthful liberty of this country. It is so. About fifteen years past, when I was energetic and young, I hear about the great country of London, Liverpool and New York and United States. So I leave my three wives in Bagdad, on the Tigris, and come to London with Mr. Daly, great scientific man. I come to London, work hard five years; then Liverpool, one year; New York and Chicago stockyard, three years, until I do prosperous work with chickens and eggs in Petaluma, Cal.

"Then I went to bring my three wifes here. My lawyer say police put me in jail when my wifes come. So I want to go to Bagdad myself. They tell me that the police put me in jail in London because this country fight the Turk and I am Turk subject.

EXPERTS IN HOMES

What Does Household "Efficiency" Mean to You?

MOSTLY INDIVIDUAL VIEWPOINT

Is It Running a Home Well or Inexpensively or Easily, or Is It, Rather, the Mental Attitude Women Maintain Toward Their Special Work?

What is your idea of household efficiency? To every woman the phrase means something different.

Perfect efficiency cannot be entirely a matter of book accounts, of time and labor saving devices—in fact, of physical work. Efficiency is as much a matter of mental attitude as anything else. Does this seem absurd to you on first thoughts? Think it over a little further, and the more you think into it the less absurd it will seem.

It has often been said that every single thing in the universe has first been built in mind before it has taken visible shape. The buildings have been planned in architects' minds; the streets have been all thought out by contractors; books, painting, music—all have had birth in mind first. So it is with every one of our successes, it is said. The success is thought of long before it actually arrives.

Now let us go back to this question of household efficiency being a mental attitude first and foremost. You may bring up in argument that a housewife may think efficiently as much as she likes, but if she has had no practice in running her home along the most approved lines she cannot very well put her thoughts into demonstration. You may say in proof that the girl who has spent her time in a business office cannot be as practical a housewife as the girl trained in domestic science no matter how efficient a mind the former may have.

Your theory, if you follow this line of reasoning, as so many women do, has some good points, but, on the whole, is without backbone. As a matter of fact, the business girl very often makes a much better housewife than the girl trained in all the homely arts. The business girl brings business methods to bear on the running of her home. She has an efficient mind and she uses it. For instance, she is quick to detect that many steps are lost in going from icebox to stove or from sink to china closet, and she seeks a remedy at once, whereas the home girl takes such things as a few extra steps here and there quite as a matter of course and would never think of trying to change things.

The woman of another type looks on housekeeping as the most stupid thing, to be hurried through and got rid of as quickly as possible. Still another type is fond of one particular branch of housework and neglects the rest of the work for its sake.

Now, how can such women run a well organized home? They may have all the practical knowledge on earth, but their attitude toward housekeeping is so very wrong that their homes will never be efficiently managed until they change their attitudes. When they have learned to look on housekeeping as an all engrossing, scientific study which requires all concentration and interest they will begin to show efficient results, not before.

This attractive boudoir cap is designed like an aviator's helmet, the material being a fine white net picked out with lace and pink rosebuds. The model is so simple that any clever girl can make one for herself and any number for Easter brides.

Styles In Sleeves.

All the new tight bodices have long tight sleeves, but on the picture blouses there are sleeves which recall the leg-o'-mutton outline and also sleeves finished off with voluminous frills of fine lace or embroidered tulle. For morning blouses the simple bishop sleeve holds its own bravely. For washing blouses this is the best of all sleeves. It is as practical as it is becoming.

A Youthful Tailor Made.

Faille silk is used to give the finishing touches to this tailored frock of checked taffeta. The jacket is a modified Norfolk model and the skirt a circular design.

Exceedingly youthful in line and effect is this tailored frock carried out in checked mohair trimmed with faille silk in plain color. The jacket may be made with or without a yoke and straps and the choice is also given between a notched orshawl collar In medium size the suit requires 4¾ yards 54-inch mohair and ¾ yards 40-inch faille for the trimming.

As a single breasted model the jacket is sure to be fashionable throughout the spring and summer, therefore will be attractive in other materials than mohair. Linen may be used effectively for its development.

To cut the model requires unusual care before each of the number of parts to the pattern and the necessity of placing each one correctly to preserve the lines of the jacket. After the material is folded smoothly on the cutting table the underfacing and front straps are first placed into position on a lengthwise thread. The back and yoke follow, on a lengthwise fold.

On the upper row first place the front, then the back strap and sleeve sections (upper and lower) on a lengthwise thread. Between the lower sleeve section and the yoke are laid the pocket and sleeve strap while to the right of these are the front of the yoke and the collar.

Young women who elect to wear frocks that are modeled along lines that are strictly conservative will favor this suit and find much enjoyment in wearing it because of its comfort-affording qualities.

The skirt is a circular model that may be cut in one or two pieces.

WESTERN BLIND COUPLE EASILY RUN BIG FARM

They Are Musicians and at One Time Traveled All Over the Country.

Jet, Okla. — Despite the fact that both are totally blind, Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. Hubbard successfully operate the farming part of a half section of land they own just west of Jet, in Alfalfa county. Both are retired musicians and expect to spend the rest of their days on the farm enjoying life. They have traveled extensively all over the United States giving concerts, but three years ago settled down to the rural life near here.

Mrs. Hubbard was blind at birth, and her husband was made so previous to their marriage. Curiously enough, they use different systems of reading, and each reads a great deal, especially the books that are sent to them on the "round robin" plan from the blind schools. Mrs. Hubbard is an adept at reading by the raised letter system. Her husband uses a more modern way of reading and one considered by those who know it to be faster than the raised letter system. It is a series of holes cut in the paper at intervals. They are located, from one to six, both above and below a standard line, designating a character. Reading occupies a great part of their time when they are not at work doing one of the many chores about the farm.

To the casual observer the farm is no different from the usual well arranged farm in the community. It is a noticeable fact that all of the machinery and implements used are kept in sheds and out of the way.

Time was when these two people were on the road all the time. Blind musicians with the ability they are able to show are in demand in the musical circles of the country, and they found no trouble in getting all of the engagements they could fill. Playing practically every instrument made, the two of them composed an orchestra, one of their program numbers being a duet in which seven instruments were played at the same time.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE CHEF SPEAKS.

SALAD DRATTAL.—Cut some crisp romaine across the leaf in about half inch lengths. Arrange these in a salad bowl, making a hollow in the center. Take some watercress, chop it up slightly and make a nest in the middle of the salad bowl over the romaine. Into this nest place two balls of cream cheese, one colored pink with paprika, the other left white. Make a dressing for the salad as follows: Regular French dressing with celery salt, a little more English mustard, mashed pickle walnuts and hashed nuts in equal quantities. Mix thoroughly.

Bisque des Indiens.—Half milk and half cream in a deep pan. Into this throw enough crab meat to give the cream a full flavor of the crab, let come to a boil three or four times and strain through a fine Chinese sieve. Season with a little celery salt, salt, white pepper and curry powder. When about to serve add six very small steamed little neck clams for each person.

Turban of Spinach, Florini.—Proceed as for a timbale, using egg to hold the spinach together. Place in a circular buttered mold and poach. When done unmold, meanwhile saute eggplant cut in half inch squares fried in butter. Arrange this in the center of the turban of spinach and serve a Worcestershire and Madeira sauce at same time.

Potatoes or Sweet Potatoes, Markle.—Bake the potatoes and take out of shell; in chafing dish fix with butter, paprika and salt. When about ready to serve add a good glass of port wine, stirring thoroughly, and serve.

Scrambled Eggs, Crisfield.—Proceed as for regular scrambled eggs, adding a little cream while beating. Season with salt, white pepper and celery salt; then throw into the pan. When almost cooked add some fresh crab meat and mix without breaking, then serve.

A la Currie.—Six hard boiled eggs, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, one-half a teaspoonful of curry powder, one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper, one cupful of hot milk. Melt the butter and the flour and seasoning and stir in the hot milk. Add the eggs, which have been cut in thick slices, cook until the eggs are heated through and serve with toast.

THE EASTER SUIT.

Expert Advice About Your Costume For April 23.

Gaberdines, serges, poplins, broadcloths, whipcords, golfines and bedford cords are prominent. Then there are the novelty materials in checks and stripes that will be very modish. The season's favored colors are navy, hague blue, tan, gray, reseda, black and white. The white tailored suit will be very smart for early spring wear.

In development youthfulness is the keynote. Skirts will continue short and will be ample in width. Many of the new models measure five yards at the bottom. The horizontal trimmings, such as folds, tucks, bands and ruchings, which are popular, emphasize the fulness. Many of the new skirts are shirred to the belt; others are gathered to a yoke, and then again the skirt may fit snugly over the hips and ripple below. Both the gored and circular skirt are fashionable. Panels are seen on the newest importations. A recent Paris model shows plaited panels at the sides, the front and back being plain. Side trimmings are strongly favored by fashionable dressmakers. This may be in the form of plain panels in matching or contrasting fabrics, horizontal plaits or cordings and in braided panels, and they extend the full length of the skirt.

In coats there is a great diversity. The suit coat may resemble the old fashioned pea jacket and extend just below the waist line, or it may be a close fitting jacket with a ripple effect below the waist line extending well over the hips. Some are in jaunty box effect, and others are in two sections, with the full lower section attached to a belt. All are equally modish. Collars are low and open at the throat, and there is a strong tendency to one or more capes falling from under the collar.

Fabric combinations are again in vogue and make it possible to renovate last year's suit. Serges and gaberdines are combined with taffeta or satin of the same or contrasting colors. A navy blue cloth with trimmings of black silk is very pretty. Checks and plaids are combined with plain fabrics. Faille and voile make a good combination. Navy blue with beige, brown with slate color, green, blue or brown with tan, belgian blue with white or gray, are some fashionable color combinations.

and leave no heartache when smashed Four of these, with pretty shades, will adorn your dinner table. A pair on your writing desk will give it quite a colonial tone, and two more on your dressing table will protect your beauty from the harsh facts of electric lighting.

The New Fichu.

The revival of Louis Seize fashions has renewed the interest in the fichu type of neckwear, and the demand therefor has been met by a clever manufacturer, who has designed a fichu that may be bought by the yard.

The fabric is georgette crape or net, edged with plaited ruffles of its own material or with tiny flounces of lace. Some of the fichus show embroidered designs. Then there is another style, where the fichu has one side fluted and the other finished with a picot edge.

No matter which way is preferred, fichus are all ready to be cut the desired length and draped on the shoulders. They go a long way toward freshening up a frock which is not absolutely new, but which is too good to be cast aside thus early in the season.

Surpliced Bodice.

The old time surplice bodice promises to be much in evidence as the season advances. It has been modified to meet the demands of the present, but is full of quaint grace and charm. Sometimes the fronts are extended about the waist to form a girdle, which ties in a bow with long sash ends at the back. The sleeves of these bodices are usually long and close fitting, with flared cuffs that half cover the hands.

MOTHERCRAFT.

The Wisdom of Treating a Child as If He Had Feelings.

Don't consider it necessary to systematically underrate your child. Your adult friends will know you do not mean it, but the child will not, and probably more characters are weakened by the lack of self confidence engendered by such a process than by the vanity which follows the silly bragging of overfond parents.

Don't think that the moment you are alone with your boy or girl you must find fault or endeavor to improve the occasion by a little moralizing, no matter in how loving a spirit. This is the hardest don't of all, for no one is so anxious to help a child toward perfection as is the parent, yet it surely leads to an avoidance of the moments alone together, which should be times of happy confidences.

Don't correct the child before others. Never mind if a well meaning relative does say, "My dear, I am surprised that you do not show more force of character; your children are suffering from a lack of discipline." Pass the matter over until you and the small offender can have it out alone. If the circumstances are such that it cannot be passed over take him out of the room.

Lastly, laugh often with, but never at, your child. This takes self denial, but it pays. Make up your mind that whatever others may say, he can depend upon you for a quick, sure understanding, without quibble or joke at his expense. This does not mean that he must not take his share of harmless fun. It is wholesome, and too much sheltering would make him oversensitive; but the mother who lets her child know that she never makes fun of him will be surprised at the confidence with which he relies upon it.—Mother's Magazine.

Economy In Curtains.

The best cheap material for the window curtains of a little summer cottage may be found in the common five cent cheesecloth. This has a texture which is more attractive than many handsomer materials, and it has the added charm of washing well, though extra length should be allowed in the hems and casings for shrinking.

Larded Sweetbreads.

Put them in cold water, remove the pipes and membranes; cook them in boiling salted water with one tablespoonful of lemon juice twenty minutes and plunge into cold water to harden; dry, lard them with strips of salt pork and bake until brown, basting with brown stock. Serve with peas.

Potato Drum.

Press three cupfuls of mashed potatoes through a sieve, add three tablespoonfuls of butter, half a teaspoonful of salt and the beaten yolks of three eggs. Shape with the fingers into the form of a drum, brown in the oven and serve with parsley stuck in the top.

Violet Underbodice.

Some of the new lace blouses show underbodices of pale violet crepe or silk. These are especially attractive for wear with a suit in some shade of purple or plum.

KEEPS MAN'S AUTO.

Farmer Who Hires Hand Will Pay For Car, Also For Gasoline.

Danville, Ill.—A contract has been signed between Patrick Green, a farmer of Grant township, and Milt Brady in which Green agrees to pay Brady $30 a month for his services as a farm workman and to pay, in addition, for the upkeep of the latter's automobile. Green is to provide gasoline and oil for the machine throughout the season.

It has been the custom for the farmers of this vicinity to provide a horse and buggy for an employee when needed or to permit the employee to keep a horse and buggy on the farm, the farmer supplying the feed for the horse. This is the first instance, however, that has come to light of a farmer's paying for the upkeep of an employee's automobile.

Whisner, at Eighty, Has Killed 330 Deer and 500 Coons.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va.—Peter V B. Whisner, who is eighty years old, is the champion hunter of West Virginia

During a period covering fifty years he has killed 330 deer, about 500 coons and 500 turkeys, besides many foxes squirrels and other game. Of the 330 deer fifty were bucks having horns with from three to five prongs. Two of the deer were white, rare specimens, and one black. The greatest number he killed in one season was thirty-five.

Practically all his hunting was done with a muzzle loading rifle. He said if he had had a rifle like those in use now he could have killed several hundred more deer. He says he has seen fourteen deer in one drove, one of which had white legs, the white extending up to its body.

The Tyrant In the Field.

There have been few commanders so tyrannous as Lopez, the dictator of Paraguay, when in the war of 1865-70 it fought single handed the neighboring countries of Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay. Lopez, says Mr. W. H. Koebel in his "Argentina," was wont to carry the theory of victory or death to an uncomfortable point. "Officers were executed for mere remarks whose tone fell beneath the standard of confidence that Lopez had set up for himself. One, for instance, was shot for having announced in the course of his duty that the enemy was strongly intrenched! Another met his end on account of an unguarded speech to the effect that the Paraguayan army was accustomed to count the enemy's losses and forget its own."

Frocks for Kiddies Are Simple and Smart.

Little Miss Eight-Year-Old in a frock of French gingham trimmed with checked linen. The blouse closes at the side, as does also the side-plaited skirt.

Particularly attractive are the frocks made for children this season. In lines there is not so much chance for originality as is found in modes for grownups, but they copy the elder styles quite faithfully. This little frock is fashioned from French gingham trimmed with plain linen. It is built without a lining, the blouse closing at one side. A turnback collar finishes the neck and is edged with linen to correspond with the trimming on the belt, pocket and sleeves. Medium size requires 4 yards 36-inch gingham, with ½ yard checked linen for the trimming.

The piecing for the skirt is cut from an open width of material, but the remaining pieces of the frock are cut from the gingham folded in half. The skirt is placed into position first, being laid on a lengthwise fold of the material. The front of the waist comes next, laid on a lengthwise thread. Then follow the back of the waist and collar, on a lengthwise fold. Opposite the back the pocket and belt are placed, and between the collar and the belt there is room enough to lay the tab and cuff on a lengthwise thread. The sleeve is laid on a lengthwise thread.

The skirt is made separately and attached to the long-waisted blouse under a belt of self-material stitched on both edges with narrow folds of checked linen. It is side plaited and closes to the left of the center-front under a plait.

The simplicity and childlike quality which is essential to success in garments for small folk impose limitations, the eccentric and fantastic being always out of place in children's clothes. The new silks offer an excellent opportunity for the elegant simplicity so much sought this season.

for when Superintendent Rumsey shall have completed an inspection of the ones in use, as they have been under ground for twenty-eight years. He will dig up a section of the pipe now in use and present it for inspection at the next Board meeting. The Board is determined upon another safeguard against tearing up a well paved street, and that is, to lay a pipe line underneath the west side of the street, to provide for supplying water to houses, in the event that the state land is ever used as building sites.

Alderman Van Valkenburgh appeared before the Board as spokesman for a delegation of Sixth Ward taxpayers who desire to have a sewer constructed in Fremont st., between 6th and 8th sts., as well as to have two street lights installed at 4th and Fremant and 6th and Kimball sts. Mr. Van Valkenburgh found the Board agreeable to his requests. Alderman McKay appeared at the meeting also, with a request for the installation of a light at 7th and Highland sts. His desire too was gratified. In fact, nothing inharmonious occurred last night, although there are conditions in the Sixth Ward which are bad enough to cause the inhabitants thereof, represented by Mr. Van Valkenburgh, to speak out in meeting. It became known to the Board that the "flats" in the northern end of the city have not for thirty-five years been flooded by the high waters as they are this year. Hardly a house in that section is free from water in the cellar, and one building in course of construction has its cellar filled completely with water. The Board listened with interest to the flood stories, but no action was taken.

The average savings per capita in Switzerland are $47.03; in America, $4.84."

FLOATING CONTACT MINES.

Nature Destroys Their Effectiveness After a Time.

Why so few vessels are now destroyed by floating contact mines in the war zone compared with the number sunk at the start of hostilities is thus explained by a naval officer:

"A short time after the Maine was blown up or even before the Spaniards mined all the harbors in Cuba with both floating contact and electric mines. That was particularly true of Guantanamo harbor. Entirely unsuspicious of mines, our ships steamed in there early in the war and opened fire on the Spanish position. As the ships steamed along both the Marblehead and the Texas fouled floating contact mines with their propellers and literally dragged them from their moorings, yet no explosion followed. The launches of the Marblehead and of the other ships then swept the harbor and in all got nineteen contact mines.

"One day on board the United States ship Panther I saw a gunner's mate dismantling one of the mines. He had already removed the charge of guncotton. Being interested in the matter, I asked him why the mines had not exploded when fouled by the Marblehead and the Texas. By way of answer he picked up a machinist's hammer and struck one of the contact plungers a powerful blow. The plunger was not even started. On examination I found that the percussion contact plungers were all so securely sealed by barnacles and marine growths that the plungers would break off before they could be driven home.

"That, of course, happened in tropical waters after only a few months of service. In the temperate zone the same thing will occur, but not so soon. The mines in European waters have been down a year, and I believe that many of them have been rendered innocuous from the same cause. The remark applies, of course, only to contact mines."

HEIRS ASK FOR JURY TRIAL

Oswego—A contest over the estate of James Tobin, late of Fulton, was started in Surrogate's Court yesterday by the filing of objections to the probate of his will, by Bridget Redmond, Cartin Tobin, Rose Curran, Lawrence Connelly, Orva Connelly, Frank Pooler and Patrick Tobin, nieces and nephews of decedent. The entire estate has an estimated value of $1,800 personal. Cr. Tobin, an aged resident of Fulton, died in January last, and by will, dated October 26, 1915, he left his entire estate to Helena Ellen Goss and appointed her father, Thomas Goss, as executor.

The contestants claim that the testator was of unsound mind and incapable of making a will, and, further, that he was subjected to undue influence by Helena Ellen Goss or some other person in her interest. James R. Somers of Fulton is attorney for the executor, and Woods & Woods of Syracuse appear for the contestants.

A motion for a jury trial was made by the contestants and the case will probably be placed on the calendar of the Cay term.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Clara A. Fredenburg, late of Fulton, was offered by James Fredenburg, her husband. The estate is valued at $179.93.

The account of Charles W. Candee as executor under the will of Charles E. Candee, late of Phoenix, was filed. It showe dthe receipts to have been $5,127.42; the expenses of administration, etc., were $120.30.

The intermediate account of John Cloonan, as executor of the estate of Margaret Cloonan, late of Oswego, was filed, showing the amount on hand to be $3,797.84. John M. Farrell was appointed guardian of minors. The American Surety Company was released from executor's bond and she was directed to file another bond.

The transfer tax appraisal of the estate of Lizzie M. Blackwood, late of this city, was filed, showing the net value of the estate to be $2,425.42. The property goes to a niece, Louise Blackwood Becker of East Orange, N. J. A tax of 5 per cent is required on $1,425.42, amounting to $71.27. An exemption of $1,000 is allowed.

A petition was filed by Edward Aiken, Jr., on the estate of Edward Aiken, Sr., late of Oswego, for letters of administration. Thee state is valued at $182,30 personal.

An order was entered directing the County Treasurer to appraise the estate of Frank R. Caldwell, late of Fulton, under the transfer tax.

L. W. Baker was appointed guardian of Charles James of Hannibal, an incompetent person, and a legatee under the estate of his mother, Anna M. James.

The sale of a mortgage, the only asset of the estate of Ira H. Watson, who was drowned at Phoenix some time ago, waso rdered made. The receipts will be used to pay debts.

THE DEMOCRATIC MIRAGE

"Any Republican except Roosevelt is sure to be defeated, because Roosevelt will run independently and split the anti-Wilson vote." This is the campaign slogan of the democracy from one end of the country to the other. It is on every Democratic tongue, it is the Democratic dream, the Democratic hope, the objective of Democratic desires.

It is a poor way to start out to win an election. The position means that the Democrats are satisfied that Mr. Roosevelt desires the chance of getting defeated once more for the Presidency more than he desires the defeat of the Democratic party.

That was true in 1912, but it is much to be doubted whether it will hold good in 1916. Roosevelt and Wall street is a great bogey man, but suppose, after all, that Mr. Roosevelt accepted neither the Republican nor the Progressive nomination and that the enemies of 1912 united. Where would that leave the Democracy?

Yes, this is a poor way to win an election. By its work in Washington the Democratic party will be judged. If it follows the President in his policies, presenting, even at this late day, a united front, it might be able to defeat a second rate Republican nominee in a straightout two ticket contest. It is a mistake to build on the cry of "Wall street and Roosevelt" or Wall street and anybody. The Republicans of this State on Saturday gave an object lesson which should be heeded by the Democracy. the action plainly said to both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Barnes, "A plague on both your houses!"

The Democrats cannot depend upon Mr. Roosevelt giving to their ticket the forty-five electoral votes of New York—or upon Mr. Barnes, either.—N. Y. Herald.

Mythology of Dragons.

The mythology of dragons is immensely mixed. The one thing certain seems to be that of the many writers who describe them not one ever saw them. Many of the descriptions come nearer to a winged crocodile than anything else, and the conjecture that the dragon idea was developed from some tradition of an extinct saurian seems probable. In the gypsy lore of southeastern Europe the "drakos" becomes the ogre of the nursery. He takes a human wife, hunts, is an expert in horseflesh and lives, of course, in a palace. Andrew Lang pointed out that the modern Greek story of "the last Drakos" is the same as that told in Scotland of "the last Pict."

Her House in Order
THE FRANTZ WAY
Thousands of households are kept clean The Frantz Way. And the expense is a trifle.
The FRANTZ PREMIER is used in America's best homes. It is the efficient electric cleaner. A few minutes' use each day keeps the household in order. Old-fashioned cleaning days, with their wearisome chaos, are but memories.
So, well-informed housewives no longer select—they DEMAND the FRANTZ-PREMIER. It is as necessary as the telephone.
Connected in a moment—a touch of the nearest light button brings cleaning power. There is life! The FRANTZ PREMIER is transformed into a more-than-human servant—more expert, more willing, more tireless than the best maid.
It masters the thorough cleaning of carpets and rugs, the delicate cleaning of lace curtain fabric, and will inhale the fine dust that lurks in tufted upholstery and mattresses. It is equally adept in cleaning metal radiators, and reaching into the hundred out-of-the-way places where the good housewife senses dirt.
The Frantz Way is the clean way of cleaning—dust and dirt are banished—not merely scattered, to lodge elsewhere. And the machine weighs but nine pounds. You will marvel at the low price and economical operating expense.

Captured Villistas Confess to Taking Part in Massacre

Field Headquarters Punitive Expedition, South of Namiquipa, (by wireless to Columbus, N. M.).—A report has reached headquarters here that Troops K and M of the Seventh Cavalry were in a fight with Villistas south of here yesterday.

A number of Villistas were killed and thirty-five were captured. Eight of the Captured men confess to having taken part in the raid at Columbus.

Two of this number were suffering from wounds which made it impossible to move them. The other six were taken to camp and will be sent back to Columbus.

Pancho Villa has not been killed, nor did he die of his wounds at Santa Ana, according to the best obtainable information here. The report of his death is credited to arouse of the Mexicans to embarrass the United States pursuit.

The wily leader is rapidly negotiating the mountain passes of Durango. His original plan to join General Canuto Reyes and proced to Durango City has not been changed according to the reports here.

The Seventh Calvary advance guard is believed to be well south of the Chilhuahua State line now. They have at least advanced so far as to be entirely out of communication with Parral.

General Pershing pushed southward from Cusihuiriachic this morning. He has reported to General Funston that he will be at Satevo tonight. This means that the commander of the expeditionary forces has abandoned the idea of utilizing the railroads for the present, at least.

The military authorities on the border say the theorists in Washington may have devised a mental plan by which the long line of communication can be maintained, but they know of no practical method here.

TRAVIS' ACCOUNTING SYSTEM IS STAMPED BY OFFICIAL APPROVAL

Albany—The Mayors and the chief fiscal officers of a number of third-class cities of the State of New York were in conference yesterday afternoon with officials of the Bureau of Municipal Accounts attached to the State Comptroller's office, discussing the new system of accounting for third-class cities proposed by representatives of State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis.

As a result of the comference, it is believed the plan suggested by the Comptroller will be taken up in many of the third-class cities within the near future and it will go a long way toward improved conditions.

Among the city representatives present were: Comptroller Dennin of Troy, Henry Neff of Salamanca, Edward J. Hand, Auditor, of Amsterdam, H. W. Adkins, Chamberlain of Fulton, Victor C. Lewis, Mayor of Fulton, C. J. Mahoney, Clerk of Gloversville, Edgar A. James, Chamberlain of Gloversville, Charles W. Clapper, Treasurer of Hudson, Henry M. James, Clerk of Hudson, W. J. Eldridge, Chamberlain of Johnstown, I. B. A. Taylor, Clerk and Treasurer of Middletown, James Berg, Comptroller of Mount Vernon, Peter Collins, Clerk of Mount Vernon, Edward E. Davis, Chamberlain of Norwich, C. H. Bowdish, Chamberlain of Oneonta, Edward B. Kenefick, representing the chamberlain of Oswego, W. B. Mooers, Mayor of Plattsburg, J. A. Stratton, Chamberlain of Plattsburg, D. W. Wilbur, Mayor of Poughkeepsie, Oscar Cossum, Chamberlain of Poughkeepsie, R. A. Blakeman, Jr., Treasurer of Rensselaer, T. J. Connelly, Treasurer of Rome, H. C. Midlam, Mayor of Rome, W. H. Waterbury, Commissioner of Finance, Saratoga Springs, George R. Bryan, Deputy Commissioner of Finance of Saratoga Springs, Charles C. Fuchs, Commissioner of Finance of White Plains.

Mr. Graves, speaking for Comptroller Travis, briefly outlined the uniform system as "a double entry system of accounts with entries outlined for each transaction in such manner that the financial effect of each is accurately set forth."

"It will give, said Mr. Graves, "each city a system of accounts complete in itself, reflecting all the financial affairs and transactions of the city. It will place the accounts of each city and its annual report, on an accrual basis with a minimum of record keeping. It will

French Check German Drive Behind Blazing Streams of Chemicals

Paris—The amazing battle for Verdun continues unabated. The heroic French resistance is still unbroken, and the Germans' attempts upon Dead Man Hill and Hill No. 304 are now desperate in their violence. The infantry fighting has also spread to the opposite bank of the river, and French and Germans are locked in a titanic struggle between Douaumont and Vaux.

It is in the Mort Homme region, however, that the greatest struggle of the Verdun campaign is in progress. Toward the end of the day the infantry for the moment gave way to the artillery, and a terrific bombardment of the French positions is now in progress, apparently in preparation for another attack.

With the exception of one small section of approximately 500 yards, lost last night the French line from the Meuse to Avoncourt remains unbroken, despite theu tmost efforts of four German divisions (80,000 men).

The Germans made this advance by the aid of a tremendous artillery fire and hundreds of jets of flaming liquid, which burned and suffocated the defenders.

The Germans behind cover of the blazing streams of chemicals, advanced from the southern ringe of Corbeaux woods. They were able to win a foothold in some trenches on the extreme eastern section of the Mort Homme (Dead Man) position. Today their advance had been stopped.

But the defenders are still holding out with great stubborness. The nearest point to either height which the Germans have reached is Hill No. 265 but this crest is immediately at the foot of Dead Man Hill which is one hundred feet higher and there the French forces with unconquerable resistance bar the way.

BRITAIN HAS LOST 190 VESSELS SINCE AUG., 1914

London—Two more ships have been reported as sunk during the last twenty-four hours.

According to the morning newspapers, this makes forty-two British, ten of Great Britain's Allies and thirty neutral vessels lost since March 1, when the new German submarine campaign began.

Mr. Robert Paterson Houston, unionist Member of Parliament from Liverpool, in an appeal to the nation published today declares that the scarcity of shipping is becoming so serious a problem that the present agitation regarding the price of food is likely to yield place to the agitation as to whether sufficient food will be available. He estimates that since the beginning of the war 190 ocean going British vessels, of 3,000,000 tons, have been lost from all causes.

Mr. Houston urges compelling neutrals who have not yet made use of interned German ships to do so. This would be possible by threatening a withdrawal of the Allies' tonnage unless they comply. Mr. Houston also urges the reassertion by the Entente Allies of the "ancient right to capture an enemy owned cargo, no matter under what flag it is being carried," and suggests an effort to arrange by diplomacy for the confication in neutral waters of a German ship for every Entente Allied or neutral ship improperly sunk by the Germans.

YOUNG MASON GETS WIRELESS LICENSE

Another Fulton boy, George W. Mason, 15, of 165 S. 2nd st., has received a Government license to operate wireless telegraphy, his station being numbered 8 B. N.

Master George is a high school student an enthusiastic sender and receiver of aerial messages, including the picking up of weather reports sent from the Arlington station, near Washington. It will be necessary for the young man to make certain changes in the apparatus in order to comply with the Government regulation. It is claimed that his aparatus will have a range under suitable weather conditions of over 100 miles.

M. J. McDONALD LOOKS FOR BIG CONCERT AUDIENCE

Many persons are going to Oswego tomorrow night for the concert by John McCormack, tenor, and Mr. McBeath, violinist. Mr. McCormack sang to a capacity audience at Carnegie Hall, New York, Sunday and the indications point toward a similar condition in Oswego. Hundreds of tickets have been taken by delegations in Northern New York towns and the night promises to be a gala one for Oswego. M. J. McDonald has obtained the State Armory for the concert.

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—45

Wednesday, April 12, 1916.

The Washington Housekeepers' alliance has taken up "waste not, want not" proposition with a view to an anti-waste campaign. This is timely as an adjunct of preparedness, but should not be made to hinge upon any war scare preparedness issue. It is good preparation for every fate which can come to a nation and a people. Preachments on waste usually start with the kitchen and a rehash of the chestnut that the average American family wastes enough food to keep the average European family well fed. Of course it does, but the lamentable waste isn't confined to food supplies. The busy housekeeper can well argue to the provider, Why skimp at the table just to have money to burn on useless luxuries? Many expensive habits are indulged without reference to their appropriateness for the family involved. Probably the waste on dress in these times is more needless and impoverishing than that in the kitchen. Garments and ornaments are made for show and often for only a day's service. Relatively cheap as to first cost, they are actually tremendously dear.

"War worry" is said to be epidemic among the women of England. Joaquin Miller wrote a very strong poem depicting wife and mother as heroines of the "bravest battle." For the man at the front there is curiosity, excitement and ambition to keep the mind engaged and off from self and horror. Not so for the woman waiting, who starts at every strange sound. To her the very word "war" spells inconceivable disaster, sorrow and want. In bringing on wars due to passion women have a fair proportion of responsibility, but when it comes to paying the price they bear an unfair proportion of the burden.

The bureau of foreign and domestic commerce in Washington has stated recently that more than 2,000,000 persons are working at industries which are directly dependent upon the use of artificial coloring. The value of their product is between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000 annually. The head of that bureau is authority for the statement that the loss now being borne by American users of dyed stuffs and dyed wares reaches a total of $1,000,000 a day, and conditions are growing worse instead of better.

Every output of definite information from the interior of Mexico leaves much to be desired. In fact, the situation there is shrouded in mystery, and if the people rule on this Mexican proposition as it affects the United States they are doing it blindly. This absence of definite news from a neighboring country leads to the conclusion that American journalism has lost its old time dash and enterprise. Formerly the great dailies vied with one another on self appointed missions of exploration and investigation.

Authorities on baseball are saying that there will be no material cuts in salaries of stars of the major leagues during this season. In the first place, many players are under contracts which have a year to run at high prices. It is admitted that salaries will eventually drop to about old time figures and that admission prices may drop to conform to these new conditions. No cut in admission is expected, however, until salaries are brought to a lower level.

Speaking of a national defense commission, it is well to remember that we have in congress one of the very best defense commissions that could be created. It possesses ample and unquestionable power to do everything in the premises and, moreover, is a representative body.

The barrel skirt is to contain sixteen yards of cloth and be tight at the waist and ankles. Hence it requires little imagination to picture its wearer like a dirigible stood on end—that is, a pose possible except when the wind blows a gale.

The department of commerce estimates the shipment of munitions to Europe at $2,000,000 worth a day now. Some of the large companies had a heavier home trade in 1915 than in foreign orders.

Eskimos are very keen domino players. They bet heavily, sometimes even putting up their wives and losing them.

NOT AS EASY AS IT LOOKS

There are people in this and any other town who think they know how to run the other man's business. Sometimes they do and sometimes they do not. They look upon the other fellow's business as an easy job and their own as the hardest in all the world. They are the persons who should do unto others as they would be done by —which means, they should not get a haircut on Saturday afternoon.

It seems that the know-it-alls are not confined to any particular locality. They are found in Dixieland, too, as will be seen by the following article taken from a Florida newspaper:

"It not infrequently happens that a man with an ax to grind, finds fault with the newspaper editor or publisher because he refuses to turn the grindstone for him. It is then that we hear him speak out in fiery words of condemnation against the weak-kneed, wobbly, spineless, crawly, clammy, flabby, brainless publications that haven't the courage to say their soul is their own and that they are owned, body, boots and breeches, by patrons of the advertising columns.

"Invariably this wise gentleman expresses the opinion that what the town needs is a wide-awake, independent newspaper. One that is fearless and beyond the control of anybody and he is just as sure as he can be that, if somebody would start such a newspaper in the town, it would be a howling success from the first day of publication.

"He is selfish, of course, but he believes what he says is true, because he knows nothing about the business of publishing newspapers and has no idea of what it costs to produce a daily, up-to-date in all of its departments and so edited as to appeal to the favor of the people.

"This business of newspaper publishing is a precarious one and there is probably no other venture that requires so much constant and careful attention to details, so keen a foresight, and so extensive an outlay of mental energy as the making of a successful daily."

German Chancellor's Speech to Parliament

There is nothing ambiguous about the German Chancellor's speech.

It is a declaration to the world that Germany's terms of peace will be harder than those she tentatively offered a few months ago.

The Baltic provinces and Poland will not be returned to Russian rule. Belgium will henceforth be under German instead of Anglo-French control; Austria and Bulgaria will share Serbia and Montenegro; and German 'spheres of influence" will replace Russian and British "spheres of influence" in the Near East. Such is the Chancellor's statement of Germany's terms.

The Chancellor also declared that Germany's only answer to England's threats to crush Germany's military and economic systems will continue to be the German sword.

The London press agencies, which control the avenues of American information, have undoubtedly created in this country a widespread belief that Germany feels she is being beaten. The Chancellor's speech and its reception by the German Parliament and people are evidence enough that the German Government and nation are perfectly confident of their ability to hold all they have conquered and to beat off their enemies indefinitely.

Time must tell whether they can do so or not, but the high and assured tone of the Chancellor's declaration makes it clearly evident that the German people's feeling today is one of supreme confidence in their military ability to win through to final victory.

We have repeatedly said that it is practically impossible for either of the warring groups to crush the other, and we feel sure that the conditions, after nearly two years of terrible war, emphasize the correctness of this point of view.

Further prolongation of this war is an insane crime against civilization. The neutral nations should unite to tender good offices and mediation and, if necessary, to exert the powerful compulsion of non-intercourse, in order to put a speedy end to such horrible and useless slaughter and destruction.— N. Y. American.

TALKS ON BANKING

SAVINGS BANK CENTENNIAL SERIES

No. 7.—YOU AND YOUR BANK ACCOUNT

When the banker accepts your account, and gives you a pass book and a check book, he has the right to expect certain things from you, as you have the right, legally and morally, to expect certain things from him.

In the first place, he has the right to expect a profit from your account. Banking is an expensive business. It costs a certain amount to handle every check that passes through the bank, and every account should contribute a portion to the expenses of the bank, however small. When your banker asks you to keep a certain balance, he is merely asking his right to a profit from your account. It is easily to be seen that if you keep a small balance, say ten dollars, and the banker furnishes you with stationery, does the necessary bookkeeping on the account (for your benefit as well as his), the earning power of that ten dollars, even if it were all invested at 6 per cent., would be insufficient to compensate him for the cost attending that account. Therefore be generous and give him a chance to make a profit; for as every sale of merchandise should show a profit, so every bank account should at least pay its way. Give him as large a balance as you can possibly keep—it will help you very much in his estimation, help your credit and add to your self respect.

Second. Never overdraw. In national banks overdrafts are now forbidden but whether they were or not, you have no right to asks it. It hurts your credit with the banker. It is a forced loan without security, and is a poor business practice.

Sometimes an overdraft is allowed as a matter of accommodation, and sometimes in order that the credit of the drawer with the holder of the check may not be impaired; but it is bad practice, gets you in wrong all over and should neither be asked or expected.

Third. Do not draw against "Uncollected funds." By uncollected funds is meant checks that have not been collected. For instance, if you have a balance of $100, and deposit a hundred dollar check and draw your own check for $150, you have taken all the original deposit and half of the amount represented by the check just deposited. The banker must send that check, let us say to New York, and wait for advice that it is paid before knowing that it has been paid, which may take three or four days. You are asking him to pay out his money three days in advance of its receipt, ap ractice which good banks frown upon and will not allow. Lastly, draw your checks properly, as outlined in the next talk, and have your pass book balanced once a month. Doing these things consistently, your banker will be a good friend and you will be a good customer, in favor with one who can do you many favors.—American Bankers Association.

THE LETTER "R"

(By Miss Lotta Burritt)

The principal of one of the largest boarding schools for girls declared that the most discouraging thing she had to contend with was, not the mind of her pupils —but the letter "R." "The three r's, reading, ritin' and 'rithmetic," she said, laughing, "go very well under my teacher's care, but the single letter "R" baffles me. I cannot get it out of the girls' speech. They curl their tongues around it as tho loving it too well to let it go, and they forget all my admonitions to touch it lightly." That is one view of it. Another view was given me by one of the girls who goes to that same school. She said, with somewhat of scorn, "People in some places use the letter "R" so badly— that they don't use it all, they leave it right out." These two views are very interesting, and as I found that those holding them were willing to go to war for their cause, I began to get evidence from both sides to decide which was right, not that I might teach the world, if you please, but that I might know how to direct my own tongue; whether to make it lassoo the letter and corral it, or whether to make it slip over it as a brook slips over stones. I allude to the letter when placed between a vowel and a consonant, and at the end of a word.

On the side of those who wish to give "R" its hardest value, I found no reason for the same, except a conscientious desire not to neglect it, to force it conspicuously, lest, somehow its feelings be hurt. This is a good enuf reason and may help little children who are being taught to read by sounds not letters.

Then on the other side, I found three good reasons, apart from prejudice. Our harsh language is really more musical with the letter R slipped over lightly or used to modify the vowel sound preceding it—the English speaking persons of cultivation, use the R softly. Then, again in England from whence our language came, the mild R is invariably used. And as a final, I said, please, please, dear girls, soften the letter if you wish to use our language musically. I then related a little story told (at Commencement exercises) by a noted college professor which ran thusly: "A freshman when speaking of the Indiana, Asbury Institution, called it Indiana, Raspberry Institution."

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS.

In Secrecy and Dread the Daring Deed Was Done.

He carefully locked the door behind him. No one should see him do the dreadful deed. He could no longer stand the smiles and jeers of his friends.

It was true he had met all their remarks with a smile and a laugh, but it hurt him none the less.

Even his own particular friend had turned against him, and this was the last straw. He would end it all.

He had been trying for many weeks to summon up his courage, but at the last moment it had failed him. Today he was determined. He had carefully made all preparations, no one should see, no one would know the scene that was being enacted behind the closed door.

What if he failed? Perish the thought. he must not fail! What was that—a footstep? But it passed on, and all was quiet again.

Then light came in through the window, and he pulled the blind down. No prying eyes should see him. Now he braced himself together, and, with resolution and determination depicted on his countenance, he stepped forward and took up the deadly weapon.

To make assurance doubly sure he sharpened it until it had the keenness of a razor. With a fearful glance around and with uplifted arm he began the ghastly deed.

Blood! Eugh! His hand trembled! Never mind, he would not fail. The seconds crept slowly on and passed into minutes.

At last the deed was done!

He had had his first shave!—Pearson's Weekly.

HOW SWEENY GOT HIS FRANKFURTERS

Germans Left Basket of Food For American In French Army.

DISPROVED FALSE REPORTS

After Papers Saying That Germany Had No Food Were Given Kaiser's Troops They Took Unique Method of Branding Them as Untrue—Expected Bullets, but Got "Hot Dogs."

Lieutenant Charles Sweeny of the French Foreign Legion returned recently to New York to recover from a wound received during the French offensive in Champagne last September. Sweeny is an American, a graduate of West Point and the son of a former president of the Federal Smelting and Refining company of Spokane, Wash. The following story of a most unusual "Dutch treat" was told by Lieutenant Sweeny to Private Casey, a New York artist, also fighting in the Foreign Legion:

Sweeny is not a Frenchman even though he happens to be in the army service of France. After his graduation he married a Belgian girl and settled down in Paris. His wife and two small children are living in that vicinity at the present time.

"I started out about midnight," said Sweeny, "with a patrol to have a look at a new German bayou between two fortlets beyond our lines. I strung my men out so as to give warning of any German patrol and then led them past our sentries and the barbed wire. I was some distance ahead of my men and had got well within the German lines without seeing or hearing anything of the Germans.

Bullets Never Came.

"Now, this was not the first time that I had ever penetrated that far into the German lines, but it was the first time on such a mission that I had not had to dodge a German patrol and very often their bullets. These things ran in my head continually and made me think that I had fallen into a very neat trap which the Germans had laid for me. I expected to see them rise from anywhere any minute and hear the banging of their guns and the whistling of their bullets (if I was lucky enough to hear them, that is), and I began to wish myself well out of my predicament and back again in the comparative safety of our trench.

"This made me more cautious than ever, and presently I began to retreat. As I did so a round German helmet bobbed up out of a ravine not a dozen yards away. An instant later at the other end of the ravine another appeared. I squirmed away like a snake and got behind the only shelter in sight, a little scrubby tree, about three yards away.

"As I lay there quaking, wondering why the Germans did not shoot—for they must have seen me—I happened to look up, and there, hanging to a branch of the tree, was a fat, clean looking basket. I reached up, the limb on which it hung being only a few feet from the ground, and lifted the basket down.

"Then in a flash the explanation of the puzzle was clear to me. The Germans had left that basket there and meant me to have it.

"With the basket on my arm, I got up, bowed low to the round hats and walked back to our trench without ever being fired on.

"Inside the basket was an assortment of frankfurters and other food. There was also a note something after this wise:

Note in Basket.

"'We have been in front of you for over a year, and it is not against our comrades, the French, that we are fighting, but against our enemy, the English. Let us join forces against our common enemy. We are not starving, as you may well see from the little present we send you herewith.'

"Here was something that set me thinking pretty hard. I had escaped death or capture by a miracle, so far as I could see, and all in order that I might enjoy a hearty meal at the expense of the Germans.

"I set the basket down in the trench and fell to with a will, and I give you my word, Casey, of all the good things I have eaten I never enjoyed anything more than I did that Dutch treat—especially the frankfurters.

"They took me back to the United States immediately—'hot dogs,' the brightness of the sea, the yawping of barkers, crowds passing, the noise of thousands of shuffling feet—not the sort of shuffling we hear now, Casey, when a bugle call or the heavy sound of guns seems the chief attraction. It was a great shame I couldn't save you one.

"The meaning of all this was a puzzle to me until I found out that our boys had left a bundle of American and English newspapers in the spot where I had found the basket, with the paragraphs plainly marked in which it was said the Germans were starving. And the basket was the Germans' reply.

"Now you know how I came to get my 'hot dogs.'"

ROBERT EDESON

ROBERT EDESON TALKS OF THE "MOVIES"

Is Now Starring in Pathe Production.

Robert Edeson, who stars in "Big Jim Garrity," the A. H. Woods' play produced for Pathe by George Fitzmaurice, is a deep student of dramatic art and talks intelligently and well upon the subject. Recently he gave an interviewer some opinions on photoplay art which will be found interesting:

"The screen is a strange medium," he said, "for there is no tomorrow in the movies. Each day brings its own problems and as they are solved the art moves constantly to a higher plane. The future of the photoplay is very bright. The interest is increasing and will continue to increase. The silent house and the lighted screen have a peculiar and vivid effect on you. You forget that you are sitting in a theatre—time does not exist. It's the movie lure and I'm just as great a fan as any man who spends his last nickel to watch the screen. I have been in pictures only one year, while I was on the legitimate stage for twenty-five, and yet it is safe to say that more persons have come to know me in the past year than in all the previous time. That in itself is the laurel that sits on the head of the photodrama. It is democratic to the last degree."

Mr. Edeson is a southerner and played all over the country in stock, his best know successes being "Strongheart" and "Soldiers of Fortune." He was in the famous Empire Company, which was the special pet of Charles Frohman, and which produced so many brilliant players such as Faversham, Viola Allen, Henry Miller and Ida Conquest. In addition to "Big Jim Garrity," he also stars in Kipling's "Light That Failed," a Pathe feature to be released later.

When Mr Edeson travels, his wife, five-year-old daughter, and dog, "J. D.," all go with him. He likes the life of a movie actor. "It's the life of a prince!" he says.

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, THE YOUNGEST LEADING WOMAN IN THE WORLD

She Stars Delightfully in a Pathe Picture.

Baby Marie Osborne loses her amateur standing as a guileless kid and assumes the professional dignity of an honest-to-goodness leading lady in "Little Mary Sunshine" a Pathe Gold Rooster play that propels us with an urgent, though delicate, touch, back to the free spaces of the "never-never land."

"Little Mary Sunshine," is one of those "once upon a time" butterflies, through whose gauzy wings we see life in rare and delightful tints. Five reels isn't a scene too long for "Little Mary," who, thank heaven, doesn't realize the charm of her fat little self and never overdoes the "saccharine stuff." Her utter unconsciousness of herself is a revelation in art, particularly in one so young, and points encouragingly to a brilliant stage career. Director Henry King, who also plays the male lead in the picture, deserves more than passing notice for his masterly handling of the child, and his delicate, knowing touch on a play that was woven of Fancy's woof. He is an actor of intelligence and subtlety, and a personality that is impressive. His handling of the "little things," the "tremendous trifles" in the direction of this feature, shows him an artist of depth and certainty.

Baby Osborne can honestly and truly lay claim to be the youngest leading woman in the land, for she has just turned three years of age. Far from being "camera shy," she gurgles and laughs as though she were having the time of her life and goes through her scenes as though to the manner born. Almost invariably the child player of the stage is oppressed with a feeling of self-importance. Little Marie is not—she is just a wholesome, mighty clever, unspoiled baby, of whom any mother would be proud. Her debut in pictures makes us hope we will see other in which she is featured.

CHINESE PRINTING.

Queer Old Ancient Methods Are Still Used by Many Natives.

Chinese hold that the art of printing was discovered in China about fifty years before the Christian era. Until the discovery of the art of paper making, A. D. 85, they printed on silk or cloth cut in the form of leaves. The method employed to this day by many native Chinese printers is substantially as follows:

No printing press is used. The delicate nature of the Chinese paper will not admit of it. When the blocks are engraved, the paper is cut and the ink is ready one man with his brush prints a large number of sheets in a day. The block to be printed must be placed perfectly level and secured firmly. The printer has two brushes, one of them stiffer than the other, which he can hold in his hand and use at either end. He dips it into the ink and rubs the block with it, taking care not to moisten it too much or leave it too dry. If it were wetted too much the characters would be blurred; if too little they would not print.

When once the block is got into the proper condition he can print three or four impressions without dipping the brush into the ink again.

The second brush is used to rub over the paper with a small degree of pressure that it may take the impression. This it does easily, for, not being sized with alum, it receives the ink the instant it comes in contact with it.

It is only necessary that the brush should be passed over every part of the sheet with a greater or smaller degree of pressure and repeated in proportion as the printer finds there is more or less ink upon the block.—Los Angeles Times.

They don't nag him for estimates of men and guns and horse;
They don't inquire if he would like to have some one explain
The methods planned in Washington for making a campaign.
But when the flag's insulted and there's any one to "get"
They merely say, "Go on the job!" and Funston says, "You bet."

He doesn't ask for seasoned troops; he takes 'em as they come.
He knows that they'll keep up with him, and that is going some;
He doesn't need the books that treat of fighting as an art;
He doesn't bone on tactics much; he knows 'em all by heart.
But when they warn him solemnly that there will be a fight,
And not an easy one at that, he grins and says, "All right."

He wouldn't make an ornament that any one would mark,
Carved out of bronze and mounted on a statue in the park;
He isn't any Washington in presence or in size;
He wouldn't be a hero in a matinee girl's eyes.

PAPER FAMINE IS NOW FEARED

Old Rags Assume Tremendous Value as Raw Material.

WAR ALSO CUTS OFF DYE.

Paper Manufacturers Forced to Compete With Manufacturers of Powder, as Same Articles Are Used In Both. Public Is Forced to Pay—No More Contracts Made.

"Rags for paper, not for powder."

This is the slogan of the paper manufacturers of the United States, who are facing today the most serious situation that ever has confronted the industry in the country, a situation that is daily becoming more and more acute

The great war has served to cut off imports from Europe of rags, which are essential in the manufacture of the best grades of paper. For years the United States has depended on Europe for a large proportion of the rags which go into the manufacture of paper in this country.

This already serious situation is made all the more serious by the action of the powder manufacturers in buying up all the available supplies of rags in this country for use in making powder to fill the munition contracts for the belligerent powers. It has been found that rags are practically as good for the manufacture of powder as raw cotton and cost much less. The powder manufacturers are buying up rags at prices which are prohibitive from the standpoint of the manufacturer of paper.

Shortage of Wood Pulp.

But the rag shortage is not the only one which is confronting the paper manufacturers. There also is a serious shortage in the supply of wood pulp used in making the cheaper grades of paper and a more serious one in chemicals which are essentials in paper manufacture. The same chemicals which are used as bleaching agents are also employed in making the gases used in the deadly gas bombs being employed in the great war. Shipments of dyestuffs have been cut off, and the shortage which has resulted has advanced the price for some material which formerly sold for about 20 cents a pound to as high as $40.

The shortage of raw materials, dyes and chemicals has so crippled the paper industry that no manufacturers are entering into contracts for supplying paper and are only accepting orders with the understanding that they may never be able to fill them. Prices for all kinds of paper are climbing by leaps and bounds daily, and there is no telling when the advances will stop.

Waste of Rags Serious.

The prevention of waste on the part of the general public will do much to relieve the situation, it is stated. This is especially true in the case of the waste of materials which go into the manufacture of paper, particularly rags.

Recently a Washington dealer tried to fill an order for about a carload of paper to be used for printing tax bills and receipts for the state of West Virginia. The order must be filled by May 15, for the forms are to be used for this year's tax collections. He reports that not one manufacturer in the country will guarantee delivery on such an order. The best promise of delivery which he has received so far is Aug. 15. On an order for 100,000 pounds of paper, which formerly sold over the counter at about $3.75 per 100 pounds, the best figure he could get was $7.60 per 100 pounds and the date of delivery not guaranteed. The dealer said that the sweepings from the cutters in his establishment are bringing about 50 cents a pound.

He explained that in the manufacture of the cheaper grades of paper from wood pulp three processes are employed. In one the wood is ground between rollers and all the impurities and defective spots it contains serve to impair the value of the pulp thus made. Better grades of wood pulp are made by means of a sulphite process and a soda ash process. Both of these processes require chemicals that have advanced greatly in price as the result of the shortage caused by the war. In normal times soda ash sold for 65 cents per 100 pounds. Today it is selling for $6.50 per 100 pounds. Sulphite that sold for $2.50 per 100 pounds a short time ago now is bringing $8 for such a quantity.

Paper manufacturers are making no contracts and are receiving orders only under the following conditions:

That the paper will be shipped when sufficient raw material to supply the order has been received.

That no guarantee or promise of date of delivery will be made.

That when the order is finally shipped the price for the paper will be at the prevailing figure at the time of such shipment.

The few orders that are being filled by the manufacturers are being cut just in half. If a paper dealer orders 10,000 pounds of paper he cannot possibly expect to get more than 5,000 pounds delivered.

RECORD ACTIVITY IN SHIPBUILDING

Orders For 250 Vessels Being Executed In Our Shipyards.

FEW FOR FOREIGN TRADING

Most of the Ships Under Construction Will Be Used In Adjacent Waters or by Private Firms—All European Countries Active, Too, in Spite of the War That Rages.

American shipyards have today under construction or contracted for approximately 250 vessels of all classes, with about a million tons displacement.

These figures indicate the greatest activity in the American shipbuilding industry, the largest number of vessels and the greatest tonnage ever under construction at one time during the last fifteen years.

Orders for twenty ships having a displacement of over 60,000 tons were placed in February. In that month six ships, with a gross tonnage of 31,329, were delivered by the shipyards.

While these figures would seem to foretell the return of the American flag to its former pre-eminence upon the seas, as in the days when the American clipper poked her nose into every port in the world, analysis does not bear out this deduction.

Competition Not Considered.

Detailed reports concerning the vessels that are being built in the thirty-two shipbuilding plants in the United States, including the great lakes yards, do not reveal that the American overseas merchant fleet will be either greatly enlarged or that United States shipping interests are seriously contemplating competing with foreign lines for the ocean carrying trade.

The number of ships over 3,000 tons under construction is 122. Of these sixteen are 3,000 to 4,000 tons, ten are 4,000 to 5,000 tons, forty-seven are 5,000 to 7,000 tons, thirty-three are 7,000 to 10,000 tons, and sixteen are 10,000 tons and over.

While these figures would seem to indicate a considerable addition to the ocean carrying tonnage of American registry, they do not tell the real story unless taken in conjunction with detailed reports on construction made by various shipbuilding plants.

There is no distinction, for instance, in the above figures between vessels that will ply on the great lakes, those for the coastwise trade and those destined for overseas service.

It is perfectly apparent from an analysis of detailed reports that less than 10 per cent of the vessels now building in American yards are destined for the overseas trade and that the majority of those that will enter the transoceanic trade are oil ships.

The following figures show the distribution of tonnage under construction:

| Districts. | Number. | Gross Tons. |
|---|---|---|
| Delaware river, etc. | 65 | 291,5?9 |
| Chesapeake bay, etc. | 43 | 221,46? |
| Pacific coast | 31 | 173,178 |
| Great lakes and rivers | 64 | 142,162 |
| New England | 19 | 63,673 |
| Others | 8 | 4,577 |
| Total | 230 | 901,373 |

The shipbuilding activity is not confined to the United States. Even though there is war in Europe, the shipyards of the European countries are quite as active as those in the United States, and their operations are not confined to the building of naval vessels.

Great Britain Busy.

For the year 1915-16 it is stated that 1,506,925 tons were under construction in the United Kingdom. The yards of Denmark are fully employed for two or three years. In France the yards are almost wholly engaged in naval work. The Netherlands plants are filled with orders up to 1917-18. Japan is busy with naval and merchant work, and in Norway the yards are so full that owners are sending work to the United States. Only in Italy is there depression in the shipbuilding industry because of the shortage of coal.

The French government, however, has a project in hand for increasing the French merchant marine by providing for government loans to shipbuilding enterprises. A bill has already been presented authorizing the expenditure by the government of $19,860,000 during the war and during the first twelve months after the signing of the treaty of peace.

TO PROVIDE BIRDS WITH FOOD

Ten Thousand Black Cherry Trees to Be Planted In Pennsylvania.

Nearly 10,000 seedling black cherry trees are to be planted this year under the auspices of the state forestry department as part of the general plan to provide food for insect killing birds in the wooded portions of Pennsylvania. The use of cherry trees has been adopted instead of planting grapevines which were set out on experimental tracts in state reserves last year, and it is expected that the trees will furnish both timber and food.

Many of the trees will be planted along roadsides to encourage bird life in farming districts. Some will be planted on state reserves and others will be given to individuals who have been working with the foresters and who will permit observations to be made. The trees were all raised in the state's nurseries.

RIGHT TO LAND WAS DISPUTED

By State's Attorney's In Famous Hearing --- Company Claims Right to Land

Syracuse—Edwin M. Ellis, State resident engineer in Fulton, was under cross-examination through the morning session of the Court of Claims here today by Charles E. Spencer of counsel for the Battle Island Paper company.

Deputy Attorney-General Edward J. Mone and Sanford W. Smith attempted to prove by Engineer Ellis that the Battle Island Paper company never hod a title to the land on which thep ower house was built. To substantiate this point a survery of canals and state lands made by state engineer in 1832 was introduced as evidence.

The survey, according to the state's contention, showed that the small tract of land involved belonged to the state at that time, and it was held that the state never relinquished its title.

Not on State Land

In the crross-examination of Ellis, the company's attorneys attempted to show that it had a clear title to the land in question. In addition it is maintained that the power house was not constructed on the land to which the state claims ownership.

It was necessary top roduce hundreds of maps of the territory dating back a half century and the witness was on the stand all morning identifying these and giving technical evidence over the disputes that arose over the truth of such maps. The claimants declared, through their attorneys, Charles E. Spencer, George W. Driscoll and William Nottinghom that the state never has a right to arbitrarily establish "Blue Lines." This brought out a long dispute.

The Battle Island attorneys also claimed that even if "Blue Lines" might have been established at the west end of the Battle Island dam, the company's power house was not situated there, but on property to which it had a clear title.

Many Maps Produced

Deputy Attorney Generals Sanford W. Smith and Edward J. Mone, upholding the State's end of the case, charged that many of the maps which would bear out the State's contention that the company was virtually a squatter, were burned in the fire that destroyed the Capitol at Albany. However, numerous maps were produced, tending to show the geography of the lands which the company claims the State injured through the construction of the Barge Canal.

Robert E. Horton, a consulting hydraulic engineer, was placed on the stand in Court of Claims fifteen minutes before adqournment yesterday afternoon. He qualified as an expert and probably will be on the stand a greater part of today. His evidence will bear directly on the most important point involved in the case, the actual value of the water power site

Another case of where non-appearance and failure to show cause of action resulted in dismissal of the claim was that of James R. Shea of Baldwinsville who asked $8,090 for damage done his property because of the construction of the Barge Canal.

Since the Court has been in session here the clerks and stenographers have been busy summoning attorneys to appear in the cases on the calendar When it was necessary telegrams were used but in several instances these have failed to bring response. Most all claims except those involving permanent appropriation can be dismissed by the Court, but the last named cases must be tried and heard under the constitution. Judge Webb heard a case in his chambers in the Onondaga.

WOMAN OFFICER DIVES TO CAPTURE PRISONER

New York—Miss Constance Kopp, New Jersey's only woman under sheriff and who has distinguished herself in detective work, dived into the Hackensack River at Hackensack yesterday morning, before daylight, and rescued an insane prisoner.

"She certainly gets a new dress for that," said Sheriff Robert N. Heath, of Bergen county. "Miss Kopp is the best police officer and detective in the State of New Jersey. She does not know the meaning of fear and with her bravery she uses brains."

TRAVIS' SYSTEM GETS OFFICIALDOM'S STAMP

establish for each city standard revenue and expense accounts, uniform during all administrations of the city and uniform for each city of the class. It will enable persons interested therein to make significant comparisons of revenues and expense between different cities affected."

In commenting on the value of uniform accounts for cities, Mr. Graves quoted from an article by Prof. E. F. Gay, Dean of the Harvard Graduate school of Business Administration, as follows:

"Knowledge of the fact replaces guess-work and uniform accounting becomes one of the master keys to business administration and efficient management."

I. B. A. Taylor, clerk and treasurer of Middletown, explained he kept his accounts substantially in compliance with the proposal and told of the good results accomplished.

In his address to the conference, Mr. Fuchs of White Plains declared that he had installed the system in a few months. He told of the effect and remarked that on his observation, every third-class city in the state ought to interest itself toward the installation of he method. He described it as a protection to the fiscal officers as well as to all the officers of the city, and also to the taxpayers, especially in the adoption of the segregated budget. Mr. Fuchs said the Comptroller's plan was a very practical one and ought to receive earnest attention from the officials of the third-class cities.

Another speaker was H W. Adkins, chamberlain of Fulton.

"We have adopted the proposed system," said Mr. Adkins, "and I want to say it does not take an expert accountant to manage it. All you need is a competent bookkeeper. With this system I can give the taxpayers a trial balance once a month. I can also show them every cent we have coming to the city as well as our liabilities. We have analyzed our costs so that at the end of every month, I can give a report showing in detail the cost of running departments and boards of the city. I can tell the taxpayers how much it costs to run a certain department of the city for one month. When I entered this office, I was handicapped by the system used."

Under article 3 of the general municipal law, the comptroller is empowered to visit cities of the third class to prescribe improvements in the systems of accounting whereaver it is desired. In some cases, officials have not taken advantage of this opportunity but have employed accountants of their own, at a great expense, to do the work. It was brought to the attention of the conference that the comptroller will be pleased at any time to send his representatives into these cities to adopt the system of accounting which he has proposed.

OLD GOWNS IN MOVIES AT QUIRK TODAY

Two men of Sandy Bar is a wonderful Red Feather, for more than one reason. There are so many good points about it that when one begins to mention them, it is hard to know where to stop. But for the purposes of Dame Fashion, let us confine our attention here to the gowns which are worn in the play by Miss Yona Landowska and Miss Gretchen Lederer, who have the principal feminine roles. There is much to interest the devotee of dress in the clothes which are worn by these two actresses, thought the style of each of them is entirely different. Take Miss Landowska's first; it is absolutely Spanish, and yet it could be worn without adaptation today, so strong is the Spanish influence in dress. The wide skirt, gathered around the waist and decorated with numerous little ruffles can be seen in any Fifth Avenue showing of summer gowns. The corsage, cut off the shoulders, draped with a fichu, and primly accented with a tiny "Beastknot," as our grandparents called it, of silk flowers, is exactly the corsage which Lucile exploited at her recent fashion fete. The Empress Eugenie would have felt perfectly modish in it, and she was Spanish, you know.

PRIDE DOMINATES RELIGION, HE SAYS

New York—J. Ernest McAfee, secretary of the Home Board of Missions of the Presbyterian church, made an address before a small gathering of Protestant clergymen, and laymen at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, at Fifth avenue and Fifty-fifth street, last night. He urged a more simplified foreign and home missions policy and an interdenominational and co-operative scheme of carrying on the work.

"Selfishness and sectarian pride dominate even our service to God," he declared. "We speak with many tongues and all the servants of God prophesy. Has the teaching of Christ been forgotten? Has the Sermon on the Mount become a 'scrap of paper?'"

WHEAT BOUGHT ON REPORTS OF PESTS

Chicago—Reports of green bug and Hessian fly appeared today as a price factor. Blaine County, Oklahoma, reported green bugs in large numbers and a message from Kansas said there are millions of Hessian flies in Barton and Stafford Counties.

Much wheat was bought on these reports, as they came from reliable sources, and were accompanied by buying orders. Most of the damage reports received failed to indicate any improvement in the growing wheat plant. It is known that the percentage of wheat to be plowed up will be quite large.

FINES FOR FIFTY-NINE SMOKERS IN FACTORIES

New York—Fifty-nine persons were found guilty of smoking cigars or cigarettes in factory and loft buildings by Magistrate Appleton in Municipal Term Court yesterday on complaint of inspectors of the Bureau of Fire Prevention. The minimum fine imposed was $20, with the alternative of two days in jail. Thirty-four persons decided upon the jail sentence so many that the Magistrate had to call upon the inspectors to assist the keepers to take them to the Tombs.

BLAKELOCK SEES HIS OWN ART

New York—Ralph Albert Blakelock, whose paintings now are valued at more than half am illion dollars, yesterday attended the first exhibition of his works. In the care of a physician and nurse, the famous landscape artist came from the Middletown State Hospital for the Insane to receive the long delayed recognition of his genius.

In the half-light of evening, which he had loved to present in his paintings when at the height of his ambition. Blakelock went back from his where he has been confined for sixteen years.

For some time, while the fame of Blakelock was spreading and fabulous prices were beingoffered for his comparatively few paintings, the artist was considered hopelessly insane. Yesterday, at his first exhibition, he displayed an interest in art and in life.

The painter of half a million dollars worth of pictures, which he sold for a few hundreds, Ralph Albert Blakelock owns none. Pictures bearing his signature, however, belonging to friends, are to sold for his benefit. A fund is to be provided to transfer the aged artist from the hospital to a little cottage near New York. His wife and youngest son, sixteen years of age, are to leave their humble home near Catskill and join him.

Blakelock was the son of a Brooklyn physician. As a child he displayed talent for drawing and painting.

Degree work occupied the attention of the Court, and when the social hour, which followed the supper, was being enjoyed. Mr. Spanswick was made the recipient of a handsome silver toilet set.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

CANDLELIGHT is perhaps the softest and prettiest light in the world, and now that we have every sort of electric contrivance to make our houses lighter we are turning our attention more and more to candles.

Unshaded candles are still used on the dinner table, although shades are used too. So individual taste may be depended on to decide the matter. If you desire to carry out a color scheme have shades of silk or paper for your candles. If you want as much light as possible have the unshaded candles.

There are even new candles in various designs in black and white, and these are in keeping with the many other things that result from the fad for black and white interiors. Sometimes they are set in black and white candlesticks.

Fringe of little glass beads gives a sparkle to candlelight. It can be bought by the yard and fastened on any candle shades you may have. So if you have silver shades colored fringe that may be easily changed with a little sewing and ripping for some other color can be used.

Colored candles, too, can be bought, and with these the table color scheme can be emphasized.

Before using candles make them as cold as possible in the refrigerator. In fact, it would be a very good plan to keep candles in a tin box in the refrigerator. This chilling process hardens the candle so that it burns much more slowly and therefore lasts much longer than an unchilled candle does.

THAT KITCHEN STOVE.

How to Build a Coal Fire Without Resorting to Strong Language.

Before starting to build a fire free the grate from ashes. To do this put on covers, close the front and back dampers and open the oven damper. Turn the grate, and ashes will fall into the ash receiver. If these rules are not followed ashes will fly over the room. Turn the grate back into place, remove the covers over firebox and cover the grate with pieces of paper twisted in the center and left loose at the ends. Cover the paper with small sticks or pieces of pine wood, being sure that the wood reaches the end of the firebox and so arranged that it will admit air. Over pine wood arrange hard wood; then sprinkle with two shovels of coal. Put on cover, open all closed dampers, strike a match and apply under the grate and you have a fire. When it gets to burning well put on a sprinkle of coal. After the gas has burned out close up most all of the dampers, leaving a little opening on the slide of door where you remove ashes, and that makes a draft to keep the fire burning. If you shut it all up your fire would go out. Never allow the firebox to be more than three-fourths filled. When full it checks the draft. A large amount of fuel is consumed and much heat is lost. Coal when red hot has lost most of its heat. Some refuse to believe this and insist upon keeping dampers open until most of the heat has escaped into the chimney.

How to Keep Children's Garters From Tearing Stocking Tops.

Even with a very good quality of garters the knob shaped catch to which the stocking is attached is liable to break. When this happens sew on in its place a white shoe button, being careful to use the largest procurable size, and you will be surprised to find it wholly satisfactory.

To save the top of a stocking from being worn out by the supporter fastening attach a small brass ring to a piece of tape and sew the tape to the stocking. Clasp the supporters through the rings, using rings that will allow them to slip through.

If one happens to be without the regulation chamois protectors for garters, put a bit of tissue paper over the fastening. It will prevent the threads of the stocking from running down.

How to Mend China Not Smashed in Too Many Pieces.

A splendid cement for china is made as follows: Into a thick solution of gum arabic and water stir thoroughly plaster of paris until the mixture is of the consistency of cream. Apply with a brush to the broken edges of the china and join together. In three days the article cannot be broken in the same place. The whiteness of the cement also adds to its value.

How to Have an Attractive Bit of Greenery All Winter.

Have you ever grown a fern ball? This Japanese novelty is very attractive. It can be grown in a pot, but is prettier hanging from a string. It must be thoroughly soaked for an hour before hanging it up. Repeat this treatment every other day and never allow it to become perfectly dry.

How to Clean the Tiles That Are Smudgy and Dull.

Often the tiles in a hearth become so stained that water will not clean them. Try rubbing them with a piece of flannel soaked in turpentine; then wash them with a dry cloth. The tiles will then look fresh and new.

ALASKA'S MOOSE HERDS.

Unless Protected They May Go the Way of the Buffalo.

An interesting report of a hunting trip made last November in Alaska has just been received at the war department from First Lieutenant Clarence A. Dougherty of the signal corps, on duty in connection with the military telegraph system in that territory, with station at Seward. He hunted near the shores of Skilak lake, just south of its central point, not leaving its shores over a distance of six miles at any time. He was accompanied by a licensed guide. Among other things, he says in the report:

"Moose are in that country literally by the hundred. My time was limited, and I hunted for only three days before starting on my return journey. At no time was I absent from camp longer than six hours. I was only at the beginning of the moose country, yet the first day I saw thirty-seven moose, the second forty-two, and the third, before I killed mine, had counted over twenty. I was anxious to get a large head and was searching out for this with my field glasses until a proper sized one was found. I was within less than 100 feet of moose several times and could get within 500 yards of any bunch in sight. I counted twenty-seven bull moose in one herd at one time. The one I killed had a spread of sixty and one-half inches, but it was the largest herd I saw. I killed only one, but could just as easily have killed a dozen."

Lieutenant Dougherty recommends the creation of a national game preserve in that section. He says: "The hunters are more or less relenticssly following this game, and it is only a question of a few years before, like the buffalo, it will be a thing of the past. A small restricted area as a haven of refuge for them would always insure an overflow into the surrounding country and the conservation of animals very valuable for their meat."—Washington Post.

One Auto Every Mile.

In the days when the horse was king of the road the people of the United States bought 1,000,000 buggies a year. The sale of automobiles is just reaching the mark set by the buggy. Last year 448 manufacturers produced 892,018 vehicles and orders for 300,000 remained unfilled. This year plants are being increased to provide the 1916 market with at least 1,000,000 cars. Sales such as this show that the automobile has long ago got out of the class of luxuries. There were registered in 1915 in all the states 2,400,000 motorcars, which is more than one for every mile of public highway in the Union.—Christian Herald.

Warsaw and Music.

Warsaw's conservatory of music, which can boast Chopin and Paderewski among its past pupils, has lately been able to celebrate what was its one hundredth birthday if a quarter of a century of suspended animation early in its career be ignored. It was in 1815 that it was founded as a school of music and dramatic art by the Warsaw composer, John Elsner. A few years later the name was changed to conservatory, but in 1830 the institution was closed because of the revolution and it was not until 1856 that it was reopened.

The Deepest Well.

A diamond drill hole fifteen miles west of Pittsburgh is expected by the geological survey to become the world's deepest well. The record is now held by a well of upper Silesia, 7,350 feet deep, but the latest figures give the Pennsylvania well a depth of 7,174 feet, and it is being sunk deeper, with the hope of oil and gas when the Medina sandstone is reached.

A Rare Flea.

One of the queerest requests on record has been received at San Antonio, Tex., from Dr. Guy A. K. Marshall of the royal bureau of entomology, London. It is for a certain flea which lives in the eye of a bat, and San Antonio, the only town in the world with a municipal bat roost, is about the proper place to go for it.—Indianapolis News.

Little Montenegro.

Montenegro is quite a small country, lacking more than a thousand square miles of being as big as the state of Connecticut. Its area in square miles is 3,630, and its population is about 250,000.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Nature's Warnings.

There are times when every one realizes that he is on the verge of illness. At such time, if at all possible, a day in bed is the best possible medicine and often will stave off sickness. Rest is one of nature's simplest and most effective aids to healing and if taken in time may be warranted to "make a new man of you." An extremely light diet or a fast for twenty-four hours serves the same purpose in giving the digestive organs a needed rest. There are some people who boast of their ability to keep going regardless of the warnings which nature serves in time of danger. For awhile they may successfully avoid the penalty, but usually they have to "pay the piper," and in full. Better a short voluntary rest now and then than one enforced by serious sickness as the result of disregarding nature's warnings.

About Club Sandwiches

The club sandwich forms an ideal quick luncheon with a cup of chocolate or tea. It is a delicious after theater tidbit. Moreover, it is easy to make in the dining room with the aid of a chafing dish or electric toaster. It has so many varieties that it can be served frequently, without becoming monotonous.

To begin with, its foundation is a slice of hot buttered toast at the bottom and another at the top. Between these two slices there must be lettuce and mayonnaise and boiled or fried bacon. Besides these ingredients many other things can be used.

Perhaps what one may call the conventional club sandwich contains on the foundation slice of toast a crisp piece of lettuce, a spoonful of thick mayonnaise, a slice of chicken breast, two crisp slices of bacon, a slice of tomato, more lettuce and mayonnaise and the cover of toast.

Instead of the tomato a slice of tomato jelly may be used, or some shreds of sweet green or red pepper or sliced sweet gherkins or sliced stuffed olives may be used.

Or else over the toast may be spread a mixture of chopped celery and mayonnaise or chopped sweet pepper and mayonnaise or chopped olives and mayonnaise.

Fish paste may also be used instead of the chicken, with or without the bacon. Sardines, boned and skinned and rubbed to a paste with mayonnaise, are good.

The lower slice of toast may be spread with a thin coating of pate de foie gras, then the chicken, bacon and mayonnaise can be added, then lettuce and the top slice of toast—with or without the slice of tomato.

ABOUT FLOUNCES.

How Skirts May Be Adorned a la Mode.

Artistic effects are achieved with skirts showing flounces of different colors and materials. For instance, a dress in myrtle green faille, trimmed with jet and kolinski fur, has a two flounced skirt; upper flounce is green, the lower one is black peau de soie. The coat is also in black peau de soie, and it completely covers the green flounce. In another case a two flounced skirt will have a third flounce falling from the waist to veil the upper flounce of the skirt in some very thin material, like mousseline or net, sometimes plain, sometimes embroidered. The effect is very delicate and pretty, and the fashion of flounces generally is one which leaves a wide scope for variation and adaptation. A very young and pretty model shows a ribbon skirt in vertical lines, each being juxtaposed and finished off by a tiny rose.

THE PALM BEACH GIRL.

For Her Who Enjoys Surf Bathing All Winter Is This Cap.

Designed like a pilot's cap is this bathing hood in red rubber with embossed pattern across the front piece.

THE AEROPLANE MODEL.

The ear covering is especially comfortable for her who enjoys diving and may be turned up when she leaves the breakers.

Welsh Rabbit.

Shave very fine or grate a good one-half pound medium cheese. Set this aside. In a saucepan pour two large cupfuls of milk. When scalding hot add one tablespoonful of butter. Mix one heaping tablespoonful of cornstarch, a dash of cayenne pepper, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of mustard and one-half teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, with a little cold water. Stir into scalding milk and cook about five minutes; then add the grated cheese. Serve on crisp buttered toast.

Creamed Tuna Fish in Chafing Dish.

Materials.—One can tuna fish, two tablespoonfuls butter, a tablespoonful flour, salt, cayenne and a little grated nutmeg, a cupful milk, a squeeze of lemon juice, a wineglassful of sherry.

Directions.—Open the can of fish some time before it is to be served. Melt the butter, add to it the flour, salt, cayenne and nutmeg. When smooth add the milk, then the fish and lemon juice and lastly the wine. Cook five minutes and serve on crackers or toast.

Just What Is Needed for Morning Wear.

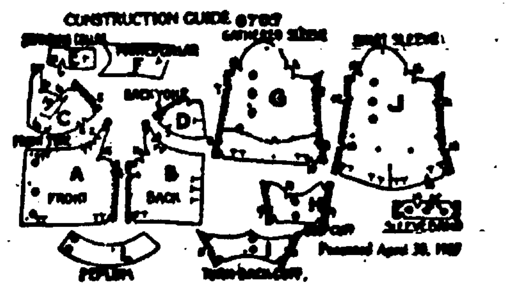
For the informalities of morning there are this waist of dotted dimity and skirt of mixed grey and brown jersette. The waist is trimmed with a round yoke over which turns down a collar of white organdy trimmed with embroidery. A pretty idea is to work the embroidery in threads which correspond with the color of the dots in the dimity. The long one-piece sleeves are gathered into deep cuffs of self or plain material. Since the cuffs and collar receive the most strenuous attention from the laundress, it is advisable to make them of white because the color lasts longer.

By closely following the construction guide, it is possible to make the waist in a few hours. First, turn the hem in front on small "o" perforations, then turn under the front edge of the yoke on clot perforations. Gather the upper and lower edges of front and back between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above lower edge. Sew yoke to upper edge and close underarm and shoulder seams as notched.



Next, sew the collar to neck edge, center-backs even and along either line of small "o" perforations in front.

Close the sleeve seam as notched and gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of deep cuff as notched, sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve; and bring seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

The yoke may be attached to the waist with veining or narrow insertion, either of which gives a dainty effect to sheer materials.

A WATTEAU MODEL.

A Pretty Spring Bonnet Reminiscent of Other Days.

This milan straw is strapped with wide blue velvet ribbon, a flat shape with a bunch of little pink flowers massed in the back. The effect is charming for youth and a grateful variation from the banked, high designs.

FOR JUVENILES.

Millinery Jottings.

Buttons have entered the realm of millinery and are used on sports hats, and by this are meant real buttons, buttons used for fastening purposes.

Hatpins, too, in either pearl, brass or nickel add an ornamental touch to many a hat for spring.

Ostrich novelties effectively change an ordinary hat into one of unusual effectiveness. Wing shaped are some of these ostrich novelties, which may be bent into any desired shape, for the quill is easily persuaded to assume any shape or position.

Many straw ornaments are used on the Paris creations, and most of them are formed of the modish shiny straw.

Appliques of fruit are most popular, and all the small berries are to be had as well as the larger fruits. Quite as unusual are the flowers that are seen in profusion, and after a period when flowers were not considered smart we find that the designers have turned out more beautiful and original models than have ever been seen before.

Mint Sauce.

Pick all the leaves from a large mint stalk and mince as fine as possible. Place in a large bowl with six tablespoonfuls of sugar, three-fourths of a pint of vinegar, one-half pint of cold water and one tablespoonful of salt.

Mix thoroughly with a wooden spoon; then place in a large bottle, cover tightly; shake the bottle always before using.

Instead of the ordinary plebeian "apple sauce" the addition of mint turns it into a highly tempting dessert.

Hard Headed.

HEROISM WINS BRIDE.

Weds Miss After Giving Skin For Grafting Upon Little Girl.

Denver.—A romance, like those you read about in novels, culminated recently when Miss Leilah Alma Peck, a nurse at the County hospital, formerly of Madison, Ind., was married to Vincent Brunner, Jr., of Mishawaka, Ind.

Several months ago Brunner read in an Indiana paper that little five-year-old Mary Lena Lewis, who was badly burned in a Colorado forest fire, needed healthy skin grafted on to her seared body. The appeal touched his heart, and he, being a healthy young man, came to Denver and gave a portion of his skin that the child might recover.

During the skin grafting operation he met Miss Peck, and the romance began.

AMPUTATES HIS OWN FOOT

Californian Prevents Death by Operating With a Pocketknife.

Redwood City.—By amputating his left foot with a pocketknife L. H. Beck of Berkeley saved himself from being drawn to death in the machinery of a dredger on which he was operating. Not once did Beck cry out, say those who were working on the dredger. He directed the binding of the severed arteries and then ordered a launch to take him to Dumbarton bridge, where he was transferred to a handcar in charge of a section gang.

Although terribly weakened from loss of blood, Beck did not lose consciousness once during the long, hot trip into Redwood. He was taken to the Huling hospital, where physicians expressed amazement at his wonderful grit.

Real Sympathy.

An old farmer down the country giving instructions for his will directed a legacy of $25,000 to be given to his wife. Being informed that some distinction was usually made in case the widow married again, he doubled the sum, and when told that this was contrary to custom he said, with heartfelt sympathy for his possible successor. "Aye, but him that gets her'll deserve it."

Cheap Living.

Of the 800,000 inhabitants of Jamaica 100,000 live on an average income of about 12 cents a day.

Rheumatic Pain Stopped

The drawing of muscles, the soreness, stiffness and agonizing pain of Rheumatism quickly yield to Sloan's Liniment. It stimulates circulation to the painful part. Just apply as directed to the sore spots. In a short time the pain gives way to a tingling sensation of comfort and warmth. Here's proof—"I have had wonderful relief since I used your Liniment on my knee. To think one application gave me relief. Sorry I haven't space to tell you the history. Thanking you for what your remedy has done for me."—James S. Ferguson, Philadelphia, Pa. Sloan's Liniment kills pain. 25c. at Druggists.

SEPARATE SKIRT.

Style Tips About This Revived, Popular Garment.

The separate skirt is in for an excellent season. Always the outing period is favorable to the skirt of crash linen velveteen, corduroy and kindred fabrics. To these has been added recently an exceedingly fine silk jersey with a satin finish, which may be considered the skirt de luxe of the season.

If one chooses a velveteen skirt it must be of a pastel color. To wear a skirt of black velveteen for sporting purposes is to advertise oneself behind the times. The models of delicate blue pale pink, violet, canary, nile green and rose are exceedingly modish. To be sure, the white velveteen is also listed. It must be remembered that the velveteen is newer and smarter than the corduroy.

Should velveteen be considered too delicate or lacking in serviceable qualities there is the linen alternative in heavy weave and in the so called pastel or rainbow nuances. There is little attempt to drape these skirts, but the lines are very full, and many of them have pocket accessories.

For dressy purposes there are separate skirts of striped taffeta, principally in the black and white combination, or of shot taffeta, made with plaitings or ruches to go with the separate blouse of georgette crape, which may be garnished with bead embroideries or applique motifs. The black taffeta skirt will always find a place in the sartorial affections of the practical woman, and now it is much more dressy in its lines and trimmings than during the past few seasons.

One cannot omit mention of the broadly striped linens and heavy cotton fabrics that are offered in the new skirts. To say that they are striking is to put it mildly. Anything less than an inch wide for the stripe is regarded as too mild and unobtrusive to be worthy of a place on fashion's schedule.

Black and white stripes come in for approbation, but they by no means have the field to themselves.

FOR SPRING BRIDES.

Early Weddings Will Require This as One Accessory.

One of the daintiest emblems of the Easter wedding is a bride's bouquet of lilies of the valley. The one pictured is exquisitely set in a sheaf of leaves, the stems wrapped with wide white satin ribbon, while the flowing streamers with knotted ends are of a narrow matching ribbon.

UP THE AISLE.

Spring Housecleaning.

Shake curtains free from dust; double each curtain and baste the ends together, using strong thread and short stitches; soak in cold water, wash and starch; loosen one end of clothesline (one free from kinks) and slip it through all the curtains; replace line and pin hemmed ends straight. Do not sprinkle when dry, but press with hot iron before taking out basting. Do not boil ecru curtains, but add coffee to last rinse water. Curtains wear better if the ends are reversed occasionally.

New China Book Ends.

Book ends are always interesting and unusual ones are sought after as gifts for all occasions. There is a new set in china which is particularly pretty. The design shows one book lying flat, its covers of dark gray, with yellow edged leaves, and another book, standing upright on the lower book, is partly open. The ends are quite heavy enough for all purposes and the coloring of the china is particularly attractive.

Freshen Baby's Coach.

Quite often the upholstery of a baby carriage becomes faded, worn or soiled, but a new cover can be made easily. Cut a paper pattern the size and shape of back and sides of the carriage, and make a cover to fit out of white pique or a natural colored linen. Bind with a wash braid and make buttonholes along the edge. On the upholstery of the carriage sew pearl buttons and button the cover on.

A SPRING NOVELTY.

This Silk Jersey Is Corded to Simulate Corduroy.

One of the popular textures for spring street suits is silk jersey. The effect is decidedly juvenile, the luster and lightness giving an agreeable combination. The suit pictured is of a wide weave made to replace winter corduroys. Patch pockets, a stringy belt and beautiful silk tassels are smart details.

A NATTY OUTFIT.

YOUR WINDOW BOX.

Begonias Are Easily Grown, and Ferns Are of Permanent Beauty.

Begonias are admirable plants for growing in window boxes. The foliage of all begonias is attractive, but especially so are the beautifully marked leaves of the Rex variety. The beefsteak, Gloire de Lorraine and other varieties may be expected to grow well and to flower under the conditions that suit the vines already described, says the department of agriculture.

Ferns in variety are available for the window box and may be selected at any florist's to suit the taste of the grower, but dwarf varieties are better suited for the room available. Ferns may be grown with begonias satisfactorily. Both require a temperature lower than the average living room.

Coleus is another group of plants that may be grown in a window box, but they must have sun. The leaves of these plants have a wide range of color and marking as well as of size and shape. They must have a warmer atmosphere than the plants already mentioned, a temperature of 55 degrees to 60 degrees at night being desirable. The mealy bug is often quite troublesome on coleus.

For an upright plant growing a foot or eighteen inches high aspidistra is satisfactory. The leaves of this plant grow in somewhat the same manner as garden flags, but there are varieties with variegated leaves as well as those with green leaves.

How to Transfer.

Here are suggestions for transferring the pattern before you to any material.

Perhaps the easiest way is the "windowpane" method. This is successful when the material is thin, like linen, batiste, etc. Pin the sheet of paper and the material together and hold them up against the glass of a window. With a sharp pencil draw on the material the design, which can be easily seen through the goods. If one-half of the design only be given unpin the paper and turn the other side to the fabric.

If you have carbon paper you should place the sheet between the fabric and the newspaper. The latter is on top. With a sharp pencil go over the outline of the design. The impression will be left in fine lines and will last until worked.

Vegetable Cutlets.

Boil six large potatoes, mash them, add butter, seasoning and enough hot milk to moisten. Chop fine three button onions, fry in butter to light brown. Wash, peel and scrape and boil separately twelve small carrots and four small white turnips. Chop and add with the onions to the potato. Season to taste, add a little minced parsley and cool. Mold into small cutlets, dip in beaten egg, then powdered cracker crumbs. Fry to a golden brown in boiling fat.

A Happy Accident.

"I bet your father had trouble reading your lefthanded letter."

"Fortunately for me, he had. I told him that after the accident my temperature went to 104, and he sent me a check for the amount."—Life.

The Kitchen Cupboard

BREAKFAST LUXURIES.

SPOON CORN BREAD.—One cupful of cornmeal, one pint of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of sugar, salt to taste, three eggs. Let milk almost come to a boil, then stir in meal and cook until thick. Let cool and add lightly the yolks and then the whites of eggs. Pour into a greased pan and bake in a moderate oven. Serve from a baking dish.

Raised Waffles.—Mix a half cupful of butter with a quart of flour, add slowly a quart of hot milk, and when the mixture is lukewarm half a compressed yeast cake that has been softened in a half cupful of lukewarm water. Beat well, add two well beaten eggs and let the batter rise overnight in a warm place. In the morning beat well, let rise half an hour longer and bake in a well greased waffle iron.

Sour Milk Wheat Muffins.—Put one cupful of sour milk into a rather deep bowl and sift into it two cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of soda in a little warm water and beat vigorously into the sour milk, flour and other ingredients. Have the oven and gem tins hot, and just before turning the batter into the tins fold in a well beaten egg.

Puffed Bread to Serve With Coffee.—Trim the crusts from a loaf of French or Vienna bread and divide the loaf lengthwise, first into halves, then quarters and eighths. It should be pulled apart, preferably using two forks in the process. Place these ragged strips in a baking pan that has been lined with brown paper and dry out with the warming oven for several hours. Then put them in the regular oven, close the door and bake them a golden brown.

Norwegian Bread (For Dyspeptics).—The ingredients required are one pint of barley meal, half a pint of graham flour, half a pint of wheat flour, one teaspoonful of salt, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one pint of cold milk. Sift together all the dry ingredients and add the milk gradually to them, with two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Beat hard for forty minutes.

THE DRESSY FROCK.

How Fussiness May Be Subdued to Good Silhouette After All.

Fashioned of white net ruffles and a scant piece of figured crepe de chine, cornflower blue and white, this pretty spring gown may be easily copied. The seven ruffles are edged with narrow lace, and the peplum of the waist folds into an elongated drape forming a front panel. A bertha collar finishes the surplice, which takes a crushed girdle of cornflower blue taffeta.

Suggestion For a Silk Blouse Suit.

Exceedingly smart, yet simple and neat is this Russian blouse costume of taffeta. Plain, striped or checked material may be used.

There is nothing more stylish for the spring suit than taffeta, especially if it is made in blouse design. The side-closing model is one of the most attractive of the spring costumes and this costume may be reproduced for medium size, from 6 yards 36-inch taffeta.

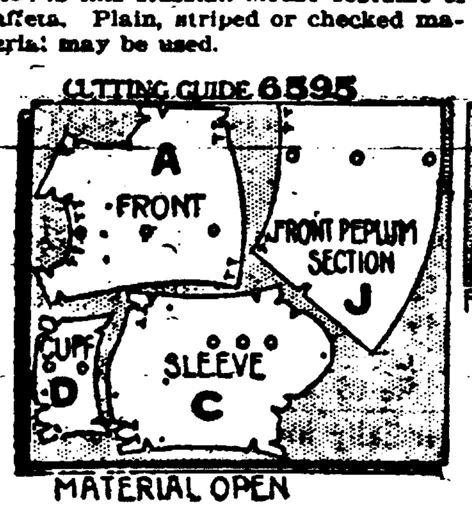
The blouse may be made with or without a collar or cape, according to the fancy of the wearer. Below the waist-line there is a three-piece peplum, gathered at the top.

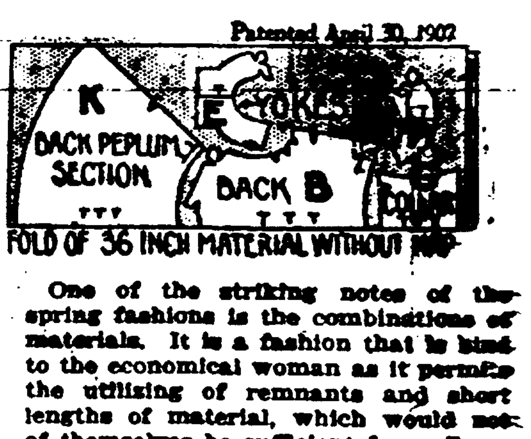
Lay the material in open width, though doubled, on the cutting table to cut the cuff, sleeve, front and front peplum section of the blouse. Each of these pieces is placed on a lengthwise thread of the silk.

The back peplum section, the back and collar are laid on a lengthwise fold of the silk, as shown in the smaller section of the cutting guide. The yokes are laid on a lengthwise thread, however. Provision is made for shortening the sleeve and for changing the outline of the neck, if desired.

Checked silks are trimmed with plaid or striped materials, while the plain taffetas are decorated with fancy braids or novelty silks. Much depends upon the colors combined on these suits. If properly blended very rich effects may be gained and the dress yet kept within the limits of the average dress allowance.

White gabardine or whipcord would make up attractively in this with belt of black patent leather. The suit while simple in effect is distinctly chic, and there is a youthfulness to it that makes instant appeal to young girls and slender matrons. There is no reason why blue serge or gabardine or a smart gray tweed would not make up just as attractively.





One of the striking notes of the spring fashions is the combinations of materials. It is a fashion that is kind to the economical woman as it permits the utilizing of remnants and short lengths of material, which would not of themselves be sufficient for a dress.

THREE NEW MINISTERS DECLARE THEIR DISBELIEF

New York—That Presbyterian ministers in New York may disbelieve in the Immaculate Conception, and, also in the Resurrection of Christ, was established yesterday by an overwhelming vote of the New York Presbytery.

The issue arose in connection with the admission to the ministry of three candidates. Two, Earl Leroy Douglass, of Pennsylvania, and Rudolph Kastaneck, of New York City, declared, both orally and in writing, their skepticism in regard to the virgin birth of the Savior. The third, Edmund B. Chaffee, was equally outspoken and emphatic in repudiating the doctrine that Jesus rose from the tomb. All three were from Union Theological Seminary.

BATTLE OF FISTS IN SARATOGA FIGHT

Ballston Spa—Heads were battered when the clash between Edgar T. Brockett and Senator George H. Whitney for control of the Saratoga county republican organization ended last evening in a free for all fist fight for possession of the records of the sensational meeting. The two factions, in a turmoil of excitement, elected two complete sets of County Committee officials in the same hall at the same time.

Mr. Brackett held the rump convention. Both sides claim the victory. It will all be fought out in the courts. Politicians see in the result the end of Mr. Brackett's iron hand rule of his county.

Throwing out all the contentions of the Brackett faction, Senator Whitney declared himself re-elected chairman by the closest of margins. This was repudiated by Mr. Brackett and his followers and, with Harry A. Holmes, the Secretary, as temporary chairman, elected Surrogate W. S. Ostrander, of Saratoga, as chairman.

ROUTE MAIL BOXES TO BE OF TWO SIZES

Standardization of mail boxes on rural free delivery and star routes is contemplated after July 1, according to instructions received yesterday by postmasters. This order will affect farmers in all sections of the country.

The federal department has designed two sizes of mail boxes for use in the rural districts. There is a small one for letters and ordinary mail and a larger one for all mail matter including parcel post packages.

Patrons may use either size, it is said, and will not be required to discard boxes in use July 1, while they remain serviceable, but all boxes placed after that date must be of the new type.

THOMPSON INQUIRY TO CONTINUE PROBE

Albany— While a public hearing was in progress last evening on the Thompson Public Service bills the republican Senators were called into secret conference by Senator Elon R. Brown, to consider the request of Senator George F. Thompson for $50,000 to continue his Public Service investigation. After a two-hour consideration of them atter it was agreed to give the Thompson Committee the additional appropriation and then the hearing on the bills was resumed.

He is eighty years old and has been a clergyman fifty-seven years.

CLAIM TO HAVE FOUND SCARLET FEVER GERM

Boston Pathologists Report Discovery of Bacillus—New York Physician Skeptical.

Boston.—Dr. F. B. Mallory, pathologist of the Boston City hospital, and his assistant, Dr. E. M. Medlar, have discovered the bacillus that causes scarlet fever, and it is believed it will not be very difficult to work out an antitoxin or vaccine for its prevention and cure.

This important discovery is laconically described by Dr. Mallory and Dr. Medlar in a thousand word article in the current issue of the Journal of Medical Research entitled "The Etiology of Scarlet Fever."

It is largely owing to the short life of the actual germ that it has evaded discovery so long. The germs are found soon after the skin eruption appears and usually find lodgment first in the tonsils or at the root of the tongue. The germ is less virulent than the diphtheria bacillus, although it infects practically the same localities. Dr. Mallory says it is a "grampositive bacilli."

"A vaccine for the disease would be the more important," says Dr. Mallory, "so as to render nurses immune to the disease. Scarlet fever is not conveyed, as many suppose, from the scaling of the patient. When that takes place all the germs in the body are dead."

It was said by a New York physician that a number of doctors have claimed the discovery of the bacillus of scarlet fever, but have failed to substantiate their claims.

FINDS BURIED GOLD.

Mrs. Grey Dug It Up, but Mrs. Judkins Buried It, Is Belief.

Chico, Cal.—Fifty dollars in gold, believed to have been buried more than twenty-five years ago, was discovered here recently by Mrs. John Grey, wife of a shoe merchant of this city, while digging in her yard. Mrs. Grey, while seeking lily bulbs, turned up an old can and found in it, wrapped up in the remains of a handkerchief, the gold.

More than twenty-five years ago a family by the name of Judkins occupied the home. Mrs. Judkins was known to have buried money, several packages having been found by her husband following her death. It is believed that this money also was hidden by her.

The can contained one $20 and three $10 gold pieces. The can in which they had been placed was rusty, and the cloth which had been wound around the coins was decayed and fell to pieces when handled.

SEVEN VOCATIONS TO WHICH LIFE INSURANCE IS REFUSED

Actresses Too Temperamental, While Salesmen Are Best Risks.

Your life is not worth a dime, not even a battered up nickel, according to insurance companies, if you are listed among the "fatal seven," which consist of steeplejacks, aviators, soldiers, dynamite employees, jockeys, auto racers and grooms who ride to hounds.

Insurance companies keep a closer tab on deaths than anybody else in the world. Deaths cost them money, and to reduce the risks they have figured things out on a percentage basis. They will not insure persons in some walks of life. They will take a chance on a soldier in time of peace, but a "rider" in his policy makes it void during war. The other chaps in the "fatal seven" they won't insure at all.

There are other "undesirables"—sailors, prison guards, bridge builders, ironworkers, players in the movies. Insurance companies charge high rates when insuring any persons in these occupations.

Actresses are too temperamental for traveling, and they have to travel, according to the risk firms. Distillery workers pay $20 per $1,000 for policies.

Doctors are not held good risks—too liable to accidents.

Best risks are commercial travelers, because they're so familiar with the perils of travel they seldom get hurt. Only 10 per cent of their accident policies are collected.

Schoolteachers also are good risks.

SAFETY FOR ENGINE FIREMEN

New Device Is Designed to Prevent Death Plunge.

A common form of railroad accident is that which often takes place when, by some accident to the coupling between them, the tender and the locomotive become separated. In such cases the air brakes are automatically applied and the runaway train brought to a stop. But if the fireman is at his post on the tender the sudden application of the brakes is sufficient to throw him off his feet, and he is hurled headlong under the wheels of his own train, which has not yet been brought to a complete standstill.

Matthew J. Slattery and Charles A. Diehm, two railroad men of Philadelphia, have been recently awarded a patent on a device which is designed to save the fireman's life in this emergency. The apparatus consists of a metal net, carried beneath the floor of the tender, which in case of a parting between the locomotive and tender will be released and drawn forward to provide a safety net to catch any one who may be standing on the tender at the time of the accident.

GUARDED TWENTY BILLIONS.

Clerk at Treasurer's Office Has Seen Great Increase in Finances.

Major Alfred R. Quaiffe, civil war veteran and a Libby prison survivor, for fifty years an employee of the office of the treasurer of the United States and for thirty-one years the custodian of the vaults of the treasury, has recently celebrated his eightieth birthday. The position of vault clerk was created especially for Major Quaiffe, and he took the post Oct. 20, 1885, at a salary of $2,500.

In the thirty years he has served there has passed through the vaults something like $20,000,000,000. The average value of the money handled every year has increased from $166,000,000, when he took charge in 1885, to $241,000,000 in 1895, $637,000,000 in 1905 and about $1,000,000,000 for the last five years. The daily balance of cash on hand is pretty steady at $167,000,000.

Filial Repartee.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan, who was always distressed for money, was one day hacking his face with a dull razor when he turned to his eldest son and said:

"Tom, if you open any more oysters with my razor I'll cut you off with a shilling."

"Very well, father," said Tom, "but where will you get the shilling?"

Swift Cruiser Denver Sent to Investigate Killing of Americans

San Diego, Cal.—Several Americans have been killed or wounded in bandits raids in the vicinity of Guaymas, Sonora, according to a naval radio message received here today. The message was forwarded to the Navy Department, at Washington, and resulted in an order to the cruiser Denver, now at San Blas, State of Tepic, to steam for the Sonora seaport and investigate.

The message gave no details of the reported raids and made no mention of the time they were committed.

The Denver was enroute from Corinto, Nicaragua, to San Diego.

The supply steamship Glacier, now at Mazatlan, Mexica, is expected to arrive here early next week with refugees who are reported to have fled from the interior of Sinaloa of unsafe conditions.

Once more the American expeditionary force in Mexico is squarely up against the need of a railroad. This time it is not for the transportation of supplies but to carry the troops pursuing Villa directly into the country in which he is now definitely known to have taken refuge.

Since he crossed into Durango Villa and his men have been moving about in a triangle formed by El Oro, Inde and Tepehaunes. The obtainable information is that no American soldiers have yet crossed the Durango line, but the advance is in then eighborhood of the city of Parral, where a sub-base has been formed, up to which General Pershing is moving supplies as rapidly asp ossible from San Antonio and San Tomas. Considerable forces of troops can be moved directly into the country where Villa is now operating if the use of the branch of the National Railways from Parral to El Oro is obtained.

To take the troops into this country overland would means a long arduous journey, every mile of which would be fraught with dangers for anything but a very much larger force than General Pershing can possibly move in that way.

It is the old problem of a railroad that has come up again. From the day the bugle sounded that sent the first cavalryman across the border at Columbus the expedition has been hampered and Villa's chances of escape increased by the obstinate stubbornness of the Carranza government on the railroad question, but at last, in the opinion of the military, a point has been reached beyond which the punitive expedition cannot go, in spite of the courage, dash and hardihood of the rough riding cavalry.

CAPTURED VILLISTA SAID TO BE LIEUT. OF CHIEF

General Field Headquarters, United States expeditionary force, April 11 (by Aeroplane to Columbus)—Four Villastas were taken captive today near Namiquipa. One of them is believed to be one of the bandit's lieutenants.

The advance base has been moved eighty-five miles southeast of Namiquipa. Many horses are worn out by the ride of 120 miles in four days through the mountains. The cavalry also need warm clothing badly.

At the end of a thirty mile march through a jagged breach in the lofty Sierras, the end of many such marches through many such mountain clifts, oner ealizes to the full what a stupendous task is that of Brigadier General Pershing. Incidentally comes the realization that the American cavalrymen and American cavalry mounts are equal to the task. For the columns that have not had the fortune yet to encounter Villa or any of his brigad following the eternal grind seems heartbreaking.

Plot to Destroy Ports and Ships Laid Bare By New York Police

New York—Four arrests were made last night by the local police in connection with the mysterious fires on ships destined for ports of the Allies.

One of the men arrested is Charles von Kleist, sixty-seven years old, a retired German naval captain, living at No. 1121 Garden street Hoboken. He is a brother-in-law of General von Kleisen, who was killed four weeks ago in the war. He is a cousin of the late Prince Bismarck.

Another prisoner is Captain Otto Wolpert, forty-four, superintendent of the Atlas Steamship Company's pier at the foot of West Twenty-fifth street. He lives at No. 24 Maylis avenue, Bloomfield, N. J.

The third prisoner is Captain Enno Bode, forty-nine, superintendent of the Hamburg-American Line docks in Hoboken. He lives at No. 18 South Hillside avenue, Glen Ridge, N. Y.

The fourth is Ernest Becker, thirty-two, an electrician on the interned German liner Friedrichder Grosser, lying at Hoboken.

The men are formally charged with attempted arson. The affidavit filed against them charges with "acting in concert with each other and others not arrested, with manufacturing fire booms and placing them in sugar bags on board the steamship Kirkswald of the Fabre Lines now the French Line, on or about May 2, 1915."

They were followed almost immediately by full confessions from two of thep risoners. The men who confessed are Becker and Von Kleist.

The confessions indicated that the plans to blow up the allies' ships had been put into operation in other ports than New York. Every suspicious fire on ships bound for allies' ports is now regarded as having been instigated by men who worked in connection with those involved in the confessions just obtained.

SEA RAIDERS REPORTED TRAPPED AND SUNK

Valparaiso—An apparently authentic report is current here to the effect that the British steamship Orbita has succeeded in decoying two German commerce raiders into a trap and that both have been sunk by H. M. S. Cumberland.

According to the report the raiders were sunk somewhere between the Strait of Magellan and the Falkland Islands. No details are available beyond the bare report.

The last heard of the Cumberland was on March 23, when seven log books, all marked "H. M. S. Cumberland, Atlantic Squadron," were found on the beach near the Chicamicomico coast guard station, on the North Carolina coast. British Embassy officials said the Cumberland was cruising off the Atlantic coast and might have been in that vicinity a short time previously. They suggested that the log books probably were discarded records that had been thrown overboard. It was later ascertained that they were several years old.

It was off the Falkland Islands that one of the big naval battles of the war was fought on December 8, 1914, when a British naval detachment, under Vice Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee, destroyed Admiral Count von Spee's German squadron, sinking the Scharnhorst, the Gneisenau and the Leipzig and putting to flight the German cruiser Dresden.

A YEAR OF THE HARRISON LAW

At the end of a year during which the Harrison narcotic law has been in effect, it is reported that there has been a considerable decrease in the sales of narcotic drugs. The law provides that all persons who sell or deal with drug products of opium or cocaine shall be licensed by the federal government and shall make and keep records of all sales. Physicians, dentists and veterinarians as well as druggists are required to take out licenses and keep records.

This allows the use of the drugs for legitimate purposes, but by giving the government a check upon the sales, was intended to decrease the use of drugs for unlawful ends. In this, apparently, it is beginning to prove successful.

Several states have recently passed laws similar to the federal law. Among them are New York, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Colorado, Connecticut and Illinois. Prof. Wilbert of the national public health service makes, in his report, some recommendations to states which are contemplating legislative action planned to decrease the number of those who become addicted to the use of habit-forming drugs. He advises that state laws be made more stringent than the Harrison law, and he recommends especially that they make further restriction of the quantity as well as the kind of drugs which can be sold without a record; that they provide for revoking licenses of physicians, dentists, veterinarians and pharmacists who are drug-addicts, and provide for revoking the licenses of any persons who have been convicted of violating the Harrison law or state laws regarding drugs.

No prohibitory legislation of this kind is of much help to those who are already in the grip of the habit, whether it be alcohol or drugs. But by making it more difficult to procure the deadly stuff, it saves those who might otherwise come under the evil influence. The year's record of the Harrison law is encouraging.

EVERYBODY IS READING

A recent decision of a New York judge contains the announcement that every person is supposed to read the newspapers, and this presumption is very near the exact truth. In this day everyone of normal mind reads the newspapers. He would not seem to be in the world if he did not, for the newspaper is a reflection of what is going on everywhere in the world. There is one fact connected with the newspaper, however, that is not always, understood, and that is that the advertisements are read quite as much as the rest of the paper. Of course enterprising merchants and wideawake people who wish to get their wares before the public understand this, but many others give the matter little thought. Yet there are very many who believe more people read the advertisements than any other part of the paper.

One reason for this is that the advertisements are made attractive and readable. They are built to attract a busy public. The psychological points that must be borne in mind in preparing an advertisement are arranged by experts in an entertaining and instructive manner. A wonderful amount of detail may be collected together, but it is given to the public so as to provide information about those necessary articles which every one must have; while for the luxuries even more care is taken in their presentation. Therefore, the housewife reads the advertisements to discover what especial attraction is in the market or what bargain she may expect to find. In fact, every careful buyer studies the advertisements in the newspapers before he goes to make any extended purchase.

Every business firm in this day understands it is necessary to advertise in the newspapers, and those who do it most intelligently get the most business. It is no longer the old flaring handbill, but the plain, straightforward truth that counts. And these advertisements are read by a discriminating public more and more every day.

THREE STRONG ONES

Among the Republican papers in the State that are opposed to the nomination of Roosevelt, and are not afraid to say so in terms that indicate opposition to the last, are the Buffalo Express, the Rochester Post-Express and the Albany Journal. And they are among the oldest and best.—Utica Observer.

JAPAN'S CHANGING TRADE

Raw materials and manufactured articles needed for further use in manufactures, represented more than 80 per cent. of Japan's imports for the ten months ending last October.

"Commercial Japan" cites these figures as accentuating the change that has come over Japan's trade.

The chief materials for Japanese manufacturing industries were the animal and vegetable fibres, which, in the ten months for which figures are given, amounted to more than 64 1-2 per cent. of the total imports, compared with 54 per cent. in the corresponding period of 1914 and 32 per cent for the 12 months of 1913.

Of these raw materials raw cotton represents considerably more than one-half the total expenditure.—Buffalo Times.

"NO LONGER DANGEROUS"

"Chancy" Day is informed that Roosevelt is no longer a "dangerous" candidate, because of his modified attitude toward "big business." The Chancellor is in a position to have the best of inside information on the subject, for there hasn't been a more staunch defender of big business and big business methods, than the president of "the Standard Oil University."

Chancellor Day's information, however, is not exclusive. It is supported by well-defined rumor, which in turn is corroborated by dinners and meetings at which the Colonel and leading captains of finance were present.

Of course, the colonel has modified his attitude. He is a practical man. He is after all of the support that he can get to secure a nomination and election to the White House. He is therefore right willing under political necessity and in violation of former solemn pledges to torpedo former positions without warning.—Utica Press.

BETTER TRAINING

The Salvation Army which has triumphed over ridicule and proved that college education and degrees in theology did not monopolize the effective means of appealing to the spiritual, now recognizes the need of system in education for its work. It asks for $500,000 with which to establish in New York one of a chain of training colleges known as the University of Humanity, Canada, New Zealand and South Africa have colleges of this order. One is badly needed in this country. The idea of the training college was General Booth's. He desired that no money should be expended in monuments or memorials for him, but that the money should be used to found institutions to train the Army missionaries for better work. The Salvation Army is well disciplined and organized. Despite lack of training it has accomplished great good. Its strong point is that it goes where the masses are. To go there with better trained men and women should mean better results. The Army is deserving of financial aid from men of all faiths and from the unchurched.—Watertown Standard.

HIGH COST RECORD

Figures compiled by the United States bureau of labor statistics show that the relative retail price of 26 of the principal articles of food used on workingmen's tables in the United States was higher in January 1916, than for any previous January since the compilation of such statistics began. The "index number" (which is a means of weighing and combining prices into a single unit of measurement) for these 26 articles, has risen from 9 in January, 1912, to 106 in January, 1916.

Not only that, but the figure for January, 1916, touches the highest point of any month since 1912. The previous high point was in September 1914. From that time there was a steady decline in food prices until March, 1915. At that time the effect of the foreign demand and the rising wages and increased manufacturing costs began to be felt. The retail price curve since March, 1915, has been climbing steadily from the index number 96, up to 106 in January, 1916.

As a part of a recent report from Washington the following appeared:

"What has happened to food prices since January is familiar to every housewife. Butter that cost 35 cents in March a year ago is selling for 40 and 45 cents. Lard that was 12 cents a year ago is now 13 to 15 cents. Cream cheese has jumped to 22 and 25 cents, where a year ago, at the low point in food prices, it was 20 cents. Irish potatoes have gone up, in some sections at high as 30 cents a peck.

"Sugar, that absolute necessity in every household, is up to 7 cents, where last year it was 5 1-2. The prices—both wholesale and retail—of practically all meats, have risen considerably since last year and continue to rise."—Batavia News.

New Waterpower Bill Differs Little From the Shields Measure

Editor Evening Times:

The iniquitous Shields bill, giving away the waterpowers on our navigable streams, about which I wrote you on February 15, has been driven through the Senate, but it has not passed the House. There is still a good chance not only to stop this raid on public property, but to pass a fair and honest waterpower bill in its place.

Everything I said about the Shields bill in my letter to you was confirmed in the debate. According to its own supporters, this bill turns over to the power interests waterpower equivalent to twice the mechanical power of every kind now used in the United States, or enough to meet the needs of two hundred people. This it does in perpetuity, although pretending to limit the grant to fifty years. Small wonder there is pressure to get it through.

On March 21 a substitute for the Shields Bill was reported to the House of Representatives. Unlike the Shields bill, this House bill makes no perpetual grand of public waterpower, but wisely and in fact sets a limit of fifty years. Nevertheless, it is not yet a good bill. For example, it gives away the public waterpowers without compensation. There is no reason why the waterpower corporations should not pay for what they get. The rest of us do. The House bill should be amended accordingly.

If the House corrects its own bill and then passes it, the good bill from the House and the bad bill from the Senate will go to conference, and the differences will be adjusted by the conferees. The managers of waterpower campaign believe that a majority of the conferees will be friendly to them, and will report a bill in their interest. They will then try to rush the conference bill through, probably in the confused and crowded final hours of the session. Such a plan has often served the special interests in the past, and it is dangerous now.

During the debate on the Shields bill, this course was openly advised. There was under discussion an amendment giving preference to the applicant for a public waterpower who offers the best terms to the public. One of the supporters of the Shields bill, Senator Nelson of Minnesota, after referring to the amendment as "bad and vicious," went on to say: "It is something that we can eliminate in conference. * * * We might let it go in and then dispose of it in conference." (Congressional Record, March 8, 1916, page 4285).

We can beat this plan only by letting the people understand the facts. This the power interests have set out to prevent by confusing the public mind with interested statements and personal attacks.

I am asking for your help once more to get the House to pass a good bill, and then to stand by it, no matter what the conferees may do. If the House stands firm, the people will win this fight. But the House needs to know that the people are behind it.

Let me call your attention again to the Ferris bill, a good bill dealing with waterpower on public lands and National Forests, which has twice passed the House. An undesirable substitute, the Myers bill, now before the Senate, gives the public waterpowers away in perpetuity. Under it, the power interests could occupy and exploit the Grand Canyon itself, the greatest natural wonder on this continent.

The waterpower interests want everything or nothing. In the last eight years they have killed eight waterpower development bills that were fair both to the corporations and to the public. What the people need is waterpower development on equitable terms without further delay. They can have what they want by letting the House know it.

Sincerely yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

GETS MAIL WITH PULLEY.

Farmer Didn't Want to Walk to the Road to Get It There.

Whilesville, Mo.—To C. R. Thompson, a farmer living northeast of here, is given the credit of originating the latest method of having his mail brought directly to his door.

Some time ago Thompson decided that it was a waste of time and shoe leather to make the daily trip to his mail box down by the road, and he set his mind and hand to work on a device which would make said trip unnecessary.

He succeeded, and now by means of a set of wires and a pulley the trick is accomplished.

After the mail man's visit Thompson has only to step to his door and draw in his mail, box and all.

The box is sent back to its post by the roadside in the same manner.

Others in the community are so pleased with Thompson's device that they are going to follow his example, and it will doubtless not be long until "going after the mail," even so far as the gate, will be a thing of the past with the progressive farmers of northwest Missouri.

BIBLE 332 YEARS OLD.

Book Has Been in One Family Since 1584 and Is in German.

Ionia, Ind.—A. P. Fleckenstein of Ionia is the possessor of a Bible which has been in his family for 332 years. Most of the time it has been in Germany. It was in Hoerstin, Bavaria, until 1883, when it was brought to America. In 1893 it was exhibited at the world's fair.

The flyleaf at the beginning of the new testament contains the following tribute to the translator:

"A true translation into the German language according to the old translations used in the Christian church and enlightened with many wholesome annotations by the Rev. Dr. John Dietenberger. To the praise of God and the most gracious pleasure of the Roman imperial majesty and to the good of the common German nation and now embellished with illustrations and put into this grand form. This book was printed at Cologne, Germany, in the year A. D. 1584 by Gerwin Calenium and the heirs of John Quentel. With the grace and liberty of the Roman imperial majesty."

COLLIE HALTS A BULL.

Effort of a Dog Saves the Lives of Father and Son.

St. Louis.—Fannie, a Scotch collie, saved the life of John C. Shafer, a farmer and the dog's owner, and John Shafer, father of the dog's owner, on two different occasions in one week, when the men were attacked by an infuriated bull, according to a story told in Marne, Ill.

When the father went to the barn to feed, the bull attacked him. In trying to get away he fell several times and was bruised. His granddaughter, Nellie Shafer, arrived home from school at that time, and she sent the collie into the lot. The dog halted the bull and permitted the old man to escape.

The next morning, when the son went to the barn to feed, the bull attacked him. His cries attracted Mrs. Shafer, who went to the lot in her night clothes, taking the dog with her, for the second rescue.

BOYS LEARN BACHELORHOOD.

Taking Up Domestic Science and Will Know How to Cook.

McPherson, Kan.—Leap year is producing reverse results in Central Academy and College here.

A dozen boys have applied for a domestic science course, and others will join. The instructor is Miss Viola Graham, and she has received a number of additional applications. The course will include cooking and sewing and will continue the remainder of the school year.

The girls are doing their best to prevent the movement of bachelorhood by inviting the college boys to attend parties, but the domestic science boy students are busy practicing the culinary art, and they assert that if the women intend to live independent lives they also can.

HOSTLER AN HEIR.

Will Get Lawyer to Look After Estate When He Gets Time.

Pasadena, Cal.—Roxie Shadwick, a hostler at a local stable, paused in his work the other day long enough to open a letter handed him by the postman and read that he was an heir to the rich estate of a granduncle in Modoc county. Then he folded the letter and went back to smoothing the coat of one of the horses.

He has a recollection of his granduncle and asserts that the last time he heard of him he was reputed to be quite wealthy. Whether this wealth increased or decreased he does not know, but says he will seek a lawyer in regard to the estate when he gets time.

Finds Coin Minted in 1790.

Fredericksburg, Tex.—Arthur Kuenemann found a silver coin on his lot here which was found to have been minted in 1790 under Francis II., emperor of Germany, king of Bohemia and Hungary. The coin is the size of a silver dollar and in a fair state of preservation.

HITS "TOY" WIVES

Girl Asserts Married Couple Should Quit When Love Ceases.

ALL SHOULD EXPRESS SELVES

Declares She Gives Vent to Her Feelings Every Morning in Singing, Shouting and Dancing About to Her Heart's Content.

Los Angeles, Cal.—"When married people cease to love they should quit. Marriage as we know it today is a terrible mistake. When two people fall in love nothing in the world should keep them apart."

This statement was but one of a series equally unorthodox which Miss Violette Wilson uttered at her father's home in outlining her unusual theories regarding life. Miss Wilson is the daughter of J. Stitt Wilson, former Socialist mayor of Berkeley. Recently, following an eight months' course at the University of California, she suddenly withdrew in order to get away from a system of education which she declared crushed her "individuality" and deprived her of her intellectual freedom, and joined her father and mother here.

Miss Wilson is pretty. Although she is only nineteen, she outlined her ideals and aspirations with the touch of a woman twice her years. Also she is epigrammatic. When she says a thing she puts a "punch" in her every phrase, and some of the things she says are, to say the least, interesting.

"Why did I leave the university?" she echoed in answer to a question. "Simply because I was being stifled. I would sit and listen from 8 a. m. to 4 p. m. to some pompous professor who was telling me what he had read of other people's thoughts. It was intolerable to me. I planned a literary work. I began it in Berkeley. But in some strange way I found I could not work on it at the university. My ego was being crushed, and I left."

About the only things connected with modern college life of which Miss Wilson approves are the athletics and the student activities, such as the editing of papers. "Sororities should never be allowed," she ejaculated. "Athletics develop initiative—permit one to express self. At Baddale's, the school near London which I attended, I was the only girl on the football team. I played center wing, and I had a great time too!"

Freedom! That is Miss Wilson's favorite word. "What is life without freedom?" she exclaimed. "I have left the university. Were my ideals to clash with those of my father and mother I would not hesitate to leave them. I most assuredly wouldn't give in.

"We should all express ourselves. Before I take my bath every morning I dance. I put on a light chiffon garment, throw all the windows open and give vent to my feelings in singing, shouting and dancing about to my heart's content.

"The vast majority of men, especially business men, want a pretty little plaything for a wife. The sweet things hardly ever give a serious thought to the rearing of children. They know nothing about eugenics. They are, it must be confessed, clinging vines. They have no intellectual interests in common with their husbands. They are toys—pets!

"Some day there will be neither marriage nor divorce. We will rise to such a plane that love will be back of our unions—real love, which will not require a ceremony to make it legal and binding."

Meantime the professors are wondering why Miss Violette Wilson, one of their most brilliant pupils, departed from Berkeley.

SENT WRONG BODY.

Finds French Officer's Corpse Instead of Young Woman's in Coffin.

Crawfordsville, Ind.—Miss Helen Elston Smith of this city, niece of Mrs. Lew Wallace and of Mrs. Henry S. Lane, both of whom were distinguished Crawfordsville women, had the unusual experience in New York city recently of finding the body of a French army officer in the coffin which was supposed to contain the body of a young woman friend whose death occurred in Europe. Miss Smith was in New York to await the arrival of the body of her friend.

It is presumed that in some manner a mistake was made in the shipment of the coffin and that Miss Smith's friend's body was buried in some part of war stricken France with military honors.

BOYS HYPNOTIZE SELVES.

Students Do It by Gazing Steadily at Bright Object.

Columbia, Mo.—A demonstration of hypnotism by Professor Max Myer, head of the psychology department of the University of Missouri, recently showed that hypnosis can be induced without the influence of a hypnotist. Professor Myer hypnotized students by having them gaze fixedly at a bright object with no sound to distract attention.

Later he suggested that the hypnotized student was an artist painting a picture, a wounded soldier home from the trenches or an intoxicated diner out, and the students acted their parts. Lee S. Eads of Hamilton, Mo., was the star subject in Professor Myer's demonstration of hypnotism.

Insurance Gambling.

The Britisher's favorite gambling is insurance gambling. He will take out a policy against anything, from the death of the king to the loss of a horse race by a thoroughbred. Marine insurance gambling by those who have no direct interest in the safety of a ship or its cargo grew into such abuses that parliament was compelled to pass a drastic act to prevent such gambling on marine accidents and losses by those not otherwise concerned.—London Globe.

RAILWAY MEN DEFEND DEMANDS

Explain Their Position on the Eight Hour Day.

FASTER FREIGHT SERVICE.

Present System of Handling Slow Trains a Detriment to the Public. Dead Freight Travels Only One Mile an Hour—Granting the Shorter Day Would Benefit Railroads.

The technical side of freight transportation is treated in a simple manner in a statement issued by the four railroad brotherhoods whose members are demanding an eight hour day. The statement says:

A great deal has been said about the inability of the railroads to grant the eight hour day to railway train crews and switchmen, and a few facts bearing upon the necessity of a shorter work day are here presented.

The unit of wage payment is now based on the moving of rolling stock 100 miles per ten hours, or ten miles per hour. The men are now asking for eight hours, or twelve and one-half miles per hour, 100 miles in eight hours, and time and one-half for overtime after eight hours.

The railroad companies, as well as the public at large, would be benefited by the change. All trunk lines centering in large terminals have so called manifest freight, leaving these terminals each night, hauling from 1,000 to 1,200 tons of freight, which is called fast freight service. These trains travel over divisions up to 140 to 240 miles on an average of an eight to eleven hour basis. In many cases the so called drag or dead freight train, leaving the same terminal probably three hours ahead of these manifest or fast freight trains, is passed on the road, and the fast freight goes to its destination in eight or nine hours, while the dead freight is often caught by the federal sixteen hour law and has to tie up for eight hours' rest before getting into division or terminal points.

If one train can be sent over a division of say 140 or 150 miles in eight hours there is no just reason why the same class engine with another train should put in fourteen or sixteen hours over the same course. * * *

For example, take a car of bananas shipped, say, from New Orleans to St. Louis, which goes through in thirty-six or thirty-eight hours, while a car of dead freight would occupy almost three weeks getting the same distance; in other words, dead freight is moving in the United States on an average of about one mile per hour when it should move practically as expeditiously as any other commodity.

The statement has been repeatedly made that the men do not want an eight hour day, but are simply after an increase in wages. This absurd statement has no basis in fact, as the men do not want the overtime, and the only way to stop the working of the men overtime is to put a penalty on the use of overtime, so that the railroads would move trains more expeditiously and be more saving in their use of the men's overtime work. Pay for overtime to the worker is blood money, as this money is made after the man is worn out, needs sleep and rest, and digs at his very vitals and makes him old before his time.

Give railway train service men eight hours' work, eight hours' sleep and eight hours to pass with their families and they ask for no overtime and no so called exorbitant pay.

The manufacturers and shippers are constantly brought face to face with car shortages throughout the United States, which condition is largely brought about by slow transportation of so called dead freight. If cars loaded with this dead or slow moving freight were handled more rapidly to destination, unloaded and returned to service the company would earn a greater revenue on each car, which increase alone would offset any additional expense the company would sustain in making the change. Keep the trains moving by giving them the amount of tonnage they can handle over the division and it will be seldom that the trip cannot be made in eight hours.

There is no good, logical reason why railway and train service men should not be on an eight hour basis. Before the federal sixteen hour law was enforced the companies worked the men twenty or thirty hours, but after this law became effective they found they could get the trains through in fourteen or fifteen hours, and they will find this can be just as easily cut to eight hours as it was from thirty to sixteen hours. It needs only the co-operation of the company officials with the men to make an eight hour day on railroads a blessing and at the same time knock the shackles off of 309,174 railroad men in the United States now calling for relief.

Gary Indictments Quashed.

The criminal prosecution of six steel companies and Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the United States Steel corporation, was brought to a halt, for the present at least, when Judge W. S. Anderson in common pleas court, Youngstown, O., sustained a motion to quash the indictments returned March 8. The indictments charged the defendants with being participants in a price and wage fixing combination.

Minerals Sensitive to Light.

The element selenium has long attracted attention because of the peculiar effect light exerts on its electrical conductivity. Scientists have now discovered that copper oxide has properties similar to selenium, says Popular Mechanics. Another mineral recently put in the same class is stibnite, an antimony mineral. Other materials, such as sulphar, shellac, paraffin and anthracene, a coal tar product, will also exhibit odd conductivity effects under the influence of light, but to a lesser degree.

BUCK SAVES FAWN FROM SWIFT RIVER

Latter Falls Behind in Swimming the Columbia to Escape From Some Dogs.

Kettle Falls, Wash.—Ed Roper, a farmer living on the Ferry county side of the Columbia river, saw three deer driven to the Columbia river by dogs and then forced to cross for safety the other day. Roper had crossed to this side of the river in a rowboat and heard the barking of the dogs near the bank of the river that he had left.

Three deer, a buck, a doe and a fawn, sought safety by swimming in the river and were swimming toward this side when Roper hid himself in order not to frighten the deer back again.

The fawn fell behind the others and appeared unequal to the battle with the swift cold water, and Roper thought it would surely drown, when the buck, which had been in the lead, turned back and assisted the fawn until the bank of the river was safely reached. The three deer then stood still and rested for some time.

OSTRICH EGG MEAL FOR ALL.

Scrambled by Wife and Prosecuter's Family Heartily Partake of It.

Kansas City, Mo.—While Prosecutor Floyd Jacobs and family were visiting the zoo at Swope park one of the attendants brought in a freshly laid ostrich egg about the size of a toy balloon. It was said to be slightly undersized, so Mr. Jacobs was told he might take it home if he would promise to have it served for supper.

"My wife scrambled it," Mr. Jacobs said, "and it was about all the egg one family could eat at a meal. There wasn't much difference in the taste from an ordinary hen's egg, so far as I could determine, but it seemed to be a trifle richer. At least it satisfied the appetite quicker than the scrambled eggs usually served at my table."

Mutes Make Tires.

Akron, O.—Sixty deaf mutes are employed by a tire and rubber manufacturing company here. ### Song of the Army Mewel

He couldn't tote with the motor lorry,
He couldn't fight with the army truck,
And for a time it seemed, begorry,
The army mewel was out o' luck.
The army mewel
What needs no fuel—
Oh, wan't it cruel?—
Was out o' luck.

He couldn't drag the fifteen inches
Or fly or manage a submarine,
But he's right there with bits in the pinches,
And he don't need no gasoline.
The army mewel,
He ain't no foo-el
And, as a ru-el,
Hates gas-o-line.

When Uncle Sam hits plain or mountain
Or desert that round the wide world runs
And there's no water nor petrol fountain
The mewel he totes the grub and guns.
The army mewel,
The precious jewel
And useful too-el,
He totes the guns.

THREE RACIAL INSTINCTS.

One Reason, Perhaps, For the Interest Taken in Baseball.

How shall we explain the absorbing interest in baseball and football? In baseball we have a game combining three of the most deep seated racial instincts—the instinct to throw, to run and to strike. During untold periods of the life history of our race survival has come to him who could throw the straightest, run the swiftest and strike the hardest. To throw something at something is almost as natural for a boy as to breathe.

Throwing, batting, running, are no longer of any service in this age of mind, but they were the conditions of survival in the distant past. Baseball reinstates those ancient attitudes and brings a thrill of cherished memories. Any one who has ever held a bat in hand and assumed the expectant attitude of the batter knows the peculiar thrill which is explained only by recalling that his distant ancestors in just that attitude beat down with a real club many an opposing foe, whether man or beast, and those who held clubs in this position and struck hard quickly survived and transmitted this instinct.

The awkward throw of girls, like the left arm throw of boys, is widely known. The plays of girls reveal their own set of instincts recalling the habits of primitive. "We are the descendants of those men who could throw and those women who loved children." —From "The Psychology of Relaxation," by G. T. W. Patrick.

HIRAM LODGE TO BE REPRESENTED

Annual Convocation of Grand Lodge, F. & A. M., Will Be Held in May.

Hiram Lodge, F. & A. M., will be represented at the annual convocation of Grand Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons whicch will open in the Masonic Temple, 6th avenue and 24th st., New York, on May 2, and continue for three days. The masters of each lodge are expected to attend unless prevented by illness or some other unavoidable cause. Dr. F. L. Cary, of 122 West Broadway, of Hiram Lodge will leave this city to attend the convocation on Monday, May 1.

Thomas Penny of Buffalo is the logical candidate for grand master, and it is expected that he will be chosen for that honor. In compliance with the customs of the Grand Lodge, it is conceded that the next highest official will be a member of a lodge in New York City. The office of grand master alternates between New York and the up-state districts. This procedure was adopted some time ago.

The Grand Lodge has little business other than routine to occupy its attention this year. The matter of liquidating the debt on the Masonic Temple in New York City, owned by the Masons of the state and from which the rentals furnish the revenue for the maintenance of the Masonic Home at Utica, will be vigorously pushed. More than $500,000 has been subscribed by the lodges and it is expected that this amount will be greatly augmented at the Grand Lodge sessions.

Justice George Freifeld of Brooklyn, has made great effort to free the temple of much of its debt. The master of each of the twenty-nine lodges in the thirty-third district will attend as a delegate.

It has been arranged that the new music of McCormack be given the place on the program with the popular numbers as encores.

M. E. BENEVOLENCES INCREASE $20,000

That the Methodist people were more generous this past conference year than in previous years is shown by the fact that they made an increase in their benevolent offerings of over $20,000. The report blanks which were filed with the secretary of the conference yesterday afternoon to be printed in the conference minutes will show that the Black River district gave to benevolent causes which the several church boards administer, the sum of $17,070; Mohawk district $24,867; Ontario district, $19,886 and St. Lawrence district, $24,211. the four districts paying a total of $86,186 and a gain of $10,186 over the offerings of last year. Besides these offerings for benevolent causes the churches paid into the fund for retired ministers the total of $95,293, which is $10,635 above the amount paid in last year for this cause.

Another report filed with the secretary shows that 2,679 persons were received the past conference year on probation and that 3,127 probation members are now on the roll. There were also reported besides the above 31,549 members in full connection, a gain of over a thousand members in full connection during the year. This does not include the full membership of the conference as there is also a list of members who live without the bounds of the conference.

STARS PLAYED IN REAL FORM

The All-Star's challenge to the All-Fulton bowling team "to do it again," was responsible for the best bowling mark of the season being hung up for a five man team—the All-Fulton team—which won last night's match and incidentally, the second and final in the series. They rolled up a total of 2,878 pins which mark has not been approached this season.

Practically every man engaged in the sets last night performed in State League style, even the losers in the third game securing a total of 999 or close to an average of 200 to a man. The bowlers passed the 200 mark many times, only one man on each team failing to obtain this number in any of the three sets.

The Gasoline Bomb Fails to Go Off

In view of the many things said and printed upon the subject of high priced gasoline, anything to the contrary is welcomed by the average auto owner. Upon the request of R. L. McCully, president of the Fulton Auto Club, a reprint is made of an article which appeared in a recent issue of "Automobile Topics," a reputable publication. The article follows:

Figuratively speaking, the gasoline bomb has failed to go off. The continued rise in prices that has been so widely apprehended is no longer considered probable by some of those who have been making a close study of conditions, and who believe that despite the truth of many assertions that have been made by the oil producers, manipulation has played its usual part in the general scheme of things. The natural response of the crude oil market, coupled with the weight of popular disapproval against market inflation, it is believed, will stem the tide of rising prices before it goes much higher.

After making an investigation of the gasoline situation, particularly with regard to the possibility of any further advance in price, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce is convinced that there will be no further advance. Alfred Reeves, generol manager of the Chamber, announced during thep ast week that the investigation had reached a point where he felt justified in making the prediction that the high point in thep rice of gasoline has been reached. A detailed report of the investigation will probably be made public later, but the prediction by Manager Reeves is significant of the fact that the Chamber is not in the least alarmed as to the future price of fuel. The next move of the market, Reeves is satisfied, will be downward. His information proves, he says, that the European war is not responsible for the present price and there is nothing to indicate that a continuance of the war would send domestic gasoline any higher.

In New York the successful garage man and automobile dealer has stopped talking about the high cost of gasoline. They have come to the conclusion that the automobile owner is not greatly alarmed over the situation and that he does not care to have the joy taken out of his motoring plans by a speculative discussion ot something that may never happen.

If the price of gasoline had advanced every week during thep ast month, as many alarmists predicted it would, the owner might feel that it was time for him to worry over greater advance inp rice, but the wholesale price of gasoline in New York has remained at 24 cents for more than a month and even the oil men, who a few weeks ago could see nothing short of 40 or 50-cent gas, now say the market is more likely to drop than to rise. The prevailing retail price in New York is 27 cents and this will ease down a cent or two, it is said, as soon as the Eastern freight embargo lifts on account of more favorable transportation facilities.

18 P. C. OF LAND UNDER TILLAGE

Of the 22,030,367 acres of farm land in the State of New York only 8,500,000 acres are now under cultivation, despite the fact that of the totol acreage, 15,500 000 acres are classed as improved land.

Commissioner of Agriculture C. S. Wilson points out that during the year 1915 the farms of the State produced commodities valued at $475,000,000 and that in order to supply the demand for farm produce every acre of land in the State capable of producing any commodity should be under cultivation, so that the value of products of a year here would be greatly increased.

"Although in close proximity to many markets and especially to New York City, farm land in New York State is available at prices which are remarkably low in comparison with farm land in other parts of the country," says Commissioner Wilson.

A bulletin has been issued which contains a list of farms in this State which are for sale. These farms constitute an opportunity for many in the already overcrowded cities where there is the constant grind of sharp competition, and an opportunity which will give good return for labor and investment. In many cases the farms are near villages and cities, the location of each being given in the bulletin which may be obtained at the office of the Department of Agriculture in Albany.

There are now engaged in agriculture 375,000 persons in this State, out of the total population of 9,687,744. There are 57 cities in the State and 465 incorporated villages, both having a population of more than 8,000,000, leaving only 20 per cent in the engaged in agriculture.

High prices of farm products, the independence of farm life, good roads, improvements in educational advantages, prospective advance in land prices, and the assistance and instruction now given to agriculturists, is resulting in a return to the land.

The bulletin shows the farming opportunities in this State in dairying, in sheep raising, poultry and fruit raising, and in other important lines, and contains valuable statistics.

DOUBLE TRACKING WANTED IN OSWEGO

Syracuse—The receivers for the Empire United Railways, Inc., will request Justice Andrews for instructions Saturday morning in the matter of expending some $18,000 in double tracking on the Syracuse, Lake Shore & Northern in the city of Oswego. The papers have not been prepared as yet, but plans have been made which will be presented to the Court together with the request for instructions.

Since the city officers of Oswego have decreed that West First street must be paved between Bridge and Utica streets, the receivers feel that it is wise to lay the double tracks, which must come sooner or later, at this time. It is pointed out that the cost will be less now than if the work is delayed until after the paving is laid.

The city is planning to place the commercial wires in subways and to install an ornamental lighting system, with arms extending out over the street to carry the trolley wires. If the court will permit, the city and company will co-operate in making the changes.

COMPULSORY PHYSICAL TRAINING BILL PASSES

Albany—The Welsh bill, designed to make physical training compulsory in all schools of New York state, passed the assembly yesterday with but four dissenting votes.

The bill requires that the board of regents prescribe a course of physical training for all schools of the state both public and private, to consist of not less than 20 minutes of exercise each day.

Why pay Tire Bills for Others—
—i. e., for RECKLESS Drivers

AMERICANS who want their money's worth,—who dislike to pay for the Reckless-driving extravagance of Others,—in the price of their own Tires, should sit up and take notice of following FACTS:—

The current Goodrich "Fair-List" price on Tires, is based upon what it costs the largest, and best equipped, Rubber Factory in America to produce them.

No "Insurance" Premium added to the NORMAL retail price of Goodrich Tires, in order to protect the Reckless Driver at the expense of the Careful Driver, through a fancy List Price which is high enough to absorb that Premium.

The excess Mileage each Goodrich Tire is reasonably certain to deliver, when given reasonable care in driving, thus becomes clear "Velvet" to the Owner of GOODRICH Tires.

Money can't make, and can't buy, better Tires of Fabric construction, than Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires, as Test will prove.

And, money can't buy the B. F. Goodrich Co. to produce Tires which would discredit the 289 other lines of Rubber Goods made by the B. F. Goodrich Co., for which its name stands Sponsor.

COMPARE prices on Goodrich "Fair-List" Tires with present prices on any other responsible Tires in the field, bearing in mind that NO "LARGER-SIZED" Tires (type for type and size for size) than Goodrich Black-Treads, are made in America.

Then, Test out at least ONE pair of Goodrich black-tread Tires, on their per-DELIVERED-Mile cost to you, against any other Tires in the field, at any price, and,—abide by the Result.

Why (if YOU are not a Reckless Driver) should YOU pay MORE than the "BUSINESS" price of the Goodrich Tire, for ANY Fabric Tire in the field?

Get a sliver of the new Goodrich "Barefoot" Rubber from your nearest Goodrich Dealer or Branch.

EXPERT VALUES CO.'S POWER

R. E. Horton, Testifying for State, Declares That Worth Was $138,895 or $18,400

Syracuse—Robert E. Horton, State's expert in the defence of the $1,875,000 claim of the Battle Island Paper company yesterday attacked the estimates of the company's experts for developing its water power as too low. The company claimed that it cost only $11 to develop a horsepower per year. Horton said it cost the company $50 a horsepower per year.

This is important, as it bears directly upon the company's claim for $500,000 for its power. This figure is based upon the saving it claims it made by using its own power. It would cost $42.50 a horsepower per year, if the company bought it. The difference made $25,000 a year. The company claimed an amount large enough to yield $25,000 a year if invested at 5 per cent to recompense it for the loss of its power. That figure is $500,000.

According to Horton, however, the company's experts failed to consider the investment and cost of operation of the power plant, in reaching their estimates of the cost. Assuming the investment to be $76,937 as shown by the company's books, and the operation cost to be $10,588, he said it would cost $50 a year per horsepower to develop 210 horsepower. That number is the average horsepower used as shown by a watt meter installed at the plant for a year.

Mr. Horton will be on the stand for further cross-examination this morning. He will be followed by another hydraulic expert, John H. Cook, of Passaic, N. J., who will testify for the state along the same lines. Mr. Cook qualified yesterday afternoon before adjournment.

Robert B. Hunter, who was manager of the paper company until it passed into the hands of a receiver, and who testified for the state last week, was cross-examined by George W. Dricoll yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Hunter testified that while he was manager of the Fulton company, five of his brothers were directors. The board consisted of nine directors.

Mr. Driscoll attempted to show that the company was not inherently unprofitable, as the state's attorneys have contended, but fell with other Hunter holdings. The cross-examination of Mr. Hunter was not concluded because of objections on the part of the state's attorneys as to the form of several questions. He will be on the stannd again today.

CHURCHES PREPARING FOR PALM SUNDAY

Next Sunday is Palm Sunday, and in the Catholic church palms will be blessed and distributed to the people. Holy week begins with Palm Sunday. Thursday of that week the oils used by the Catholic church are blessed by the bishop at the cathedral. High mass will be sung in the churches, and two hosts will be consecrated.

One of the hosts will be placed in the repository and on Good Friday the mass of the pre-sanctified will be said. No host is consecrated on Good Friday in the Catholic churches. On Holy Saturday water is blessed for the baptismal fonts and for the people, and the paschal candle, which burns at masses until Trinity Sunday, is also blessed.

Easter will be observed by special music at the Church of the Immaculate Conception and All Saints' P. E. church. Last Sunday was Passion Sunday.

Matrimony.

Matrimony is like freemasonry—no one knows the secret until he is initiated. It is like an eel trap—very easy to get into, but hard to get out of. It is in its first stage like a wind that fans the flame of love, but too much fanning blows it all out. It is everything contradictory, sweet or bitter, just as it is taken. In short it is—

Like a glaring light
Placed in a window on a summer's night,
Alluring all the insects of the air
To come and singe their pretty winglets there.
Those who are out butt heads against the pane;
Those who are in butt to get out again.

BAKERS' STRIKE; BREAD SCARCE IN WATERTOWN

Watertown—As the result of a strike which took place among the night bakers of the Black River Bakery, many Watertown housewives are today experiencing much trouble in procuring bread, holls, cookies and biscuits to supply the wants of the household. Their action last night resulted in a shortage of about 2,600 loaves of bread, from 300 to 400 dozen of rolls and from 500 to 600 dozen of cookies. The eight bakers employed there are credited with this output each night, but when they refused to go to work last evening, M. A. Painter, owner of the bakery, ceased operations and the plant was shut down. The day bakers, however, are working today, and the usual amount of other pastries are being made.

A Tactless Wooing

By EDWARD J. STEWART

The evacuation of Vera Cruz had taken place, and the fleet was ready to sail. The surgeon in charge of the hospital approached the medical director to report that all invalids had been removed.

"There's a man," said the former, "who, I think, must have died without his death getting on to the list. He was dying yesterday afternoon. I haven't seen him since and presume his body was removed. Conover should have seen to it that the record was made."

"Well, there's no time now," said the medical director, "to investigate the case. We must go aboard."

So it was that when the ships reached the United States the name of Horace Morton, petty officer, was reported, "Died in hospital."

Now, it happened that the elimination of Horace Morton was very acceptable to Mrs. Martha Jones, the mother of Ethel Jones, who had been betrothed to the sailor before he departed for Vera Cruz. He had nothing to marry on, while Philip Thompson, a plumber, who also wanted Ethel, had made considerable funds in his business and was able to take care of her in good style. Mrs. Jones had set her face against her daughter's marrying Morton, and to quiet the old lady Ethel promised that if her lover lost his life in Mexico she would marry Thompson. After this promise there was peace in the Jones family, Mrs. Jones hoping that the man who she considered stood in the way of her daughter's welfare would be snuffed out by a Mexican bullet.

But there was only a small scrap at the landing at Vera Cruz, and greatly to Mrs. Jones' disappointment, Morton was not among the killed. Then came the evacuation, and with it the mother made preparations to renew the fight in the matter of a son-in-law. But when she read in a morning paper that Morton had died at Vera Cruz she muttered silent thanks and with every appearance of heartfelt sympathy broke the sad news to her daughter, all the while laying plans for a wedding with the plumber.

Ethel shut herself up in her room for a week, then came out with a surrender, telling her mother that since her lover was dead she cared not whom she married and was perfectly willing to take the plumber or any one else. Such being the case, Mrs. Jones sent Mr. Thompson word that the way was open for him to win her daughter, but she advised him to be very circumspect and proceed slowly. She believed that Ethel thought she loved another, but that the girl was deceiving herself. A few weeks' courtship would do the business.

Mr. Thompson, who was not an adept in wooing a woman who had just lost the man she loved, began by sending Ethel an invitation to a plumbers' ball. Fortunately, he sent it through Mrs. Jones, who threw it in the fire with all haste and wrote her daughter's nonacceptance on account of indisposition.

Mr. Thompson's next move was sending a bouquet of flowers. Mrs. Jones intercepted them, separated the posy, put them in a box and gave them to Ethel as an offering of sympathy from the donor.

This was a beginning, and Mrs. Jones hoped that by carefully heading off the indelicate attentions of Mr. Thompson to bring the affair to a successful termination in due time. Why she took so much pains to prevent her daughter's being ruffled by the plumber's want of tact is not plain, because Ethel was not in a state of mind to care whom she married. Perhaps her motive was looking to the future. It is also a question as to why Mr. Thompson was anxious to marry a girl whose heart was in the grave. He explained this to Mrs. Jones by saying that a live man was better any day than a dead one and Ethel was sure to find it out. It must be admitted that there is more wisdom in the explanation than sentiment in the statement.

All things have an end, and the plumber's courtship was no exception. The wedding day came round, and with it came a coincidence. When the wedding party was assembling in walked Horace Morton, who had failed to get on the dead list in accordance with the navy regulations. And there was no time for an investigation. He had walked out of the hospital in delirium, and the party responsible for him had been looking for him up to the very moment of the sailing of the fleet homeward.

Upon his appearance as a wedding guest, pale and emaciated, there was a scattering of those present. The bride alone seemed to consider him flesh and blood and, rushing toward him, fell into his arms. He had been aware of Mrs. Jones' opposition to him and her preference for the plumber; consequently he took in the situation without its being explained to him.

"I reckon," he said, "that since everything is handy for a wedding we may as well have one."

Mrs. Jones, seeing that she had lost, threw up the sponge. The plumber remarked that there were as good fish in the sea as ever were caught and walked away without any evident disappointment. Ethel was presently prevailed upon to celebrate the wedding with the change of grooms, and when the parson came in she was married to the sailor.

This is not the only case of a man's being officially dead and turning up at a time when he is not expected.

HOW TO WARD OFF DISEASES BY HAVING CLEAN HANDS.

Most epidemics of typhoid fever nowadays are ultimately traced to a single person who, either sick with the disease, sickening with it, convalescent from it or acting as a chronic "carrier" of the germs, literally hands the infection to those who happen to be in contact with him.

But if typhoid and dysentery and cholera were the only diseases spread by unwashed hands we wouldn't say a word—we'd leave it to the health authorities. Unfortunately a lot of other diseases are peddled about in the same manner, such as diphtheria, pneumonia, sore throat and "cold" in the head, and with the exception of diphtheria and pneumonia these diseases do not interest the health authorities.

There are families where children sit at table and say grace with unwashed hands. There are other families where parents take a squint at the children's hands and, if they discover no microbes thereon, let the youngsters sit right down and shovel in whatever contamination may have been collected through the day. Is it any wonder grandma still has occasional seeming vindication of her idea that "sugar makes worms?" Worms make worms, and children help the work along by transplanting the eggs from contaminated soil to food and from the food to their own innocent mouths.

THE MIDNIGHT SUPPERS.

How to Make Dream Cakes on Your Chafing Dish.

The easiest things in the world to make in a chafing dish are dream cakes, and everybody who likes a rarebit will rave over these toothsome dainties, which are built of cheese, cream and slices of bread. They are less trouble than the ordinary Welsh rabbit, which requires a good many ingredients and prolonged cooking, and they are "hearty" enough to make a sustaining supper after an evening of bridge. Two or at most three dream cakes will be all the average person can eat, unless he is willing to risk the possible weird dreams which are said to have given these rich delicacies their name.

Press half a pound of soft rarebit cheese through a potato curler or a colander until you have a pile of light, flaky cheese particles. Mix with the cheese half a cupful of sweet cream. Season with a pinch of salt, paprika, a dash of mustard and a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce. Have ready slices of bread, cut rather thick and with the crusts trimmed off. Spread one slice thickly with the cheese, another slice down upon it and then brown the sandwich thus made in a chafing dish brazier in which butter is bubbling. When golden brown and crisp serve piping hot on a small plate. Do not have the sandwiches too large; small ones will brown more quickly. Ordinary slices of bread, trimmed at the edges, may be cut in two diagonally to make three cornered dream cakes.

How to Teach Children the Great Law of Cause and Effect.

Children should be taught from the beginning the great moral law of cause and effect, not to look for wealth without work, for honor without honesty. Teach them that character stands above surroundings and that esteem should be bestowed where it is due, whether for mental endowment or material wealth.

It is not all of morals to moralize, and less precept and more example is to be commended. The living realization, the quiet suggestion, the favorable opportunity, are the efficient teachers. Ignorance is responsible for a great deal of wickedness, but evil example and parental neglect are responsible for vastly more.

A sense of right and wrong should be cultivated early in a child's life, and much may be accomplished in this direction before the child leaves the mother's nursery training.

How to Case Harden Iron Utensils When They Are Quite New.

Make up a paste of powdered prussiate of potash and water. Coat the iron with this paste and set it aside to dry. Let the forge fire be clear and bright. When the paste is dry upon the iron thrust the iron into the fire until it is cherry red. Keep it at this heat for a few minutes and then take it out. Plunge it into cold water, and it will be found converted into steel at the surface.—Popular Science Monthly.

How to Sew Buttons on Children's Clothes For Permanency.

When you sew buttons on the children's dresses run a tape down the wrong side first. If each button is sewed through to the tape no amount of hard wear or abuse in the laundry will tear it from the goods. Another wise precaution is to use linen thread for the buttons on your boy's suit.

How to Add Life to Candles During the Long Evenings.

With the shorter days here candles are being used more and more for dinner. If the candles are given a coat of colorless varnish and allowed to dry thoroughly before lighting they will not only last longer, but the varnish will prevent the wax melting and running down.

The Co-operative Plan

A Farmer Tries It on an Auto

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

I was driving across the country with a horse and buggy when I came to the wreck of an auto in the ditch, and a farmer was tinkering at it. He had a sledge, crowbar, an ax, a cold chisel and a screwdriver and had worked up a nice little state of perspiration.

"You appear to have a wreck here," I said as I drew in my horse.

"Appear!" he shouted as he looked up. "If this isn't the durndest wreck anybody ever saw I'll eat my hat!"

"How did it happen?"

"How does anything happen to an auto with a fool driving it?"

"Was it yours?" I asked, scenting a story.

"One-fifth of her was mine up to last night. Now the whole sad remains belong to me. Did you ever hear of the co-operative plan among farmers?"

"Lots of times."

"Waal, then, this was co-operation in buyin' and runnin' an automobile, and this is one of the results of it. The other result is that I am about $300 out of pocket and have lost a widder who was goin' to be my wife. If you want to hear all about it I'll tell you, for I guess it hain't any use to tinker any more at this blamed old thing."

The farmer took a seat on the mortal remains of the auto and drew a long breath and proceeded to say:

"There was Tom Evans, Joe Baxter, Jim Williams and Si Perkins. They are all farmers and live about here. They are all married men, and each one has a gang of children. As for me, I am an old bachelor, but I was a-sparkin' of the nicest widder woman in this county. The four men I have mentioned come over to my house one evenin' a month ago, and Tom Evans he asks if I would go in with 'em on the co-operative plan to buy an auto.

"'How much?' says I.

"'A thousand,' says he.

"'That's $250 each.'

"'Jest so, Sam.'

"And the auto was bought?" I queried.

"She was, sir. She arrived here glistenin' like a star, and she excited the wonder of folks for ten miles around. We got a feller from town to show us how to run her, and in about a week we was all ready to glide around the country. Bein' I was a single man and mightily in love with a widder, they said I might take the auto out first, which was very decent of them. I felt sure I could run the machine as good as any man in the state. It was a bright moonlight night, and the whippoorwills were singin' and the katydids chirpin', and that widder woman should promise to be mine before we returned."

"And did she?" was asked as the farmer heaved a long sigh.

"She didn't, stranger, and I'll tell you why. We had gone about a mile as steady as an old horse when the auto shied at a stone in the road, ran through a rail fence, wrecked the auto, and the widow gave me fits."

"It gets interesting," I said.

"Kinder interestin', stranger—kinder so. We got a machinist to tinker $50 worth of tinker, and the old machine could run again. Then it was Tom's turn. He has a wife and five children, and they all piled in. They was clippin' along as happy as larks when they came to a crossroad. The auto was for keepin' straight ahead, Tom wanted to turn to the right and his wife to the left, and the result was that the machine run into and knocked over the guidepost and then tried to climb a fence. The whole family took a spill and was scattered for twenty rods around. No one was killed, and there was no broken bones, but the bruises are yet blue, and Tom still walks bent over like an old man on account of the jar to his spine. By this time we had all got skeery of the machine; but, it bein' now Jim's turn and he not wantin' to be called a coward, he took out his family for a promenade. As the other accidents had occured at night, Jim went out in the afternoon. He thought there might be somethin' in the night air that affected the old critter. There was seven in the family, and they was climbin' the hill beyond the red ridge when all to once the auto gave a snort and stopped in her tracks.

"'What's the matter?' asked Jim's wife.

"'Durned if I know, but she's got to go!' he answers.

"And she did go, sir—she went backwards. There was screamin' and yellin' and swearin', and Joe's wife slapped his face; but nothin' did any good. That auto kept on goin' backwards until it dumped them all in the river, which was about three feet deep at that time. They was shook up and bruised and half drowned, but they were lucky for all that. They waded ashore and left the old auto lyin' on its back in the river."

"But you got it out again?" I asked.

"Yes. We had to," was the reply. "It was in tryin' to get the old critter home ag'in that she suddenly bolted and run into a telegraph pole and wrecked herself as you see her."

"And she won't be tinkered up again?"

"She can't be. There's nothin' left to tinker, unless the blacksmith thinks he can make five wise men out of the five fools who bought her and lost about $250 apiece. I used to think co-operation of farmers was a beautiful thing, but [illegible] through with it!"

Waists Now Close at the Side.

Shirt waist of crepe meteor, closing at the side. It is trimmed with self-buttons and a four-in-hand of taffeta.

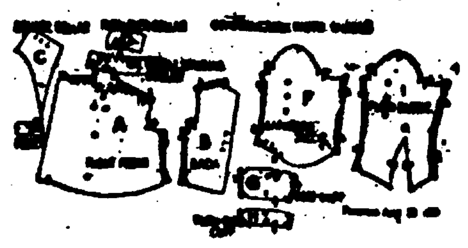
Nothing short of an index system will keep one posted on the changes in separate waists. Each innovation seems to find a ready welcome, however. Here is a new design in crepe meteor, distinguished by its method of adjustment. The side closing gives free play to front decoration and one easily can imagine how effective embroidery would be on a waist of batiste or linen. In medium size the model calls for 2¾ yards 36-inch material.

The primary step in the construction of the waist is to gather the shoulder edges of the front between double "TT" perforations. Then close the underarm and shoulder seams and hem at left front edge of right front at notches. Stitch a tape underneath the gathers at left shoulder edge of right front drawing gathers tto the required size. Center-front is indicated by large "O" perforations in right front.

Adjust pockets to position on right front, upper edge of pockets between the 2 small "o" perforations.

Sew collar to neck edge, center upper edge of pockets between the 2 backs even and on right front along small "o" perforations, single large "O" perforations even: leave the left side of the collar free from shoulder seam to lower front edge of collar and bind the edge.

Close the sleeve seam as notched and gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of cuff as notched leaving seam free about 2 inches from lower edge.



Sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff to seam of sleeve, and bring the seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew turnover to cuff as notched. Sew sleeve in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even, easing in any fulness.

Self-covered buttons and a four-in-hand of taffeta are details that count for smartness of decoration.

gaberdine, with a double row of novelty buttons. The yoke is corded, as are the cuffs, and interesting little patches of smocking fill spaces. The coat takes a little white straw and satin bonnet trimmed with pink rosebuds.

Tartare Sauce.

Materials.—Two small cucumber pickles, three olives, one teaspoonful capers, one tablespoonful chopped parsley, one-half teaspoonful chopped chives or a few drops of onion juice and one cupful of mayonnaise.

Directions.—Chop all of the ingredients very finely, unless onion juice is used in place of the olives, in which event grate this from the whole onion on a coarse grater. Blend with the mayonnaise and set aside to become thoroughly chilled before using.

Fresh Meat Griddlecakes.

Chop bits of cold cooked fresh beef, veal, etc., and season with salt and pepper. Make a griddlecake batter and lay a spoonful of it (batter) on a heated and well buttered iron spider, on the placed batter a spoonful of the chopped meat, then a spoonful of batter over the meat. "Yes," crisply retorts the other mother, "but I would beg you to remember that my daughter has landed her one beau, while your daughter is wondering which of the fifty-three is coming [illegible]."

RHUBARB PIE.—Line a deep plate with crust and put on a rim, then wash, but do not peel the rhubarb; cut in half inch pieces. If the stalks are very large cut them thinner. Fill loosely into the pie and heap the plate a little. Mix a heaping teaspoonful of flour with a generous cupful of sugar and a tiny pinch of salt; sprinkle over the pie and put on upper crust, which has several half inch gashes in it to let out steam. Wet the edge of under crust before putting on rim, then wet the rim before putting on top crust. Do not tuck crust in, but trim it off. Bake in a good oven until crust is brown.

Simple Charlotte Russe.—Take dry sponge cake or, better still, some lady fingers; place in dish, whip a half pint of cream until stiff, flavor with small teaspoonful vanilla and pile on the lady fingers or cake in a glass dish. If you have any currant or grape jelly drop a little on each one's portion when served.

Alaska Surprise.—Inside a mould of vanilla ice cream place some brandied peaches with whipped cream; perfume the whipped cream with a little chartreuse; freeze, unmold, place on a platter, decorate so as to cover all the ice cream with a fairly good layer of beaten whites of eggs, to which has been added a little chocolate powder; place in oven to color. Serve at once.

Orange Cake.—Yolks of five eggs, two cupfuls granulated sugar, two cupfuls bread flour, one-half cupful cold water, one-half teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream tartar, whites of three eggs, grated peel and juice of one orange. Beat yolks until thick, sift sugar three times and add. Beat the whites of eggs stiff and add to first mixture, next the water and soda, then flour and cream of tartar sifted twice. Lastly add the orange juice and grated rind. Bake in a dripping pan, and when done cut in halves and frost with orange frosting. Frosting.—Whites of three eggs, one orange juice and grated rind and powdered sugar to make stiff enough to spread. This cake is [illegible] good until the day after making. Be sure to use [illegible]. Frosting may be made without whites of eggs.

EARLY BULB PLANTING.

Expert Tips About How to Manage Your Lily Bed.

Bulbs are real harbingers of spring, and there are no plants so easily grown nor so inexpensive as hyacinths, tulips or daffodils. Inside a bulb are many thickened scales, which contain enough stored food to develop the blooms. Because of this nourishment such bulbs as the hyacinth, paper white narcissus and the Chinese sacred lily may be grown in water if desired, though water contains practically no plant food. The whole growing period is supported by the food in storage.

For the same reason the soil used for potting bulbs needs to be loose and porous rather than rich, so that roots may easily develop. If the soil is a heavy clay it should be lightened by the addition of sand or even finely sifted coal ashes. Fresh manure must not be used. Even well rotted manure should be avoided unless it is thoroughly incorporated in the soil.

The best bulbs that can be bought are rarely too expensive. A cost of 5 or 10 cents each for bulbs is unimportant when growing plants from which you expect the best results. Tulips, daffodils and most other bulbs should be planted four to eight in a pot, but hyacinths appear best when planted singly. The pots should not be large. A little broken pottery is put over the hole in the bottom for drainage, and the pot is filled with enough soil so that when the bulbs are placed in it they will be just underneath the soil surface. A little space is left at the top of the pot for water.

After potting, the bulbs are to be watered thoroughly and placed in the dark so that they may start their roots before their tops. Most failures in bulb planting are due to a lack of attention to this simple detail.

Shad Delicacies.

Baked Shad.—Try to get a thick fish. Most dealers scale the fish for you. Remove the head and tail, split down the back and remove the backbone and the small bones along the edge. Wash in cold water, but do not allow fish to lie in the water, and dry with a piece of cheesecloth. Brush a shallow pan with one tablespoonful of drippings, lay the shad in, skin side down, sprinkle with one teaspoonful of salt, one eighth teaspoonful of white pepper. Melt teaspoonful of butter and put over the shad, dust with a little flour and pour over one-half cupful of milk; put into a very hot oven twenty-five to thirty minutes. It should be light brown, and the hotter the oven the better the shad will be. If it browns in less than fifteen minutes reduce the heat, as it takes twenty-five to thirty minutes to bake thoroughly.

Directions For Frying Shad Roe.—Wipe the roe with damp piece of cheesecloth. Put one tablespoonful of drippings into fry pan; when hot put in the roe, cover with tin plate or lid and fry very slowly ten minutes. Remove cover and turn carefully with cake turner so as not to break the roe. Dust with salt and pepper, cover and fry for five minutes, uncover and fry light brown on both sides. Serve with lemon and garnish with parsley. Always be careful not to break the roe.

AN ENCHANTED PRINCESS.

Once there lived a poor woodcutter and his wife in the middle of the forest. He had three sons called Edward, George and Albert. The two eldest were thoughtless, but good natured.

One day Edward, the eldest, said to his father, "I am going out to make my fortune, father, and when I have made it I will come back."

His father let him go sadly. On the way Edward passed a trap with a poor little mouse in it, but as he was so thoughtless he did not think of letting it out.

A few days after George set out to make his fortune. He, too, passed the mouse, but did not let it out.

After that Albert left home to make his fortune, but when he came to the trap he went up and let the poor little mouse out. Instantly it became a beautiful princess.

"Thank you, dear Albert," she said to the astonished boy. "A wicked witch turned me into a mouse, but will you come and set my castle free?"

Albert said "Yes" gladly. So he followed her, and at last they came to a grand castle. When they went in nobody was there.

Then the princess said: "Tonight you will be tortured by invisible beings. You will see only their hands and feet, but don't say a word, and in the morning I will come. This will happen for three nights, but on the third day the castle will be yours."

That night when Albert was reading ten pairs of hands and feet appeared and pulled his hair, pinched and kicked him and tore his book to pieces, but he never said a word. Next morning the princess came, and with her came a hundred attendants, whom he had made free by his watching. That night the same happened, and in the morning the princess came with 200 servants now. The third night passed, and still he did not speak, and in the morning the princess came with 300 servants and embraced him. She showed him all the cellars full of gold.

A few days after they were married, and after that Prince Albert went to his father's home to bring him to his castle. The brothers had come back penniless through their thoughtlessness. They all went to the castle, and the mother and father lived with Princess Marion and Prince Albert. The brothers married the sisters of Marion, who also had castles. They all lived to a good old age.

Luck.

Luck is that which has made your successful neighbor what he is and has conspired to prevent you from becoming what you would like to be. Luck is good or bad, according to whether you are contemplating your neighbor's success or accounting on your own failures.

Luck is a handy little thing to have around, for if it does not benefit you it at least affords you an objective kicking point. Also, the mere mention of its name relieves you of the necessity of making many embarrassing excuses. Luck is a barb which may prevent disaster from poaching on your domains, but if it does not do this you at least have the satisfaction of impaling upon it all reasons for your defeat.

Luck is perhaps more unlucky than you are.—Judge.

East Indian Monkeys.

A naturalist who has traveled in the East Indies says: "The effect on the monkeys of man's appearance is most interesting. The expression of their emotions is certainly almost human as they sit and stare at him, coughing and snarling with anger and contempt, drawing back their heads and throwing the hand before the face with a gesture of abhorrence and other movements indicative of shocked and outraged feelings. But predominant is the expression of absolute horror, which, coming from those we consider our still degraded cousins, is to our superiority very aggravating."

For The Small Girl.

Little girl's frock of white crepe meteor, trimmed with smocking, done in blue. Shirring makes an equally smart trimming.

The supply of dainty frocks for little tots is remarkable, and among them one notices many quaint models in silk, crepe de chine and crepe meteor, all, however, of washable variety. A dainty model is shown here, made with the front and back yoke cut in one. The distinguishing feature of the dress is the smocking which trims it. In medium size it requires 2⅝ yards of 36-inch material.

There are eight pieces to the pattern and it is necessary to fold the material in half so that each piece will be cut in duplicate. The front is placed on the lengthwise fold, as shown on the cutting guide (A), and to the right of it is laid the back (B). Next come the yoke and collar.

On the second row are placed the lap, the pocket and the sleeve, all on a lengthwise fold. For the open neck, cut out the neck edge of the yoke ⅝ inch above small "o" perforations. Many mothers prefer the high neck, however, with straight collar, in which case a double row of buttons may be added to the decorative scheme, being sewn directly down the front.

The smocking is a simple design and works up very quickly. Threads of contrasting color may be used for the work, for instance, white on a blue or pink ground, and vice versa.

There is a plait at either side of the back of the dress and between this are several rows of smocking.

Shirring may take the place of smocking and is also very fashionable.

OUR CAVALRY FORCES IN THEIR FIGHTS FACE HARDSHIPS WITH VILLA'S OUTLAWS

Vivid Description of Running Engagement In Which Defeated Bandits Were Driven to Hills.

Magnificent Ride Without a Stop Shows That United States Mounted Troops Are Not Excelled.

WHILE many hundreds of American troops are now in Mexico facing unknown dangers, with occasional fights between the cavalrymen and members of Villa's band, interest of the public is of course centered there. Everybody is wondering what will be the outcome. Everybody is trying to guess if the president will be proved right in his judgment in sending troops there.

But few realize the tremendous obstacles that must be surmounted before the expedition comes to a successful culmination. The following description of a battle with the forces of Villa gives a good insight into the difficulties that must be overcome:

Out of the gray mist that lay over the fields surrounding the tiny town of San Geronimo rode a ragged, hatless Mexican. He came, so runs the story, on a little, shaggy, staggering pony, and he was furiously roweling the rickety ribs of his mount with the huge seven pointed wheels that hang to the boot heels of every Mexican rider.

That he bore news of import was apparent in his manner and gestures as he clattered into the town and lifted his poor horse back upon his haunches at a sleepy hail:

"Halto! Quien vive?"

"The gringos are coming!" was his answering yell.

Rush For the Horses.

There was a chorus of shrill, excited cries, a sudden tossing aside of thin, mangy blankets and serapes as dark forms sprang from the ground. There was a scurry of feet, a creak of leather, and immediately the one street of San Geronimo was filled with evil looking, dark skinned men, dragging emaciated horses after them and repeating:

"The gringos are coming!"

They were the men of Pancho Villa's nondescript command. Dirty and tired, and hungry, and with the glare of hunted animals in their eyes, they had punched their weary horses into the town the night before and had fairly fallen from their saddles to snatch a few winks of sleep.

By the light of the sun and the glow of the moon and stars they had been riding and fighting across over 200 miles of territory, hustling for the sanctuary of the hills far beyond, always with the knowledge that behind them—fast oncoming—rode a relentless foe.

The gringos were coming indeed!

Dawn was streaking the hillsides as Villa's men finished strapping their wide pommeled saddles to the sore backs of their horses and cramming the cruel bits into the mouths of the tired animals.

Troops Emerge From Mist.

There came the noise of heavy hoofs beating upon the road. The peaked service hat of an American cavalryman lifted out of the vaporish mist. Then another. Then another. Then still another. Finally there came a muffled pop, as if some distant automobile had blown out a rear tire, only it was followed by the never to be mistaken and never to be forgotten whine of a steel jacketed bullet, crying along the breeze.

The gringos had arrived!

Villa's men—the last of the "golden ones," the ragtag volunteers and the scared conscripts—all that motley crew that has been following the chieftain across Chihuahua—made a mad rush for their saddles. In another moment they were flying out of San Geronimo, but behind them, moving closer and closer every minute, came those bobbing peaked hats atop the long striding horses of the American cavalry, and over the mournful wail of the gringo Springfield sang in their ears.

Sixty dead Mexicans were gathered up by those who went over the five mile course of the running battle out of San Geronimo.

Four Americans, troopers of Lieutenant Colonel Erwin's squadron of the famous Seventh cavalry, constitute the total casualty list of the fight with Villa's forces.

Led by Lieutenant Colonel Erwin.

It was Lieutenant Colonel Erwin who led the column into San Geronimo. His detachment was one of the three columns under Colonel Dodd.

An hour or so earlier and Erwin would have surprised the Mexicans asleep on the ground in San Geronimo. He had planned to hit the town about 4 o'clock in the morning. He was

COLONEL DODD.

EXAMINING BREAD FOR TROOPS.

snatching a leaf from Villa's own book of night attack. Instead he got there about 6 o'clock. His plans had miscarried to some extent, due to no fault of his own. In the meantime that Mexican messenger—a sympathizer with Villa—had managed to get to the village with a warning.

With practically no provision for his men and mighty little for his mounts, Erwin swung the noses of his horses in the direction of San Geronimo. He rode all that day. He rode all that night.

Walk, trot, gallop, walk, trot, gallop, their saddle bags bounding up and down, their rifles slanted along the backs of their necks and their sabers clattered against the stirrups—all day, all night the men of the Seventh rode.

The sun went down, the stars came out and still they pounded along the trail. A cold wind swept down from the mountains—forerunner of the rain and the sleet and finally the snow through which most of the columns of the punitive expedition are moving.

Occasionally a subdued muttering passed along the files as the men commented on their probable destination, but mainly they talked little. They knew they were going somewhere and were glad of it—that's all.

Huddled down in their saddles, their heads bowed to the cold blasts, they rode stirrup to stirrup and boot to boot. The wise old cavalry horses footed it along with their muzzles almost to their knees, nosing the dark roadway.

Walk, Trot and Gallop.

As the long hours wore toward morning and Erwin saw he would be a little late, he hit up the pace. Walk and trot, gallop; walk, trot, gallop; the column moved, but now it was mostly trot and gallop. A man had to be leather legged and have a spinal column of tempered steel to stand that ride—a long ride, hard ride—a typical American cavalry ride.

There was a brief halt here and there to breathe the horses and tighten the cinches, and then at the end of more than fifty miles of the distance and seventeen hours of riding the town of San Geronimo showed faint and far away through the clearing mist, and the rifles were lifted from the rings at the cavalrymen's belts.

The Villistas fought what might be described as a rear guard action in their flight. After about five miles the main body began splitting up into small detachments and dodging off to the four winds. Suddenly every Mexican seemed to evaporate from the landscape. They had all ducked into the hills, every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost.

Erwin began closing up and taking stock. The fight was over for the time being. There was nothing left to be done but to pick up the wounded and the dead, who lay sprawled on the ground, as the long necked, long beaked vultures began wheeling like small specks in the sky far above.

With the campaigning of the last two weeks under their belts, there is no cavalry in all the world that can equal these sunbrowned, hardened men and horses of the American army. They outrode Francisco Villa, one of the hardest riding, fastest moving troop leaders that war has ever produced. His horses were supposed to be the pick of the country through which he has fled and all inured to climatic conditions thereabouts.

Cold Does Not Chill Spirit.

It has been bitter cold along the Casas Grandes and the Santa Maria valleys, through which the American troops are camped or are moving. It is bitter cold in the hills where the horse soldiers are riding. The cold spell began with a rain, which turned into sleet, and following the sleet came a species of snow, only it was colder than most snows.

The men in camp passed most of their time in their dog tents, while those who were so situated that they could not raise these puny shelters grouped themselves about campfires made of green cottonwood and mesquite, which gives off a prodigious smoke, but not so much heat.

SEARCHING MEXICAN SUSPECT ON BORDER.

It is hard to suppress the spirits of the American soldier, however, and in one big camp, after the rain passed, there was a terrific whooping and a wild charge in every direction by hundreds of soldiers in pursuit of a badly scared jackrabbit. They finally ran the rabbit down and hauled him into a stew pot before the lather on his sides had dried.

Twenty real Indian scouts have recently joined the expedition. Strange looking soldiers they are, but regular soldiers and proud of it as any in the army. Five of the twenty have for years been enlisted men in the army on duty at Fort Apache, and the other fifteen were recruited especially for the present expedition. The battalion of moving picture men had been awaiting eagerly for a week the opportunity to catch these newcomers in all the glory of their Navajo blankets and colorful costumes. Instead they arrived in olive drab, the regulation costume of the American soldier, but neither rules nor officers could make them give up their eagle feathers. These sprouted incongruously from the regulation army wide brimmed hats of the Apaches.

And hidden beneath their costumes they carried their soft leather moccasins. Some of the army officers have done duty at the army post in the middle of their reservation, and they say that as soon as the Indians get in action there will be twenty pairs of heavy army shoes thrown away on the desert, and the Indians will put on the moccasins for the real work.

They are mostly squat, rawboned, powerful looking fellows, the color of a well used saddle, their unaccustomed clothing bunching on them like sacks, some of them with long black hair falling about their shoulders and most of them being sixty and seventy years old, but with the physical endurance of an ox.

HIGH ESCAPED LOSS OF HONORS

Game Was Anything But Conducive to Calmness, and the End Came None Too Soon.

In the third and final game of the series for the championship of the city, the High school five defeated the Maccabees on the court at Church's Hall last night to the tune of 32 to 29.

Aspurt by the Maccabees after they were more than 10 points in the rear came too late in the game to result in a victory for them. Had the game gone a minute longer, there is a strong possibility that the tide of victory would have been reversed as the high school defence and offense had become ragged after Captain Ives of the losers had scored several times in succession.

The game, with the exception of the middle of the second period, was close at all times, the lead constantly shifting. The Maccabees were the first to score, a basket by Ives starting the hostilities, after the teams had battled for five minutes. Martin and Ives alternated in giving their respective teams the lead in the first half and at the end of this period the players left the floor with the score tied at 15-15. Martin's ability to shoot fouls gave his team the victory. Ives was able to make good in one out of seven attempts, while Martin found the net for six points in ten throws from the foul line.

Notwithstanding the fact that Referee Morin made every effort to control the game by constantly calling fouls for violations, the game nevertheless proved to be a "rough-house," so intense was the feeling of each player to have his team win. Ives was the individual star of the game scoring seven field baskets. Martin played his usual game, securing five baskets from a different angle. Don O'Brien occupied the opposite forward position to Martin, displacing Reynolds who was injured in practice on Monday. O'Brien proved to be a worthy substitute and although having hard luck in the first half in locating the basket, he found the net for three shots in the second period.

Two preliminary games preceded the main event, the first one between the Presbyterian A. C. and the high school second team resulting in a victor yfor the school five by a score of 20 to 10. Calkins was the individual star of the game. Miss Dickerman's squad of girl players engaged in the second game. Sarah Dickinson, Margaret Howe, and Hilda Clark were the sensation performers in this match.

The summary in the High School-Maccabee match:

| High School | | Maccabee |
|---|---|---|
| Martin | Right Forward | Ives |
| O' Brien | Left Forward | Snow |
| Wallace | Center | Crockett |
| Frawley | Right Guard | Ward |
| Johnson | Left Guard | Rohrball |

GREAT COST OF THE WAR.

Europe Spending $25,000,000,000 a Year. Mexican Invasion Cheap.

It is costing Europe $25,000,000,000 a year to carry on the war, according to figures in the April letter of the National City bank of New York. Uncle Sam's expedition into Mexico is costing $50 a minute—one nine-hundred-and-fifty-secondth of the European cost.

The annual rate of expenditure of the big fighting powers is divided as follows:

Great Britain, $5,000,000,000.

Germany, $6,000,000,000.

Russia, $6,000,000,000.

France, $4,400,000,000.

The remainder is made up by Italy, Servia, Bulgaria and other warring nations.

GERMAN NOTE DENIES SHIP WAS SUNK BY SUB.

Berlin—Germany's reply to the inquiries of the American government regarding the steamships Sussex, Manchester Engineer, Englishman, Berwindvale and Eagle Point, signed by Herr Gottlieb von Jagow, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs, has been forwarded to Washington by the American Ambassador, Mr. James W. Gerard.

The note denies that the Sussex was attacked by a German submarine. The investigation covering the Sussex case, says the note, was extended to all actions undertaken on March 24—the day of the Sussex incident—in the Channel between Folkestone and Dieppe. One steamship was sunk, the commander of the German submarine reaching the definite conclusion that it was a war vessel. A sketch of this vessel, together with photographic reproductions of a picture of the steamship Sussex printed in the London Daily Graphic, were enclosed with the note, the difference between the two craft being indicated.

The steamships Englishman and Eagle Point were sunk by German submarines after they had attempted to escape, and time was allowed for the withdrawal of those aboard.

The steamship Berwindvale was possibly sunk by a German submarine, while definite details with respect to the Manchester Engineer are lacking and, therefore, there has been no sufficient basis for investigation of this particular case.

GERMAN FEMINISTS WOULD DRAFT WOMEN

Idea Is That All Girls Should Be Conscripted For a Year to Learn Useful Work.

The Hague.—Conscription for women is the latest idea of German feminists.

German women have accomplished an amazing amount of work for the fatherland in the present war, but the feminist leaders assert that too much of the work has been dilettante, ill organized and ill directed.

What is wanted, according to these women, is the introduction of compulsory service for women—not military, but home service. Each woman, they say, should spend one year in the later teens learning work which should be useful to the state. At the end of that time she could return to the bosom of her family.

At a meeting held at Berlin recently Dr. Gertrude Banmer developed this idea. She showed how feminine work for the fatherland had been hampered by lack of training and organization, drew a fine picture of what could have been done had the women been called upon at the same time as the men, each woman knowing her job and knowing where to go to it.

Finally, she urged the advantages in the way of discipline which the men got from their years of service. "We must be done with dilettantism!" she cried. "Every woman must learn that she owes a duty not only to her child, but to the home, and not only to the home, but to the state, and, above all, she must know what to do."

WISCONSIN GIRL KILLS WOLF WITH MOP STICK

Declares It Was Not Much, but Gets a Bounty and Will Wear Hide as Furs.

Menominee, Wis.—Since Mabel Henderson killed a wolf with a mop handle she has been kept busy answering letters that poured in from all parts of the country. Some wrote from curiosity to find out what kind of a girl she was and others merely wanted to congratulate her.

When Miss Henderson stepped out of the house she saw the family dog fighting with the wolf. She seized the mop handle, the first weapon that came into her hands, and went to the dog's rescue. She killed the wolf and received a bounty of $10 from the secretary of state, with a personal letter of congratulation, and also $10 from the county.

The skin of the wolf is being made into a set of furs, which Miss Henderson will take pride in wearing.

"It wasn't much," said Mabel. "I saw the wolf and got mad. I did not think of being in danger myself and just grabbed the first thing I got my hands on. That was all. I was surprised that the animal did not run away. I guess I surprised him and hit him so hard the first time that he was too stunned to think of getting away. Anyway, I got him, and he won't bother our house any more."

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

No charge made for this space.

The Clean-up, Paint-up, Brighten-up and Live-up Campaign of the FULTON Chamber of Commerce is the biggest campaign that was ever going to be pulled off in the State of New York. We have already taken some very nice pictures showing some of the dirty places in the city and we hope to take some more in a few days and publish them in the papers. It is too bad that some of the property owners in the city, men of standing in the community allow conditions to prevail that really are a shame to the community at large, because some places in our good city are so terribly dirty that one needs rubber boots to take a picture. Civic pride is one of the greatest assets a citizen can have and if he allows his property to look dirty, he cannot be a clean man himself.

Do as you like, but don't forget that MAY 2d will go into history as one of the greatest musical events in the city of FULTON.

We sincerely hope that you will not forget your city when it comes to good things. Remember than on the evening of May 2nd, one of the MOST ELEVATING, MOST EDUCATING, MOST UPLIFTING events will take place in the form of the SECOND CONCERT OF THE FULTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA with two international stars as soloists, MR. JOHN FINNEGAN, tenor soloist of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York City, and, Miss [illegible] Carson, soprano of that city. Mr. Finnegan has [illegible] with some of the largest musical organizations in the country and has been on tour with Madame Gadski. Remember, that this is a treat of the first class and that you should be willing to BACK THIS UNDERTAKING UP WITH ALL YOUR HEART. You will get about one thousand dollars worth for a few cents and then, as said before, it will be uplifting to the fullest extent of the word.

To be a real good Christian, you should first of all try to live ac good as you possibly can; then you should look out for the other fellow and assist him as much as you can and the result will be: A HAPPY WORLD.

* * *

Don't get too much wrapped up in things of MINOR importance; remember your good city in which you have to make a living, and in which you should live as happy as you possibly can.

* * *

YOUR CITY COMES FIRST in all things. If you can better your city, you better yourself. Don't listen to the fellow who tells you that you can't do a thing for your city. Belong to the progressive ones and don't let George do it.

On May 2d the concert of the SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will stand out like a GIANT IN EDUCATION, IN THE POSITIVE BETTERMENT OF HUMANITY. IN THE GREAT SPIRIT OF COOPERAION OF CITIZENS OF ALL CLASSES.

* * *

Those who try so very much to UPLIFT the populace, sometimes FORGET that the POPULACE has brains also and cannot be fooled with mere loose arguments.

* * *

If it is your intention to do SOME REAL GOOD WORK FOR YOUR COMMUNITY then you should by all means go to the SECOND CONCERT OF THE FULTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA with the two STARS as soloists. We will flood the city of FULTON with advertising and we will DELIVER THE REAL GOODS.

* * *

We are always on the look-out to give you something WORTH WHILE for YOUR MONEY. Tell us after this seconnd concert is over, if we do or not.

* * *

FULTON FIRST, LAST AND ALL THE TIME will be written with golden letters in the book of the life of our city, because these few words are the HERALD OF PROGRESS, OF GOOD SPIRIT without the many denominations, without the idea of trying to get something for one PARTICULAR class of people.

* * *

The pest of the world is the gossiper. He lies, betrays, ruins reputations, spoils good names, and lets trouble enter within the walls of SACRED HOMES.

---

Next week the merchants of Fulton will enter into a contest whereby imagination plus friendly rivalry will produce some surprising results. When grown folks, like kiddies in school, work to outdo classmates for some special honor, good things result. When the merchants next week are competing, each in his own class of business, milliner with the milliners, butcher with butcher, clothier with clothiers, etc., there are bound to be some interesting developments.

Everywhere interest in the week's program is progressing. Some of the merchants have announced the substantial sum they will use in selecting their decorations for the window display contest. Others have made their plans for the advertising contest. This will be of unusual educational value to the entire community as well as to the merchants themselves, as no factor in the world today is of any greater potency than that of advertising. The judges in the window trimming contest, Secretary Hollenga announces, are Messrs. Murphy, Bogardus and Sullivan of the Chappel-Dyer, Witherill and Edwards stores, respectively. The judge of the advertising contest will be an out of town man. The judges will begin their work at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

Four oak shields will be given as the prizes. The first prize will bear a red ribbon; the second white, and the third blue. These will be used in the window trimming contest. The fourth shield will bear a purple ribbon and will go to the merchant publishing in a home paper the best type of advertisement. A unique feature of the prizes, Secretary Hollenga announces, is that they are "home made." The oaken foundation was the gift of Morin Bros., the arrangement by Hulett-Taft and the ribbons of O'Brien's.

On Thursday evening a dinner will be given at which the retail merchants will be present. The prizes will be announced at that time.

At 8 o'clock the Citizens band will give a concert on the Plaza for the enjoyment of those from the rural districts who respond to the invitation to be present.

This should prove a gala week for Greater Fulton and all should enter into the spirit of the occasion.

Carranza's Demand Is Ignored by Wilson; More Troops to be Sent

Washington—It is now scuttle or fight in Mexico.

The torch has at last been set to the tinder of "gringo" hatred among the Mexican civilian population, and a fight with heavy loss of life reported on both sides.

Eliseo Arredondo, Carranza's Ambassador-Designate here, presented three separate demands at the State Department today for the immediate withdrawal of the troops. "Insist" upon the withdrawal, his instructions read.

But from a source close to the President the statement comes that the American troops WILL NOT BE WITHDRAWN FROM MEXICO.

In the view of the military experts this means that more troops must go into Mexico. The long, thinned line of the expeditionary force, stretching out over desert and mountain for more than four hundred miles, could never stand the added strain of attack from Carranza troops.

And more troops means the National Guard. The entire strength of the mobile regular army in continental United States with the exception of 4,000 men is now concentrated on the border or is in Mexico. The border patrol cannot be weakened. The supply, therefore, must come from the National Guard.

Already itis being asked whether the administration has not waited too long, out of respect for General Carranza, in ordering the mobilization of the militia.

A telegram received at the State Department reported extreme unrest along the border, particularly at El Paso, where the large Mexican population has been greatly excited by General Carranza's action in demanding the withdrawal of the troops.

Yet that formal note, severe arraignment of the administration's Mexican policy as it was, did not mark the height of the storm. Within a few hours had come news of thefi ght at Parral. American troops sought to enter that town. For what reason is not known. The troops have orders to avoid the towns if possible, and it is felt certain that only some pressing necessity would have led to a departure from those orders.

A Mexican mob gathered. The fatal shot by a sniper was fired, an American soldier was killed and the fight was on.

General Carranza's second and third demands for a withdrawal of the troops were caused by the fight at Parral. These demands were more urgent in tone.

The first demand was set forth in a formal note practically charging the administration with bad faith in having contended that it had an agreement with General Carranza allowing American troops to enter Mexico. It showed, moreover, that this charge of bad faith had been brought before today and that the administration, despite its cheerful statements regarding General Carranza's cooperation. had known since March 19 that trouble was coming.

The crisis in the Mexican situation broke upon Washington with the suddenness of a lightning bolt. The publication of General Carranza's demand for the withdrawal of the troops was totally unexpected by the State Department.

American Case Made Strong By Germany's Note of Admission

Washington—From an official source close to the White House comes the intimation that the United States is about to "act" in the submarine issue with Germany.

Thel atest German note, dealing with the attack on the Sussex, in which Germany seeks to discredit all of the evidence collected by the Entente Powers and the American government in proof of the contention that the attack was made by a submarine, has not in any degree satisfied the government here. Washington officials believe the evidence is overwhelmingly against Germany.

The nature of the "action" which is forecast in high official circles is shrouded in mystery. It will, of course, include the sending of the newest form of diplomatic note—which is not being called a note but a "bill of particulars" but just what the nature of this communication to Germany will be it is difficult to say.

If Germany really thought she could confuse the issue, so far as the United States is concerned, by her explanation that the sketch made by the commander of her submarine did not conform to the published skecthes of the Sussex, and her statement of other facts surrounding the attack as reported by the commander, she has failed utterly. The distinct impression prevailed in official circles here today that Germany had strengthened the case of the United States. Study of the German note reveals a remarkable similarity between the circumstances surrounding the attack on the Sussex and on the steamship which the German submarine commander admitted torpedoing, but which he said was not the Sussex.

In connection with the German note the affidavits from Paris and London, expected to arrive today on board the St. Paul, will be carefully considered by the Cabinet. It is expected that the next note —or, rather, "information"—that will be sent to Berlin, reviewing the whole series of attacks against merchant ships carrying American passengers, will be made ready for cabling before the end of this week.

B. S. BRAUN, ASSISTANT EDITOR

THE BROADER POLICY

Time was when narrow-minded partisans considered it an unpardonable political sin to speak kindly or commendably of a political opponent. Happily such narrowness has become extinct among sensible men of every shade of opinion. It is no longer deemed obligatory to throw a brickbat every time men at variance politically chance to come publicly in contact with one another, hence we announce a change of policy without fear of incurring the penalty so often handed to men in former days.

The readers of this newspaper are fully cognizant of the fact that for many, many years the principles of the Republican party have been espoused without fear or favor in its columns. This was all very well in its day, but in the opinion of the present editor no greater service could be rendered the people of this community than a well-directed, persistent and determined effort at lopping off unnecessary affiliation. The lopping has been done, and beginning with the issue of yesterday The Evening Times ceased to exist as an organ of any political party—city, county, state or nation. It will strive to serve the people, and to work for the best interests of the taxpayers of this community, "first, last and all the time," and secondly, to extend its influence in the direction of securing good government elsewhere. The step is the result of plenty of reflection, and comes at a time when the people of this city should be able to recognize the value of having a paper unhampered by partisan politics, and at a time when, if never before in the history of Fulton, there appeared a need greater than at the present moment.

WHY SO MANY PENNILESS?

In New England efforts are being made to get people to thinking of the follies and foibles that enter so largely into human life, that darken with gloom so many households, and that cause poverty to be stalking through thel and. To help matters along—that is, to aid in stimulating the mind to more active thinking—Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard university, has prepared this table of certain expenditures of the nation:

|---|---|
| Intoxicating liquors | $2,200,000,000 |
| Tobacco | $1,200,000,000 |
| Jewelry and plate | 800,000,000 |
| Automobiles | 500,000,000 |
| Church work at home | 250,000,000 |
| Confectionery | 200,000,000 |
| Soft drinks | 120,000,000 |
| Tea and coffee | 100,000,000 |
| Millinery | 90,000,000 |
| Patent medicines | 80,000,000 |
| Chewing gum | 13,000,000 |
| Foreign missions | 12,000,000 |
| Total | $5,565,000,000 |

In the town of New Britain, Conn., there is an organization known as the Commonwealth Club. Its membership is composed of earnest, thoughtful, thrifty men of affairs. Believing in turning their attention to matters affecting the general welfare they engaged a gentleman by the name of J. S. Knox, a resident of Cleveland, Ohio, to speak to them on the subject of "Community Development." In his talk he said some things that caused his hearers to be startled. Among these was the statement that statistics show there are more than 90 percent of the people in this country who have one thing standing between them and pauperism and that one thing is the daily wage. In Switzerland 500 out of 1,000 people have money in the bank. In America ninety-nine out of 1,000 have money in the bank and most of these are foreigners.

What do we squander money on? The "movies" get 1 million dollars every day from the public. We spend 70 million dollars every year on tobacco. We smoke and chew much of the wealth of the country and it does nobody any good from an economic standpoint.

We squander 3 billion dollars a year on social views. We spend twice that o[illegible] Mr. Knox said he could give numerous other figures along the same lines showing that Americans are the most foolish splenders in the world. Educational deficiency, he said, is the cause of many business failures.

"Germany waked up twenty-five years ago," he said, "but America has not waked up yet. Ninty-seven per cent of the people here are dependent on friends, relatives or charity at the age of 65 years. Ninety-seven per cent of the men of this country die penniless and all because of inefficiency. The reason for the slowness of some young men is poisoned mentality from smoking cigarettes. Lots of young men are poisoned and are doomed to failure on this account."

He said 97 per cent of the American people fail and 3 per cent succeed. Speaking of economic conditions he said there is a big battle being waged between the retail dealers and the mail order houses, though few merchants know it.

Speaking of educational systems in America, he said we are twenty-five years behind the times. "I am in favor of paying salaries to school board members in the same manner that teachers are paid. Send them to Germany if you will, or to England, if you will, and have them devote three years in the study of industrial educational systems and inaugurate them here," he concluded.

Mr. Knox may have indulged in some extravagance in certain parts of his illuminating address, but not enough so to render the major part of his contentions questionable or unacceptable. It will be noticed that in his statistics he is, in some instances, at variance with those of Dr. Eliot, but that is not material—not even important. Exactness in these particulars is hardly to be expected. It isn't essential that such be the case. The main point to be held in view is the general extravagance and recklessness to which as a people we are justly chargeable. The thing for all thoughtful men and women to do is to study the facts and figures presented by Dr. Eliot and Mr. Knox, and to firmly determine to mend their ways in such manner as will enable them to say truthfully that their part at reforming has been attended to, voluntarily and cheerfully, without depending on being admonished so to do or being commanded by legislative edict to cut out what is deemed neither needful nor beneficial. As a people we ought to accustom ourselves more to practicing reform rather than importuning legislative bodies to prescribe what may or may not be done. It is all right to have laws that are intended to keep preverse, unruly and obstinate individuals within bounds, but when it comes to self-restraint and avoidance of pitfalls the man or woman of sound common sense ought not to be under the necessity of digging into musty statutes for guidance and direction.

A Peculiar Case Over Insurance

Justice Whitney, at a special term of supreme court in Schenectady, heard among other cases, an action by Mrs. Anga Hoff, widow of John Hoff, to recover $1,500 as beneficiary in an insurance policy carried by her husband in the insurance department of the Knights of Pythias.

About one year ago, it is alleged Mrs. Hoff left her husband going west and saying that she would never live with him again. A few months later he was taken very ill at his home and he wrote to her, asking that she return and care for him. This, it is claimed, she refused to do. Some time previous, Hoff had taken out an insurance policy with the Knights of Pythias, in Amsterdam, where he was a member of the order. This policy was in the sum of $2,000 his wife being named as beneficiary in the amount of $1,500 and his son, Edward, for the remaining $500.

Upon Mrs. Hoff's alleged refusal to return to his home, it is claimed Hoff wrote to the home office of the lodge, ordering that his mother, Mrs. Hary Hoff, should be named beneficiary in the sum of $1,000 and his son for the other $1,000, thus cutting his wife off. The letter was written, it is claimed, on October 18th, and Hoff died on October 24th before the change had been made.

It is the contention of the company that Mrs. Hoff is not entitled to the money inasmuch as the letter ordering the change was written before Hoff's death but she claims that because the policy had not been changed at the time of his death, the $1,500 for which she was the original beneficiary should be paid to her.—Herkimer Telegram.

SENATOR HARDING

The National Committee has performed a delicate task with discretion in selecting Senator Harding of Ohio to act as temporary chairman of the Chicago convention. The Senator is an able and successful leader, who has kept himself clear of the charge of sympathy with the reactionaries, and has not gone to the extremes of the Progressive wing. He is regular, and at the same time in sympathy with those who bolted four years ago. The delegates can go to the convention with confidence that he will not consent to the use of steam-roller methods in making arrangements for the permanent organization. That is the great essential. It must be an open convention. All contests must be settled on their merits and in such a way that it will be admitted that the final roll is as fairly representative of the wisdom of theg reat mass of Republican voters as it is possible to make it.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

A MESSAGE FROM THE TROPHY ROOM

"His eyes snapping and his jaw set hard, Colonel Roosevelt in crackling sentences stated his terms."

The news from Oyster Bay is highly reassuring. The picture of the ex-president stalking up and down in that famous trophy room and laying down the law to those who would make him Republican candidate for president is true to all the traditions of Rooseveltism. Seven years as a private citizen, including one popular rejection for the presidency, has neither punctured his egotism nor scratched the surface of his self-assumption.

So the good colonel states "his terms." He confides to a few friends—including all the important news associations — the conditions upon which he is willing to accept the presidential nomination of the Republicans at Chicago.

And the terms are simple. According to the Roosevelt view the Republicans have three possibilities before them. They may nominate him. They may nominate some one dictated by Roosevelt. Or they may ignore the Roosevelt ultimatum and nominate a candidate of their own, choosing; in which case Roosevelt will fight the nominee and re-enact so far as he is able, the drama of destruction in which he figured so brilliantly four years ago.

Thus the Roosevelt design for capturing the leadership of the party he did his utmost to destroy in 1912 proceeds with perfect logic. He proposes the issue on which the campaign is to be fought, eliminates from the race for the nomination every one suggested with the single exception of one who has said repeatedly he would not be a candidate and tops the performance by making it plain that unless the party takes him it will encounter his hostility.

If the Republicans accept Roosevelt as a candidate it will be because they fear him, not primarily because they respect and trust him. It will be a surrender on their part of the idea that, regardless of all other considerations, the thing to be done this year is to defeat the present administration.

Mr. Roosevelt offers to compromise nothing; the compromise and surrender must all be on the other side. Acceptance of Roosevelt will mean a temporary dictatorship for the party—an abandonment on its part of pride, principle and patriotism. And the worst of it is, from the standpoint of historic Republican unreserved acceptance of the Roosevelt ultimatum.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

OUR LOVE OF SHAM

Why American Novels Lack Lifelikeness and Grip.

SENTIMENT VERSUS REALITY.

One of Our Artists Thinks That Our Public Demands a False Optimism Instead of the Compelling Facts of Life That Give Power and Charm.

In a recent interview Ellen Glasgow, one of our popular American novelists, stated:

"I think that in America we demand from our writers, as we demand from our politicians and in general from those who theoretically are our men of light and leading, an evasive idealism instead of a straightforward facing of realities. In England the demand is for a direct and sincere interpretation of life, and that is what the novelists of England, especially the younger novelists, are making. But what the American public seems to desire is the cheapest sort of sham optimism. And apparently our writers—a great many of them—are ready and eager to meet this demand.

"I don't know which is the more tragic, the fact that a desire for this sort of literary pabulum exists or the fact that there are so many writers willing to satisfy that desire, but I do know that the widespread enthusiasm for this sort of writing is the reason for the inferiority of our novels to those of England, and, furthermore, I think that this evasive idealism, this preference for a pretty sham instead of the truth, is evident not only in literature, but in every phase of American life.

"Look at our politics! We tolerate corruption. Graft goes on undisturbed, except for some sporadic attacks of conscience on the part of various communities. The ugliness of sin is there, but we prefer not to look at it. Instead of facing the evil and attacking it manfully we go after any sort of false god that will distract our attention from our shame. Just as in literature we want the books which deal not with life as it is, but with life as it might be imagined to be lived, so in politics we want to face not hard and unpleasant facts, but agreeable illusions.

"Of course," said Miss Glasgow, "we must distinguish between a realist and a vulgarian, and I do not see how a writer who is absolutely without humor can justly be called a realist. Consider the great realists—Jane Austen, Henry Fielding, Anthony Trollope, George Meredith. They all had humor. What our novelists need chiefly are more humor and a more serious attitude toward life. If our novelists are titanic enough they will have a serious attitude toward life, and if they stand far enough off they will have humor.

"I hope," Miss Glasgow added, "that America will produce better literature after the war. I hope that a change for the better will be evident in all branches of literary endeavor."

Baking Hints.

When making angel cake be sure to beat the whites of the eggs stiff, until you can turn the dish upside down and the whites of the eggs will not move. You will find your cake almost always will come out right and will be much lighter.

In baking bread be sure when rising it forms a thin crust before putting into oven, and when taking out of oven listen and see that it does not "sing," because if it "sings" it is not done.

When baking lemon pies do not have your oven too hot, as the lemon will curdle and boil over your crust.

Rhubarb Cobbler.

Chop rhubarb pretty fine, put in a pudding dish and sprinkle sugar over it. Make a batter of one cupful of sour milk, two eggs, a piece of butter the size of an egg, one-half teaspoonful of soda and enough flour to make batter as thick as for cake. Spread it over the rhubarb and bake. Turn out on platter upside down so rhubarb will be on top. Serve with sugar and cream.

Linings.

When a cape is a part of a new frock it is usually lined with a contrasting color. Sometimes, too, overskirts and paniers are lined, and sometimes even the skirt, finished irregularly in scallops or points, is lined.

ORGANIZE.

Let the workers keep in their own hands and under their immediate control regulation of matters that vitally affect industrial welfare. Organizations of workers aware of their own interests and alert to further that which promotes their own welfare are more capable of steadily securing wider opportunities and better things than any outside agents to whom this responsibility can be delegated. The way to industrial betterment and progress and freedom lies in the well tried policy—educate, agitate, organize.

CONCERNING THE "ANTI."

A Pestiferous Unionist Who Is Constitutionally Opposed to Everything.

There are antis in every labor union. What is an anti? An anti is a man who is opposed to everything. Men may be found in all organizations—in fact, all walks of life—who imagine they are exceedingly smart. Their usual way of showing it is to "knock" the local officers, "knock" headquarters and the labor movement in general. If they are asked to propose a remedy for the things they complain about they have none to offer. If they are by chance elected to any position they are a flat failure. Nature did not intend them to be anything but an anti.

Then we have the man who knows it all and who refuses to do anything so long as the union refuses to do what he thinks they should do. Such men usually line up with the antis and between them clog the wheels of progress—to their delight.

A real man will never resort to any unbecoming tactics. If he has thought out some plan for improving the working of the union and the union cannot see it as he does he contents himself by saying, "They are mistaken and will see their mistake in time." Such a man as that usually succeeds in bringing the union around to his way of thinking in due time. To such men belongs the credit of making the labor movement what it is today. Antis never did anything, never will do anything but cause wiser and better men sorrow and pain. In doing so the anti fills his mission on earth.—Tailor.

RIGHT TO ORGANIZE.

Metalliferous Miners of Arizona Win Victory After Long Strike.

Metalliferous miners in the district surrounding Miami, Ariz., have been successful in their efforts to secure the right to organize after what is said to have been the most unique strike in the history of the American labor movement, says the Typographical Journal. The struggle lasted four and a half months, during which time there was no bloodshed or destruction of property, principally due to the fact that there were no gun men, thugs or strike breakers imported into the district. The governor of Arizona and the sheriff of Gila county were responsible for this condition of affairs, as they refused to be made catspaws by the mine owners in an effort to break the strike.

The principal contention involved in the strike was the right to organize. This was denied by the companies, which gave the men the opportunity of either renouncing their union affiliations or losing their jobs. In their unorganized and helpless state they had no redress against a system that comprised pitiably small wages and the "company store." Under the settlement the men have gained the right to organize and a substantial increase of wages. No little credit should be awarded Governor Hunt, who steadfastly held out against the demand of the mine owners that the state protect the strike breakers and thugs that they intended bringing into the state.

Will Oppose Injunctions.

The Detroit Federation of Labor has appointed a committee to initiate a referendum for the enactment of an amendment to the state constitution which will debar judges from issuing injunctions in labor disputes. The legislation proposed is similar to the Clayton amendment, which applies to federal judges and which was adopted by congress last year after nearly twenty-five years' agitation by the American Federation of Labor.

Unemployed Class Dwindles.

The Workingmen's club of Portland, Ore., maintained by private philanthropy for the unemployed, has closed its doors because the number of unemployed in Portland had become so small that the club's mission was considered to have been fulfilled. During its career of sixteen months the club furnished 400,000 meals at 5 cents each besides giving food to hundreds of men.

OF INTEREST TO LABOR.

Ironmolders of Fall River, Mass., have secured an increase in wages.

President Samuel Gompers, A. F. of L., recently addressed the students at Brown university.

Barbers of Altoona, Pa., have organized and affiliated with the Journeymen Barbers' International union.

A three years' contract has been signed by the Teamsters' union and the Team Owners' association.

Bakers in Sioux City have organized with a large charter roll as the result of trade union sentiment that is sweeping that section of Iowa.

THE SPIRIT OF ORGANIZATION

Permeates With Hope Workers In All Lines of Endeavor.

WAY TO BETTER THINGS.

Opens a Vista of New Opportunities to Those Who Toil, With the Ultimate Assurance of the Attainment of Rights and Justice—United Effort Has Been Proved Effective.

By SAMUEL GOMPERS.

It's in the air—a vibrant hope that sees leading into tomorrow a road to better things. It's a contagious something, an infectious spirit of courage and inspiration that extends from the toilers of packing house towns to those actors behind the footlights; from the teachers in the public schools to the yet unorganized workers in the steel plants; from employees and clerks in the federal government to miners delving far down in the depths of mines. To highly skilled and to unskilled, to those with high standards of living and those with low, to those of American customs and ideals, to those yet unfamiliar with the traditions and the language of our land, there comes the vision thrilling with new opportunities, with the assurance of the attainment of rights and justice.

This thing which brings hope to so many, which points out the road to better things, is that intangible, invincible, powerful, revolutionizing force called organization.

Organization is the way whereby the toilers of all ages have found redress from wrongs and have secured greater opportunities. Organization has been tested and found effective.

There is nothing about organization that belongs to a particular group of workers, to special kinds of work or to any particular degree of skill or kind of preparation for work.

Workers of all callings must learn that there are principles of human welfare which are of paramount importance. Conditions of daily work and living will not be in accord with these principles of human welfare unless those workers primarily concerned have some conception of their interests and are prepared for sustained efforts to realize their ideals.

Organization is only an intelligent attitude toward everyday problems—the fundamental things of life. It is a preparedness for the best development, to take advantage of opportunities that constantly arise, as well as preparedness against exploitation, a narrowing of life's horizon and a cramping of individuality.

The primary step is to secure leisure. This must be supplemented by increased wages that make leisure a real avenue to better living and self development and freedom necessary for self respect.

Those who work for wages (even wages termed salaries) have the same kind of problems to solve, the same kind of opposition to overcome. Economic organization is the only agency that offers any practical effectiveness. The problem of securing fairer, more just relations between employees and employers is the same regardless of the degree of skill or intellectual attainments necessary for that particular work. Effectiveness in bargaining, power to enforce demands, skill in organizing economic power are the means to secure just compensation and improved conditions under which work is done.

Many who hold themselves aloof from "contamination" with trade unions who hedge themselves about with "professional" pride, work longer hours and for less pay than do hodcarriers and common laborers. Teachers and government clerks need economic organization just as badly as do the most skilled and even the workers in the steel plants and packing houses.

There has been what appears to be a concerted effort by the enemies of the trade union movement to create the impression that the American Federation of Labor seeks to organize only the so called skilled workers. Quite the reverse is true. Those whose work requires a high degree of skill or special preparation are sure sooner or later to recognize the necessity and benefits of organization and to seek organization on their own initiative. But where less degree of skill is necessary for work and where standards and conditions are lower, then the A. F. of L. does its hardest work to arouse a desire for organization and to cause opportunities to inaugurate it. But when the workers once grasp the purpose and possibilities of organization there has entered into their mentality that which never leaves them and which changes their whole makeup.

The effectiveness of economic organization does not depend upon any strategic advantage derived from superior skill, but upon skill in organization and in presenting demands.

Because of skill in organization common laborers now receive higher wages than many government clerks, railroad engineers receive higher pay than many officials in petty banks.

There is coming for all workers a better life, a brighter day, through economic organization, for the maintenance of principles of human welfare—an organization which vivifies, democratizes and makes beautiful the world of work and life.

MEETS FORMER WIFE; WEDS.

Divorced Couple Suffer From Loneliness During Year's Separation.

St. Paul.—John A. Hubbard, sixty-three, has decided that lonesome is as lonesome does. His wife, Jennie, forty-three, has decided the same thing.

A divorce decree granted him at Eldora, Ia., last year after his wife had left him only added to his lonesomeness, said Mr. Hubbard. He came to Minneapolis, found his former wife living at 417 Tenth street south and found that she felt much as he did.

The two have been remarried by Court Commissioner W. E. Bates.

To Work In Jail Where He Served.

Winsted, Conn.—Frank C. Barnes, former tax collector of Plymouth, who recently completed in the county jail at Litchfield a sentence for embezzlement, is again in the jail, this time as an employee. Barnes was a model prisoner, and High Sheriff Frank Turkington has hired him to take charge of the prisoners sent out to work on jobs about Litchfield.

Aged Woman Gets Divorce.

Jackson, Tenn.—Mrs. Laura Payne, seventy-four years old, has been granted a divorce from W. W. Payne, eighty-two, on allegations of cruel and inhuman treatment. The couple had been married forty-two years, but have no children.

PLANT THE GARDEN

Some Seeds That You Should Use at Once.

SEVERAL FREE BLOOMERS.

In Planning Your Plot Always Bear In Mind Where Certain Plants Will Go and Their Relation to Other Flowers and Other Colors.

While seeds are germinating and plants are very small they must be handled with the utmost care and precaution, for, tiny and insignificant as the young seedling may appear, it is extremely sensitive to changes in temperature, too much or too little moisture, gas in the room, disease and all the things which sometimes even larger plants have not the strength to resist.

There are a few flowers that should be started in the seed pans. One is salvia, or scarlet sage. It is such a daring color that it must be planted with exceedingly good judgment—not prominently, for it will make itself seen in whatever distance or concealment it is placed, and not close to the porch of a red brick house, a mistake which is so frequently made, but it should be near blending or well contrasting colors. Salvia is one of the last flowers to bloom in the fall, but it is slow growing, and the seed must be started at once.

Verbenas are free blooming and generally satisfactory, but they must be chosen carefully with regard to colors. Avoid the scarlet and other shades of red and purple unless you know exactly where they are to be put and are sure that they will not clash with other things. The white is lovely in a small garden where there are already flowers of many colors.

It will please you later if you sow one pan of salpiglosis and any of the varieties with gold. The flowers are so beautifully veined they should be popular.

You should have snapdragon or antirrhinum in the soft rose shades or yellows. Snapdragon seedlings must be transplanted into another pan as soon as they can be handled and watered cautiously, as they have a fatal habit of "damping off"—that is, the stem rots close to the ground.

A few seeds of Cobaea scandens, the cup and saucer vine, may be started in a three or four inch pot and the strongest plant left to grow until it is time to plant out of doors.

"The purple perfume of petunias" may be remembered now in your plans—and the asters.

Nemesia and terenia are two dainty flowers not often seen in gardens, but delightful, as is also the little blue lobelia, the crystal palace compacta.

A GARDEN HINT

How to Make and Set Out Flower Cuttings For Spring.

Cuttings from many plants growing in the window garden will root readily at this season, and in conservatories and greenhouses cuttings should be made freely now.

Clean, sharp sand is the best for rooting cuttings generally, though geranium cuttings can be made and potted up in thumb pots. The cuttings should be made just below a bud, trimming off all the foliage except a leaf or two at the top of the cutting, and the top half of these leaves may be clipped off.

Be careful to have the sand firm about the base of the cutting, setting it half its length below the surface. Water thoroughly and shade from the sun, not allowing the soil to become dry.

Fairly Healthy.

"Now, the boy I want in this office must be honest, bright, clean and healthy. Have you perspicacity?"

"Oh, no, sir! I never had anything but whooping cough and the mumps."—Exchange.

Washington Teacher Aided Those Who Sought Education.

LIVED MODESTLY TO DO ACT

Used Income of High School Instructor in Moderate Manner, and With Money He Earned by Writing He Was Able to Educate Eighteen Students.

Everett, Wash.—F. D. Mack, teacher in the Central school, has spent about $40,000 in educating eighteen students, seventeen boys and one girl, during the last sixteen years, according to a story he reluctantly told a newspaper representative.

Living on his school salary in a modest way both in Minnesota, his former home, and in Washington, he has earned the money to send students through universities by writing short stories and magazine articles. He has paid out between $2,000 and $3,000 on each of his "children."

Some of the youngsters were orphans, and some had one parent, but all were eager to learn and were handicapped by lack of money.

The thirteen boys who are alive are all actively engaged in the professions in which Mr. Mack has educated them. Two are druggists, one being in St. Paul and the other in Los Angeles. Two are instructors in the University of Minnesota, where they were graduated. One teaches mathematics, and the other is an instructor in German.

This latter young man plans to be a physician and in 1914 married a girl who wished to go to Germany to get her master's degree, so he and his bride sailed for Germany to continue their studies, only to be turned back by the beginning of the war.

Mr. Mack sent him through Normal school, the University of Minnesota and Harvard, where he received his master's degree.

A young man who chose to be a broker received his education at the University of Illinois. He started out to be an architect, but changed his mind and took a commercial course. He was graduated four years ago and is now in Minneapolis engaged in the lumber brokerage business. He is the best money maker of the "family." In his four years out of college he has made $40,000.

A mining engineer who was educated at the University of Minnesota is now working in a mine at Butte, Mont. The banker received a thorough commercial education, and then Mr. Mack set him up in business in a bank in Elgin, N. D. Mr. Mack says that if any of his boys wants to start in business he always gives them enough money to begin. He recently bought an eighty acre farm for one of them.

A dentist lives in Chicago. He had four years at the University of Valparaiso. Mr. Mack says this boy married a rich nurse.

One boy who studied to be a lawyer lost his health after his graduation from the University of Minnesota law school, so could not practice, and is now employed as chief of the Minnesota state fish and game commission, with headquarters at St. Paul.

Self-educated and quiet, Mr. Mack would not be thought responsible for one of the most unusual philanthropies in the world.

NO PAINTER'S COLIC FOR HIM.

Bill For "Tint" Makes Bachelor Issue Leap Year Declaration.

Elwood, N. J.—Robert W. Hunt, a retired college instructor, received a letter recently from a neighboring town containing a bill for 40 cents for "tint" purchased by "Mrs. Hunt." Hunt is a good looking bachelor with a steady income, and the inquisitive element of Elwood at once interpreted the post-office bulletin in terms of leap year possibilities.

To quiet the buzzing gossip, Hunt has issued the following statement:

"We have had several offers of marriage, and one or two ladies have assumed we were engaged without making any offer, and it is with fear and trembling we pass each day of this year, which is divisible by four. However, when Mrs. Hunt does arrive she shall come as nature painted her, with eyes like the heavens, with cheeks like the rose and with lips like the damp of crushed strawberry. She shall have no need of 'tint.' When we want a kiss we don't propose to mess through two or three coats of paint to get it."

Dogs Tree Insane Man.

Oregon City, Ore.—Peter Brevio, aged forty-three, an Italian, was treed with the aid of bloodhounds arrested and brought back to Oregon City and committed to the State Hospital For the Insane. Brevio lived in a hollow tree, and his diet consisted of roots, berries and what food he could find around neighboring farmhouses. He stole an ax from a farmhouse and passed much of his time chopping down trees. A number of men of the district determined to arrest Brevio and went to his tree home. The Italian ran away. Dogs were then put on his trail.

SLAPPED HIM IN COURT.

Was Accused of Assaulting a Woman and Gets Thirty Days.

Canton, O.—A new cure for slapping faces has been demonstrated by Police Judge Quinn, who has become noted for the original sentences he hands down.

Thomas Nickols was before him on the charge of slapping the face of Mrs. Bessie Mare, proprietor of the boarding house where Nickols lives. Mrs. Mare was on the witness stand.

"Demonstrate to the court just how Nickols slapped you," she was ordered by the judge. She took the order literally, and going up to Nickols gave him a sounding whack across the face with her open hand.

"About that hard, judge," she said.

"About thirty days in the workhouse for you," the judge ordered, addressing Nickols, as be called the next case.

FED APRICOTS TO HOGS.

Fruit Market Was Glutted and In That Way Francis Used His.

Pomona, Cal.—Apricot ham is the latest novelty in this community. C. C. Francis, who has a ranch near here, is the producer. Last summer his apricot crop was going to waste because the market was glutted, so he fed the apricots to his hogs.

He butchered two shoats the other day. They each tipped the beam at 245 pounds. He got fifteen gallons of lard, seven pounds of sausage, four splendid hams, some spareribs, a quantity of side meat, eight pigs' feet and 100 pounds of soap out of the kill.

The hogs were carried through the summer and fall on waste fruit, and this winter they were finished on oranges and cornmeal slop. Mr. Francis declares that the high cost of living won't worry him for awhile at least.

A cleansing gargle for the throat when suffering from tonsilitis or an attack of quinsy can be prepared from bicarbonate of soda. Dissolve a heaping teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda in a coffee cupful of boiling water and add to this two drops of the essence of peppermint. Do not go out of doors after using a gargle, as there is danger of aggravating the condition in the throat.

Lawson Bill Would Tax Owner-Drivers of Cars

Motor vehicle owners in many communities of the state are stirring themselves over the latest piece of freak legislation, the Lawson Bill, introduced in Albany. The State Automobile Association and the New York State Motor Federation have taken the matter up with the clubs composing the organizations, and President McCully of the local club has in mind to call a meeting soon to see what course had best be pursued.

The Lawson bill provides for the appointment of a motor-vehicle commissioner by the secretary of state. This commissioner would appoint two deputies and fifty inspectors, whose duty it would be to superintend examinations and look after the general questions of licensing. The license plate would cost the same as now, but the Lawson bill would require each car driver to be licensed at an additional cost of $5.

An official of the Motor Federation says that the bill if it becomes a law, will keep tourists out of the state. He sums up the situation in the following fashion, and there will be much local interest in what he says

"Perhaps the worst feoture of the bill is the tax it would impose on tourists. We want tourists to come to New York. They spend money with our business men and increase the wealth of the state. This bill would require tourists from other states to take out special licenses at a cost to be fixed by the motor-vehicle commissioner, such licenses to be good for a period of four months only. This would arouse bitter feeling in other states and there would be retaliatory measures against New York. It is a most narrow policy to consider.

Narrowing Personal Liberty

"Requiring all persons who drive cars to be licensed would be narrowing personal liberty past fairness. This bill would give the commissioner full authority to make all rules for examination of applicants for licenses. It states that the applicant must be eighteen years or more of age, have good sight and hearing, be of good hobits and physically qualified.

"Anyone who wished to take out a license would have to notify the motor-vehicle commissioner, who would order an inspector to examine into the fitness of the applicant to operate a car. If the inspector did not get sore or hand out a personal grudge, he would, if he guessed the man or woman to be of good judgment and habits, recommend the granting of a license.

Calls for Photographs

"The applicant would be required further to send the commissioner two photographs of himself taken within thirty days of the filing of his application. To renew a license, one would be required under the Bill to return the plate and registration card of the previous year.

"There are more than 230,000 automobiles owned in this state and the money obtained from their licensing practically maintains the upkeep of our roads. Not more than twenty per cent. of the revenues should be used in operating the collecting bureau. If we have to have a whole lot of disagreeable red tape that consumes sixty or seventy per cent. of the revenues, what is the value of taxing motorists anything?

"I believe that any man values his life and machine enough to be as careful without such licensing as he would be under it. Accidents from carelessness do not come because of ignorance. Employed chauffeurs should pay a fee to the state and be duly examined, but owners of cars should not be obliged to pay for a worthless examination of their fitness to handle their own property.

Badge Would Be Required

"The Lawson Bill goes even further. It states that the operator of a car must wear a metal badge upon which is stamped 'Licensed Operator.' It would require this pledge to be worn in a conspicuous place.

"The Lawson Bill can't pass at this session. I do not believe that its promoters believe that it stands a chance. The trouble with many of the originators of these legislative measures that propose to regulate motor vehicles is that they do not consult with such men as Mr. McInerney, who has attended all the meetings of importance on this subject held in Albany and has a thorough understanding of the situation. Mr. McInerney, A. J. Batchelder, chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Automobile Association, and George C. Diehl, president of the Buffalo Automobile Club, could give invaluable suggestions if they were consulted.

"The federation will probably propose an amendment to the highway law to the Legislature next year. Mr. McInerney has talked the matter over with different motorists and has a good outline of the essential things needed for the welfare of motorists and the general public."

Make Secretaries Deputies

"Why not make the saloried secretaries of our automobile clubs in the various cities deputies of the secretary of state?" asked Mr. Donahue. "Our clubs in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica have paid secretaries and the Poughkeepsie club also has one. I am sure that all these clubs would galdly have their secretaries bonded to the extent required and do the work of collecting license fees and distributing license plates gratuitously.

"The secretary of state would save fifty per cent. of his cost of handling his department and the business would be done with greater dispatch and satisfaction to motorists. If these secretaries were qualified to act as agents. motorists would not be obliged to wait for license plates, but could drive their car into club headquarters and be fitted out in a few minutes.

"The automobile club is essentially the business agent for motorists and should be accorded the privilege of supplying the plates under proper state superyision. The task would be a large one for the clubs to assume but the reward would be commensurate. Each club would get in touch with the motorists of the vicinity and the secretaries would learn the conditions of roads, the need of new culverts, bridges, elimination of curves and the special requirements of each district of road."

FULTONIANS LAST NIGHT HEARD McCORMACK SING

Last night a number of local playgoers heard John McCormack sing. It was a rare treat. His group of Irish Folk song were especially pleasing and when he sang as encore Mother Machree he sang as if he meant it most. Other numbers in which he was heard to exceptional advantage were "The Bitterness of Love," "The Trumpeter," and "Somewhere a Voice is Calling."

Mr. McBeath, violinist, brought forth such marvelous tones of which only a true artist is capable. Mr. Schneider, the accompanist of the evening also earned his share of the honors.

It was an evening's pleasure long to be remembered by those fortunate enough to hear the silver voiced singer. Mr. Finnegan and Miss Carson, who will be heard in our city early next month, should be capable of furnishing an evening as satisfying.

Scott was the only Maccabee to score a victory in the match. He downed his opponent, L. Gardner, 50 to 27. Westover earned an easy victory over T. Boutin, 50 to 27; while Baehr gave W. Guppy a close run, losing out to his opponent 45 to 50.

The match was played on the Woodmen's tables, but the next one will be played on M. W. A. tables, next Thursday evening.

GOVERNMENT WILL GIVE MARKET NEWS SERVICE

Field men of the Office of Markets and Rural Organization have left Washington to inaugurate the department's market news service for perishable crops this year. Branch offices have been established in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, and Kansas City, to collect and distribute information in regard to marketing conditions. Other men are stationed in thep roducing sections in Florida, Louisiana, and Texas where onions, tomatoes, and strawberries are already being shipped in carload lots to the big markets.

By collecting in this way information concerning conditions in producing districts and marketing centers, the market news service is designed to aid both shippers of and dealers in perishable crops. The information collected is sent out free by telegraph to all those who are sufficiently interested to pay the telegraph charges and by mail to those who do not care to incur this expense but have a good reason for wishing the reports. Each of the field men in the marketing and producing centers acts as a distributor of this information, and in addition it is sent out direct from Weshington.

PUBLIC PARK FOR TOWN OF GRANBY

BILL IN STATE SENATE TO PENSION FARMERS

Albany—Pensions for all farmers over thirty years old would be provided by a bill introduced today by Senator Thomas B. Wilson, chairman of the State Committee on Agriculture.

The measure, which was inspired by Majority Leader Elon R. Brown, was intended as a burlesque on pension bills generally. It was advanced, without reference, for a place on the calendar.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Philip Barthofomae's farce comedy "Over Sight" has been converted into a five-reel motion picture by World Film Corporation under the direction of James Young and will be released on December 20th, 1915.

William A. Brady produced the play two or three years ago and it had a great vogue in the leading theatres of the country. The story is simple and leads to a number of highly amusing complications. Two newly married couples start on their honeymoons on a Hudson River steamer, in N. Y., and the four young people get separated. One husband gets left behind with a strange bride; the other bride goes forward with the second husband.

At a Catskill hotel the ill-assorted couples finally meet and re-arrange themselves.

The action of the play takes place, as the name implies, over night.

Vivian Martin is the more timid and shrinking of the young brides; and Sam Ardy who figured in the stage play's original cast, appears in the picture. Also, "The Fatal Introduction," in 3 parts. and Weekly No. 11.

FLYING AIDS SICK.

Titled Englishwoman Says It Cures Nervous People.

IS HER OWN MECHANICIAN.

One's Eyes Would Open to See Lady Auckland Modishly Dressed and Then in Overalls Repairing Flying Machine—Has Lost One Son in War.

Palm Beach, Fla.—If you are suffering from nerves, from ennui or from lack of adventure step into a hydroaeroplane, rise gently from the ground and soar into the azure, over land and sea, descending upon either as the impulse moves you.

Lady Auckland, whose rank may be obtained from any of the books dealing with the British peerage, recommends aviation as a sport and as a cure. During the last season she, with her son, conducted a school for aviation here, not merely lending her name to the enterprise as a passing fad, but going into it in the most practical manner. One rubbed one's eyes to see her at one moment, modishly dressed, on the promenade with other fashionable visitors and the next in workwoman's skirt and overalls making mechanical repairs on her flying machine.

The transition from London society to an American workshop and business enterprise is interesting. Lady Auckland told the story.

She is the daughter of Colonel George M. Hutton, C. B., a great landowner and a noted military man. Her mother was a granddaughter of Arkwright, the inventor, and on both sides of her family she is descended from distinguished forbears.

"My early youth was spent at the old abbey of Knauth, on the banks of the river Trent," she said. "It was a beautiful old black and white house of the Stuart period, built on the site of the Cistercian monastery razed by Henry VIII.

"I had a very unhappy childhood, as my mother never forgave me for being born a girl, not even up to the time of my marriage.

"I married when I was only nineteen years old, but my married life was not a happy one. I had luxuries and all the advantages that social position can give, but my home life was not happy.

My two boys were born nearly three years apart, and I became completely absorbed in them.

"I had a fearful shock in 1904 when I discovered that my husband had lost money on the Stock Exchange—all our moneys that were not in trust.

"Our beautiful home at Gravenhurst had to be sold and with it many of its world famed art treasures, including gifts from Marie Antoinette to the Lord Auckland of that time, who was ambassador to France.

"I found that unless I worked we could not keep our eldest son at Eton, and to take him from there at that time would have ruined his career.

"I went to work as designer to a large electrical firm and remained with it until I got a better position with a well known firm of metal workers in London. By this means I succeeded in keeping my oldest boy at Eton until he left in the ordinary course for the examinations for the army.

"Shortly after this time our dear old aunts died, and we were once again comfortably off and bought a heavenly place in the Isle of Wight. This house formerly belonged to Dickens, and here he wrote many of his works. The house was low, with a velvet lawn sloping to the edge of the steep cliff overlooking the channel. From this place we saw the Olympic pass and the ill fated Titanic on her fatal voyage. Here we lived some years until Lord Auckland again lost money.

"After years of sorrow there was a culmination. I was only second fiddle, so my son and I made up our minds to come to America, where he decided to take up aviation.

"My oldest son was killed at St. Eloi, near Ypres, on March 1, 1915, with two of his brother officers while leading their detachment to take some trenches. He was a lieutenant in the Sixtieth Royal rifles, having been appointed to that regiment by King George in 1913 after he had passed through the Military college at Sandhurst."

The Rose and Its Thorns.

This is the old legend of how the rose came by its thorns: One day in paradise Cupid was flying over a garden of roses. Blossoming there was a beautiful pink rose. Cupid bent to kiss it when a bee hidden in the flower stung him on the lip. Crying with pain, Cupid fled to Venus, his mother, demanding vengeance. Venus, to pacify him, gave him a bow strung with captive bees and set the stem of the rose with stings torn from the poor bees. These stings now are called thorns.

NAYLOR, MUNITIONS PROMOTER, A SUICIDE

Bridgeport, Conn.—Edward J. Nayare stationed in the producing sected suicide today in the attic of his home. Depression over heavy financial losses caused Naylor to end his life. He fired two bullets into his temple.

FLORIDA BIRDS MAKE NEW EDISON RECORDS

New York—Thomas A. Edison is having "the time of his life" in the wilds of Florida, according to reports reaching East Orange, N. J., yesterday.

The electrical "wizard" is making records of the songs of his favorite birds. This is accomplished by a silent recording phonograph he invented.

A Fine Judge of Eggs.

The ichneumon is an animal that every housewife should possess. There is no finer judge of eggs in existence. The ichneumon, in fact, makes a study of eggs all his life, and he is not particular whether they are hen's eggs or turtle's eggs so long as they are eggs. It is impossible to deceive the animal with regard to their freshness. If a dozen fresh and partly fresh eggs are mixed up together the wily little animal will pick out the fresh ones with a certainty and quickness that are positively amazing. At the zoo he is provided only with the genuine newly laid. He would have to be in a very bad way before touching an egg that was "shop laid."

The Artist and His Work.

The great artists, like the great heroes, have always done whatever came to hand.

Michelangelo grumbled and said he was a sculptor when Julius II. set him to paint, but he painted the roof of the Sistine chapel. Shakespeare chafed at the popularity of the fool in the drama of his time and then produced the fool in "Lear."

If either of them had waited for perfect conditions and an inspiration untrammeled by circumstances he would have done nothing. They produced masterpieces because they made the best of things as they were. And this is the business of the artist in life.—London Times.

OSWEGO WOULD HAVE EXPERIENCED MOTORMEN

C. Loomis Allen, receiver for the Empire United Railways, Inc., said yesterday that no conference had as yet been held with the men looking toward a discussion of an increase in wages.

Another feature of special interest in this connection was brought to light in Oswego. The Oswego Common Council recently enacted an ordinance requiring new motormen operating cars in that city to have instruction for fifteen days from motormen who are familiar with the line by operating cars thereon.

City Attorney Pidgeon of Oswego was asked to give his interpretation of the ordinance. He said that his understanding of the legislation was that in the event of a strike in which the local motormen joined, the cars on the Oswego line would have to be tied up until the strike was over.

In other words, any motorman, not instructed by an employe of the Oswego line for fifteen days, who attempted to operate a car in that city would be subject to arrest and prosecution under the ordinance.

NEW AUTO BUS READY FOR WORK

Wilson & Scott In Receipt of Large New 16-Passenger-Pay-as-You-Enter-Car

With the arrival yesterday of the new 16-passenger bus, recently bought by the Wilson & Scott Company, for use between Hannibal and Fulton, service will be resumed on Tuesday of next week. The same schedule will be followed as before the winter [illegible] closed the roads to traffic.

The new bus attracted a lo[illegible] attention yesterday at the com[illegible]'s station, Cayuga ond 2nd sts., and a number of persons had the opportunity of trying [illegible] machine out in several trial trips about the city. The car is a replica of the pay-as-you-enter trolley cars, the passengers depositing their fares in a glass receptacle at the driver's seat. There is only one entrance to the car—on the right side at the front. The car is driven from the left side. It is equipped with a thorough electric lighting system and is all enclosed. The seats are arranged at the sides.

It is believed by the firm that the one car will be inadequate to meet the demand as the line at the termination of its operation in the Fall was increasing in popularity rapidly.

Splendor of Venus.

Venus is the most brilliant of all the planets. When east of the sun she appears in the west after sunset, but when near the western elongation she gives only matinee performances before sunrise. Through the telescope she presents much the appearance of burnished silver without spot or blemish. So dazzling is she that astronomers have been able to discover little concerning our neighbor, except that she is surrounded by an atmosphere filled with clouds, making it doubtful whether any view of the solid body of the planet can ever be obtained. Even through that veil she is sometimes so bright as to cast a distinct shadow.—London Telegraph.

Patience.

"Patient man, isn't he?"

"Yes, indeed. Even when he is in the greatest hurry to dress he will patiently stop to disentangle his neckties from his wife's hair nets without complaining."—Detroit Free Press.

A DOUBLE MISTAKE

By ELINOR MARSH

"Ah, Mr. Edmonds! Happy to see you. But I confess that I am surprised."

"At what, may I ask?"

"Mother wrote me that you were very young looking for your age, but I did not expect to see a man who cannot have reached middle age."

"And I have been told that you, too, do not look your age."

"I? Why, how old do you think me?"

"A man has no right to think at all about a lady's age. I was given to understand that you do not look forty."

"Forty!"

"That's what I was told. To me you don't look over twenty. But perhaps there are two of you about twenty each."

"You speak in riddles."

"Did you never hear of the man who said that a woman of forty should be like a bank bill that may be changed for two twenties? Ha, ha!"

Mr. Edmonds was the only one of the two who laughed at his own joke. Miss Fielding looked at him, wondering if he were not a trifle daft. Her mother, who was a widow, had written her that she was engaged to be married to a Mr. Edmonds, who would call upon her; that he was of suitable age for the mother and she hoped Gwen would be pleased with him. Was her mother to marry a man who appeared to be fifteen or twenty years younger than herself, who cracked jokes about changing the woman he was to marry for two girls? What did it all mean?

As for Edmonds, his father had written him of his engagement and had asked him to call on his fiancee, who would be at home after a certain date. He supposed he was calling on his future stepmother, and Gwen supposed she was receiving her future stepfather.

"I must confess, Mr. Edmonds," said Gwen coldly, "that you are quite a different man from the one I expected to see."

"And I confess," was the smiling reply, "that I am very agreeably disappointed in you."

Gwen looked at him with a blank stare. "What kind of a person did you expect to meet?" she asked.

"A woman twice your age."

"And I expected to find in you a man from fifty to sixty."

"My father in that case would be from eighty to a hundred."

"I am not considering your father. I am speaking of a man of suitable age"—

"But would you consider a man three-quarters of a century old a suitable match for a girl"—

"Girl! Do you consider my mother a girl?"

It was now Mr. Edmonds' turn to be astonished. "I was given to understand that both your parents were dead," he said.

"My father is dead, but I assure you that if you are to talk as nonsensically to my mother as you have been talking to me you'll find her very much alive. I assure you she will not brook a proposal to change her for two young girls."

"All I have to say," rejoined Mr. Edmonds, with a puzzled look on his face, "is that, while I know nothing whatever of the prospective mother-in-law, the bride to be is very charming."

"What mother-in-law?"

"My father's. I fear that if she is disposed to be cranky there will be trouble in the family. My father is a well disposed man and I am sure will be able to get on with his bride, but as for a mother-in-law, if she is like the most of them it will be a monkey and a parrot business between them."

Miss Fielding stood looking at Mr. Edmonds with amazement and growing anger for a few moments, then swept out of the room, saying as she went that her mother must have gone stark, staring mad. Reaching the front door she went out, shutting it behind her not over carefully.

"I wonder what the governor means," said Mr. Edmonds to himself, "by tying himself up to a young thing like that and evidently with a fine temper. And won't she make it hot for me!"

He waited until Gwen had had time to get some distance from the house, then went into the hall, took his hat, crammed it down on his head, and went his way.

The next day Mrs. Fielding returned, learned that Mr. Edmonds had called and asked Gwen if she was pleased with him.

"Pleased with him!" said Gwen. "Mamma, have you gone mad to engage yourself to a young fellow who says he would like to change you for two girls, each twenty years old?"

"Gwen! What do you mean?"

"Why, mother; he's young enough to be your son."

"He is sixty-two."

Mother and daughter looked at each other without speaking.

"Are you sure that it was Mr. Edmonds who called?" asked the mother.

Gwen went to a dresser, took a card from it and handed it to her mother.

"Why, this is Harry's card."

"Harry?"

"Yes, stupid! Didn't you see the junior on it? Harry is Mr. Edmonds' only son. He is worth $250,000 in his own right and would make a good catch for you."

"Catch!" cried Gwen in dismay. "I expect he considers that he has caught a tartar."

HOW TO MAKE A BIRTHDAY CAKE THAT IS REAL CAKE.—Weigh seven large eggs (fresh), take their weight in dried flour and a little more than half their weight in sifted sugar. Break the eggs, separate the yolks from the whites. Beat the former in a bowl, add the sugar to them very gradually, together with a little grated lemon rind, a spoonful of orange flower or rosewater or any other suitable flavoring. Add the flour a little at a time and continue to beat the mixture for twenty minutes. Butter a mold, sprinkle powdered sugar upon the butter and shake off all that will not adhere. Tie a strip of buttered paper round the top of the mold to keep the preparation from rolling down the sides while it is baked. Pour in the cake, three parts; fill the mold with it. When done enough let it stand a few minutes, shake it well to loosen it, turn it out carefully, cut it in slices when cool one-quarter of an inch thick, spread some jam over these and place five or six or more slices together, one on top of the other. Whisk together the whites of two or more eggs, according to size of cake; add half a pound of finely sifted sugar (to the eggs), a dessertspoonful of orange flower water. Whisk the mixture until quite smooth and spread it over the cake with the back of a spoon. Mark the shape of the pieces into which it is afterward to be cut. Place the cake in a very cool oven to dry the icing. Time, half an hour to prepare. Two or three drops of coloring will give it a rose tint. Send to table with lighted candles.

FOR THE BRIDE'S CHEST.

How to Finish Your Bed Linen Attractively and Durably.

Scalloping as a finish for sheets and pillowcases is one of the nicest ways of finishing them. Of course the scallops need to be well padded, and this can be accomplished either by filling in between the marked lines of the scallops with rows of running stitches before applying the buttonholing.

The work can also be given more stability if after the scallops are completed and cut out an extra and tiny buttonhole edge is added to the extreme length of the scallops.

A baby's pillow cover can be simply made as follows: Sew together as for a pillow slip three-fourths of a yard of eighteen inch camisole embroidery of fine quality. Run blue or pink ribbon through small eyelets in scallops, thereby closing the cover. Run ribbon of suitable width through the larger eyelets, forming a bow of the ends on top.

CARE OF YOUR MACHINE.

How to Oil Your Sewing Machine and Save Nerves.

Sewing is not one-half as hard as some people find it if the sewing machine is kept in good order. When the machine works hard and heavy take the needle and shuttle out and give every joint and bearing a generous bath of gasoline.

Of course there should not be a lighted lamp or fire of any kind in the room, and the windows should be open. Turn the wheels briskly for a few moments, to enable the gasoline to penetrate to every part and to loosen and wash away all dirt and grit; then clean it all away.

When all the oil and grime have been removed oil with proper lubricating oil, running the machine for two or three minutes before inserting the needle. Now with a piece of chamois skin wipe away all superfluous oil.

How to Make Delicious Fruit Cocktails For Company Spreads.

A delicious first course for the spring luncheon or midday Sunday dinner is fruit cocktail, served ice cold in dainty glasses. Use the fruits of the season—oranges, bananas, apples, white grapes and perhaps a little chopped pineapple. Skin the grapes, pare the apples and cut the oranges in very thin slices through pulp and rind. Then chop all the fruit in small pieces and soak an hour in their own juice sweetened with sugar. Then stand on the ice until just before serving, when the fruit cocktail may be flavored with a little Rhine wine or claret.

How to Dry Your New Umbrella and So Make It Last.

When you come in from the rain put the umbrella in the rack with the handle downward, because when the handle is upward the water runs down inside to the place where the ribs are joined to the handle and cannot get out, but stays, rotting the cloth and rusting the metal until slowly dried away. The wire fastening the ribs soon rusts and breaks. If placed the other end up the water readily runs off and the umbrella dries almost immediately.

How to Test an Oven Before You Burn Your Cake.

Test your oven before putting in the cake by throwing on the bottom a spoonful of dry flour. If the flour takes fire or quickly turns dark brown color the oven's temperature is too high, and you should allow the oven to cool a little. If the flour remains white after it has been there a few moments the temperature is too low. If the oven is of the proper heat the flour will slightly brown and look a little scorched.

A Wild Goose Chase

By F. A. MITCHEL

This is a copy of the will of Edward Spangler, who died leaving a daughter who was engaged to Thomas Ormsby, a young man of whom the testator approved. Mr. Spangler was considered a very singular personage, and his will bears out the opinion.

"Believing that between husband and wife the one showing the greater thought, resource, ingenuity—indeed, those faculties which go to make up smartness—should rule, I bequeath my fortune either to my beloved daughter, Imogene Spangler, or to the man she shall marry, the inheritance to be decided in the following manner:

"My property, consisting of twenty bonds of $5,000 each, is buried in the state of Florida. They will be found either on the right bank of the St. Johns river, at its junction with the ocean, or at Glencove Springs, twenty miles northeast of St. Augustine. The finder of the bonds—either my daughter, Imogene Spangler, or her husband—shall be their possessor."

"Surely, Tom," said Imogene after reading the will, "father must have been delirious when he signed his will. You'd better go to Florida and visit the two places named in the will. Quite likely you'll find a pointer in the one where the bonds are buried."

"I think you had better go with me. We can make it a bridal trip."

"Very good. Name the day."

Imogene and Tom were duly married and preparations made for the wedding journey. The evening before their start Imogene went into her late father's library, where the old gentleman had kept many atlases—for he was much interested in geography—with a view to locating the points where they were to hunt for the bonds. Mr. Spangler had set great store by a revolving plaster globe four feet in diameter. Imogene found St. Augustine on this globe, but not Glencove Springs, so she got down an atlas containing a sufficiently detailed map and located the points exactly.

The couple left the next morning for the Flowery State, passing gradually from winter into summer. When they reached St. Augustine Tom proposed that they put up at a third rate hotel or a cheap boarding house. He did not approve of spending money freely until they had found the money to spend. But Imogene said that, being on her wedding journey, she proposed to live like a bride. Tom was overruled, and they went to the most expensive hotel.

After a few days' rest from their journey Tom proposed that they should proceed to look up their fortune. Imogene seemed to be in no hurry.

"I'm comfortable here," she said. "Suppose you go to both points."

"But in case I find the bonds I shall be the owner of them."

"Suppose you are? That won't make any difference to me. I think the husband should have the money anyway. Papa was like most men; he thought that power in the family is lodged in the one possessing the funds. He should have known that women don't work that way. Their power lies beyond dollars and cents. You go ahead and find the bonds."

Tom was puzzled. For him to go off to hunt for a fortune on such meager information as he possessed seemed ridiculous. He showed a disposition to give up the matter.

"Oh, go on!" said his wife. "You'll get mighty tired sitting around with me long before the honeymoon is over. Quite likely you'll find a clew. Father wasn't such a fool as to hide a fortune where no one could find it."

She kissed him and patted him on the back and sent him away. He went first to the Springs, where he spent a day looking for a sign. Finding none, he proceeded to Jacksonville and thence to the coast. But never a sign did he see. As for digging anywhere without a sign, he was not so stupid as that. So after three or four days' absence he returned to St. Augustine. He expected to find his wife disappointed at his failure, but she met him with a smile.

"You don't seem to be much depressed at the loss of a fortune," he remarked.

"Isn't it a wife's duty to cheer her husband in times of adversity?" she replied.

"I hope you'll be able to keep it up when the bills begin to come in."

"Brush your hair and get that disappointed look off your face. Things are not so bad as they appear. I have something to tell you. The night before we left for this place I went into father's library to look upon his globes and maps where these places you have been are. Something in the words Glencove Springs sounded suggestive. 'Springs, springs,' I kept saying. Why I did it I don't know, but I pressed my thumb on the globe at the point where Glencove is and broke through the surface. Taking a knife, I began to dig and found the bonds. Here they are."

Going to her trunk, she unlocked it and took out twenty 6 per cent gilt edge bonds.

Tom kissed her enthusiastically. Then suddenly the smile left his face, and he said:

"This makes you governor of the household."

"Not at all. I expect to defer to you in everything," was the comforting reply.

But she never assigned the bonds to him, and he learned in time that her father was not so crackbrained as was supposed.

Ultra Modish Dinner Gown.

China blue crepe Georgette is combined with chiffon and lace in the development of this gown, which is among the newest models for dinner wear.

For the nice occasions that demand something dressy without being too formal, this costume supplies every demand. It is fashioned from China blue crepe georgette, the underblouse of the bodice being in chiffon over lace-trimmed taffeta. In medium size the costume requires 6 yards 40-inch crepe Georgette, 1¼ yard 36-inch taffeta for the lining, 1½ yards chiffon for underblouse and 1½ yards lace. If contrasting material is used for the collar, cuffs and girdle, 1⅛ yards will be required.

Pictorial Review Waist No. 6626. Sizes, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Price, 15 cents. Skirt No. 6655. Sizes, 22 to 32 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

The lining is made after the fashion of all linings, by closing the shoulder and underarm seams and hemming the front. The lace may be omitted, if desired, but it is very effective under the chiffon. It is adjusted to the lining from crossline of small "o" perforations to lower edge as illustrated. Next, gather shoulder edge of front, then the lower edges back and front. Arrange trimming piece on right blouse front, notches even; close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Gather lower edge of blouse between double "TT" perforations, then gather the back along small "o" perforations. Bring small "o" perforation at lower edge of trimming piece to corresponding perforation in peplum and tack.

Arrange blouse on underbody center-fronts, center-backs and underarm seams even. Stitch lower edges together. Sew the square collar to front edge of trimming piece, notches and small "o" perforations even, and to neck edge of waist, center-backs even.

For the belt, turn the front section over on outside on small "o" perforations, gather ⅝ inch from fold and sew to back belt section drawing gathers to fit; large "O" perforation indicates upper edge. Leave the belt free to the left of center-back and finish for a closing. Adjust belt to position stitching upper edge of back belt section along upper row of gathers in back; leave the lower edge of belt free.

Finally, close the sleeve seam as notched; gather lower edges and close cuff seam as notched to extension. Lap extension matching small "o" perforations when closing. Sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve; and bring the seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even, easing in any fulness.

Silver lace makes an effective trimming for the blue crepe.

A RUN ON RAISINS.

RAISIN BISCUIT.—A cupful chopped raisins, two cupfuls flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls shortening, one-third cupful milk. Sift flour, salt and baking powder into bowl, add the shortening and rub in very lightly. Add enough cold milk to hold together. Add the raisins and mix. Place dough on floured board, roll or pat with hands until an inch thick, then cut with biscuit cutter and brush tops with cold milk. Bake in hot oven twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Raisin and Cornmeal.—A cupful raisins, a cupful yellow cornmeal, a cupful flour, a cupful milk, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, a teaspoonful butter, one-half teaspoonful salt, an egg. Sift the flour, cornmeal, salt and baking powder into bowl, add milk and well beaten egg and the well washed raisins, mix, pour into pan, which has been brushed with butter. Bake twenty minutes in hot oven.

Raisin Sauce.—Two cupfuls seeded raisins, one-half cupful sugar, one-half teaspoonful salt, a tablespoonful lemon juice, a teaspoonful grated lemon rind, a tablespoonful flour. Wash the raisins, put on with two cupfuls of water, boil slowly ten minutes, add salt, sugar and flour, which has been mixed smooth with a little cold water; boil three minutes, add lemon juice and rind. This makes a good breakfast fruit.

Raisin Layer Cake.—One-half cupful shortening, a cupful sugar, one-half cupful milk, two cupfuls flour, two level teaspoonfuls baking powder, two eggs. Cream sugar and shortening together until light, add the well beaten yolks of eggs; beat until light; add the milk very slowly, beating constantly. Sift flour and baking powder together and add half. Beat the whites of eggs until light, fold in lightly and add the rest of the flour. Line two jelly tins with paper, divide the mixture and spread evenly. Bake twenty to twenty-five minutes.

The Only Thing They Ever Did.

John Bright's powers of sarcasm were almost unrivaled. Some of his sharpest utterances were against members of the nobility. When boasts had been made of the antiquity of a prominent family, that their ancestors came over with the Conqueror, his prompt reply was, "I never heard that they did anything else."

FOR THE COOK.

How to Fry a Large Chicken the Easiest Possible Way.

Prepare in the usual way for frying: have fat one-eighth inch deep in pan smoking hot; place the chicken in the pan and cover; reduce gas flame until the chicken fries very slowly, turning each piece until rich brown. Pour one cupful of hot water into the pan and let the chicken continue to cook with cover on until all the water has cooked out. Lift the chicken on to a dish and make a brown gravy. This is intended for grown chicken, but not old fowl.

HOW TO MAKE AN EVERGREEN EDGING FOR THE GARDEN.— An evergreen edging is a lovely adjunct to the garden. Round wooden pins, eight inches long, driven into the soil within two inches of their tops and a running wire stapled into them will support a vine of myrtle or periwinkle or English ivy, Bignonia capreolata or cross vine. Or, if you wish, some of the evergreen roses—wichuriana, for instance—can be used for this purpose. They must, however, be severely cut back to the wire and closely tied in. If time and money are unimportant factors, boxwood is quite worth while. Another good plant for the border is perennial white candytuft of the dwarf type. It is neat, dense and a free bloomer. Violas or tufted pansies in one color make a very pretty edging.

How to Make Rugs From Selvages Otherwise Quite Useless.

Tailors first cut selvages from the material which they use to make men's suits. These selvages make much better rugs than ordinary carpet rags when woven in the usual manner. They come in long strips and require little work in preparation for the weaver. In place of sewing the rags in the usual way lay the end of the strip flat upon the end of another and sew together without doubling. Tailors usually throw these selvages away and would therefore give them away or sell them for a few cents. It is an easy matter to obtain all you wish. If you would like to make braided rugs of these selvages they must be used double. Wind the balls in one color, so that you can blend and stripe your rug conveniently.

TWO PRACTICAL PATRIOTS.

How a Brother and Sister In Oklahoma Provided a School Flag—Why the Ancient Romans Revered the Candle. A Winsome Lady at Play.

In Oklahoma a brother and sister of ten and thirteen years, respectively, got the idea from reading that the district country school ought to have a flag. A mention of the need seemed to call forth little enthusiasm, and so, keeping their purpose secret, they begged some red, white and blue material, cut and sewed diligently at spare times, formed a correctly proportioned banner a yard wide and four feet long and, working one night by moonlight until after 12 o'clock, without consent of the directors they cut, trimmed, dragged and planted upright a slender pole nearly thirty feet tall and from it unfurled the flag on a halyard line to the morning wind. The teacher and scholars gathered later and and sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and the flagmakers received a substantial remuneration as a surprise in turn from the whole community.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Birds In the United States.

There are 500,000,000 birds in the United States, according to an estimate made a little while ago by the government. This means that there are about five birds to every man, woman and child in this wide country. Bird lovers in every part of the United States assisted in taking this count. The census was taken by acres, and the most scientific methods were used. Those districts in which no count was possible were sized up by the results obtained from nearby places where the census had been thoroughly conducted. The final estimate is said to be reasonably near the actual figure.

Romans and the Candle.

According to Plutarch, the ancient Romans would not extinguish a candle, letting it burn out instead. The reason, he states, was that they considered fire an animal, for it needs nourishment, moves itself, grows with added food and when extinguished gives a gasp as if slain. The Romans were opposed to ending the life of so useful a creature. Probably they changed their minds quickly respecting this when a house got afire.

she carries in the pail is unknown, but it is safe to say that it is either sand or water. There are plenty of both at the noted southern winter resort. The little girl with the pail is Miss Virginia Thaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thaw 3d of Pittsburgh.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

EVERY one should have on hand directions for removing various stains which are apt to disturb one's peace of mind at some time or other.

A grease spot on silk is a common thing, and yet in many cases it could easily be removed by applying a paste made of equal parts of powdered French chalk and fuller's earth. Allow the mixture to remain on the spot for a few days, and then brush it off.

Iron rust, the bugbear of many housekeepers, can often be effaced by applying lemon juice and salt. Spread the stained article in the sun and keep the stained portion moist with lemon. Wash the article in the regular way when the stain has disappeared.

Milk applied to a fresh ink stain will prove successful in removing it, but the trouble is that the ink usually spills when there is no milk near at hand. In this event the unfortunate one must wait until it is convenient to purchase oxalic acid. Having procured it, the spot should be moistened with cold water before the acid is applied, drop by drop. Allow it to stand a few minutes, and then rinse the stained article in cold water, to which a little ammonia has been added. A medicine dropper is a splendid thing to use to apply the acid.

It is advisable for every woman who was unable to remove fruit stains that marred her linen in the summer to place the linen out in the frost now that real winter days are here.

Stubborn tea stains can be eradicated by spreading the stained portion over a bowl and pouring glycerin through the material. Afterward pour boiling water.

Boiling water poured from a height will also remove coffee stains.

FOR HOUSEKEEPERS.

How to Remember Certain Proportions In Cooking Common Things.

Four eggs to one quart of milk for custards.

One teaspoonful of vanilla to one quart of custard.

Two ounces of gelatin to one and three-quarters quarts of liquid.

Four heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch to one quart of milk.

One even tablespoonful of baking powder to one cupful of flour.

One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of sour milk. One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of molasses.

One teaspoonful of baking powder is equal to one-half teaspoonful of soda and one teaspoonful of cream of tartar.

In preparing for baking, mix dry materials in one bowl and liquids in another; combine them quickly and put at once into the oven.

The oven for baking bread should be hot enough to brown a teaspoonful of flour in five minutes. For biscuits it should brown in one minute.

Rubbing a pie crust with butter a few minutes before it is time to take it from the oven will make it crisp.

How to "Do" Your Hair For Evenings This Winter.

Coinards of tortoise shell or imitation amber, with touches of gold inlay on the ends, are intended to be thrust through the loose knot of hair.

Pins whose tops are on hinges so that they may be folded down flatly after they are thrust into the hair are set with rhinestones and with colored gems.

Tall Spanish combs of crystal set with brilliants that are beautiful in dark hair or the gray hair of the middle aged woman make stunning hair ornaments.

Gray pins of artistic shades and shapes are popular not only with white haired women, but also with girls who have blue eyes, since the use of gray pins or a gray comb in the hair will accentuate the blue and deepen it.

How to Let Down a Hem of a Cotton Gown.

Almost all cotton dresses shrink in washing and need letting down in the skirt. Before the dress goes to the tub take out the wide hem and turn it again at half the width. This brings the edge of the new hem to the crease in the bottom of the skirt, which gives a straight guide for basting. In almost every case the skirt comes out of the wash just the right length, with no streak of dirt to mark the old line.

How to Tell a Woman's Age Without Asking It.

The American Magazine gives the following rule for telling a woman's age:

"My son, wouldst thou know a woman's age? Watch her when she putteth on her hat, whether she rammeth it on carelessly or regardeth the mirror with overmuch care, for, behold, her eyes shall tell thee where her mind wandereth!"

GUESTROOM COMFORT.

Simple Things to Do to Make Guests Feel at Home.

A few dollars spent now and again in making our guestrooms comfortable are not spent amiss. Everybody knows how uncomfortable one can be in a badly furnished bedroom, and everybody knows how difficult it would be to complain to one's hostess that there were not bedclothes enough, that there was no soap, that the springs creaked, that the windows rattled or that anything else about the room one slept in as a guest was uncomfortable. It is up to the hostess herself to know that her guestrooms are comfortable.

At the country house of a fashionable hostess the guests were asked after a week end party to write criticisms of their rooms. The reading of the criticisms brought much entertainment to everybody concerned and suggested a custom that might bring advantages to guests, if not to hostesses. But so long as this custom is not in force, look to the comfort of the rooms you ask your guests to sleep in. The best way to do this is to sleep in each room, and then you will know whether or not it is really comfortable and if it is not what to do to make it so.

See to it that your beds are well supplied with covers. In each room have an extra supply of blankets in a box at the foot of the bed or on a closet shelf.

A cushion or two on the foot of the bed covered with washable covers that can be slipped under a hollow in a tired back or under an aching head should be in every guestroom.

Some sort of bedside light is a great convenience, so that the tired guest may go early to bed and read there or the wakeful one may have light in the night.

A box containing a few crackers is never amiss by the bedside. Many times wakefulness can be conquered with a slowly munched biscuit.

A hot water bag filled on a cold night when the guest retires also gives great comfort. There should always be cool drinking water at hand too. Writing materials should be offered either in the bedroom or in the library or living room. A screen to shield the bed from drafts is another thoughtful addition to the guestroom equipment.

Filial Repartee.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan, who was always distressed for money, was one day hacking his face with a dull razor when he turned to his eldest son and said:

"Tom, if you open any more oysters with my razor I'll cut you off with a shilling."

"Very well, father," said Tom, "but where will you get the shilling?"

"Peddler's Acre."

Lambeth "old" church has numerous historic monuments, and in one of the windows is the full length figure of a peddler with his pack, staff and dog. This is supposed to represent the unknown person who presented "Peddler's acre" to the parish upon condition that his portrait and that of his beloved canine companion should be preserved in the church and that his dog should be given a grave in consecrated ground.—London Saturday Review.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Smart Suit in Blue Serge.

Tailored costume in men's wear serge, one of the fashionable shades of blue being used. Inlaid collar and cuffs of faille are suggested for the trimming.

Blue is essentially a spring color and it is more fashionable than ever this year. This tailored costume is carried out in fine men's wear serge. Today's dressmaking lesson features the jacket, which is made with a yoke and trimmed with straps, which may be omitted, if desired. As the collar is convertible, the front of the coat may be buttoned high or rolled back to form revers. In medium size the dress requires 5¼ yards 54-inch material. If made separately, the coat calls for 2¾ yards of serge.

As this is a model that will be used for pongee, taffeta, faille and other fashionable fabrics this season, it is well to study well the method of cutting it. Notice how the back of the coat and back of the yoke are laid on the lengthwise fold. Opposite these sections, in the direction of the selvage edge, are placed the front, front of the yoke and lower sleeve sections. Continuing along the upper row are the pocket and cuffs laid on a lengthwise thread. In the center are pocket and skirt section, while on the bottom row are the under-facing and belt.

If the coat is desired without straps cut off the straps as indicated by small "o" perforations. If desired with strap in belt only cut off the lower rounded end of strap on small "o" perforations.

Trimmed with inlaid collar and cuffs of faille or white cloth this jacket is as smart a model as has been shown this season.

HIGHER VALUE GIVEN CLAIM

By J. H. Cook, Expert, Testifying in Battle Island Case —Phoenix Claims Allowed.

Syracuse—John H. Cook, one of the state's hydraulic experts, testified in Court of Claims yesterday as to the value of the Battle Island Paper company's water power site, appropriated by the state.

The expert placed a slightly higher valuation on the site than did Robert E. Horton, another consulting hydraulic engineer, who testified for the state Under the most favorable conditions, assuming that the claimants are right in their legal contentions, Mr. Cook said, the water power would be worth $156,686 in the market.

On the Other Hand, Nothing

Assuming that all the state's contentions are correct, the expert said, the power site would be forth nothing. Attorneys for the company postponed the cross-examination of this witness until tomorrow. Attorney Charles E Spencer, of counsel for the company, took up the cross-examination of Mr. Horton. He was on the stand when adjournment was taken yesterday afternoon.

Clinton D. Ash and Smith N. Murgittroyd of Phoenix, owness of a paper mill, were awarded $1,000 by Justice Webb in Court of Claims. The state appropriated a piece of land in front of the mill for barge canal purposes.

Justice Webb did not announce the award in the two claims of William A. and Carrie E. Quade for $5,500 and $1,200. The state appropriated forty-three acres of land on Ox creek belonging to the Quades when the dam was built at Phoenix.

Asked $10,000; Gets $350

Before Justice Cunningham the claim of Crawford Bouton of Hastings who asked $10,000 for injuries while working on the barge canal, was settled for $350.

Edward N. Weinheimer of this city settled a claim of $500 for $350 for damages in his Salina street furniture store because of an overflow from the Oswego canal and the bursting of water pipes.

The case of Ima Slive of Syracuse, who was injured during Karnival week of 1912 when the Salina street bridge over the Erie canal was lowered upon her right foot, was begun before Justice Cunningham. The girl asks $6,000. Smith, Hayden & Setright, appearing for the claimant, are attempting to prove that the bridge was unguarded.

George D. Adams of Granby, who claimed $304 damage because of overflow, settled this claim for $65 before Justice Cunningham. Mary A. Kelley of Granby settled her claim of $260 for overflow damage for $110. Charles H. Smith, also of Granby, settled an overflow claim of $620 for $75. Cora E. Newcomb of Clay, who had a claim of $1,070 for overflow damages, received nothing, as her claim was dismissed for failure to show cause of action.

CONSCRPTION URGED AT OTTAWA MEETING

Ottawa—in the belief that some form of conscription is necessary in Canada to provide more troops foor overseas service delegates from forty-two recruiting leagues throughout the Dominion met here today to formulate a compulsory service system for presentation to the remier, Sir Robert Borden, and his Cabinet tomorrow. It was shown at the meeting the ages of eighteen and thirty-five in Canada who could be compelled to enlist.

FRAUD INDICTMENTS AGAINST OFFICIALS

Washington—The government's investigation at New York of charges of collusion between deputy internal revenue collectors and tobacco manufacturers and dealers recently arrested in the alleged $20,000,000 internal revenue frauds, has reached a stage, officers have been informed, where indictments charging conspiracy may be asked in the case of several deputy collectors.

A STRIKE SETTLED WITHOUT VIOLENCE

The Toledo street car strike which has just been settled is characterized by the mayor of Toledo as "the most remarkable in the history of traction troubles in that there were no disturbances." The strike involved a thirteen days' tie-up of traffic and was brought to an end through a series of conferences between the men and their employers.

There has long been a theory that strikes could be settled in just this manner, and here at last the hope has been realized. All precedents favored obstinate determination on both sides, eventual recourse to violence and an appeal to the police and possibly the militia. Instead the two parties to the quarrel conferred, made mutual concessions and finally got close enough together to adjust their differences without assaulting anybody or dynamiting a car.

True, labor apparently gets the lion's share of the concessions and the public stands to lose, in the prospective abolition of the three-cent fares.

But the gain is in the settlement of a dangerous labor dispute without disorder and by the methods of concilation available in all industrial disagreements. We have had the "Iowa idea" and the "Wisconsin idea" in politics and the "Philadelphia plan" in railroad finance. Why not the Toledo plan in labor quarrels?—N. Y. World.

BOMBARDMENT OF VERDUN RESUMED

German Troops Deliver Series of Short, Sharp Blows at Many Points on French Line

Paris—The Germans are now bombarding the French lines at Verdun, apparently with a view to an early return to thep olicy of delivering a series of short, sharp blows at different points on the line.

The object of this method of warfare is considered by military authorities to be to disorganize the system of reserves by diversity in the points attacked and, by gradually wearing down the defenders, to prepare for an opportune moment for a general assault.

The Germans first put this method into practice after the great wing battle of March 6 to 9. Alternating attempts were made east and west of the Meuse throughout the month, and the French lines being considered sufficiently shaken to justify a general offensive with a good chance of success positions on the west bank at Avocourt and Cumieres were assailed in force during the night.

These positions, by an enfilading fire across the river, have made vain the attempts to carry the Pepper Hill and Vaux sector, which is the key to the position of the Verdun defences, and therefore it is expected that the Germans will attack thew est bank positions again as soon as a favorable opportunity presents itself.

It is believed the French command is not likely to modify its defensive methods. General Petain is said to be quite satisfied as long as the Germans go on losing three times as many as the French for unimportant results, as he knows that he has ample reserves to press a counter attack on a large scale when the opportune time comes, and stocks of ammunition which arep ractically inexhaustible.

Since the first month of the war the output of three inch shells in France is increased thirty-three and a half times, of larger shells forty-four times, Twenty-three times as many severty-five milimetre guns are being made as in August, 1914, and the manufacture of heavy guns has increased in the same ratio.

The German general attack on the left bank of the Meuse, which began on Sunday, is regarded as having been definitely beaten. When the ther emaining French projections along Forges Brook had been straighted out the German swere able to engage the principal line to the west of the river, from Avocourt to Hill No. 304 and Dead Man Hill to Cumieres. Only frontal attacks under difficult conditions werep ossible, except at Dead Man Hill, where the Germans were able to attack through the ravines. They tried to force a passage between Dead Man Hill and Cumieres and tow ork around the south of the hil lin order to envelop it. After two days of hard fighting this manoeuvre failed and with it is believed to have collapsed the main idea of that particular German attack. The small gain which the Germans made northeast of the hill is not regarded as of a nature to modify the situation.

The military observers say General Petain once more has succeeded, with a minimum of wastage, in beating off with heavy loss the adversary's attack, thereby increasing the morale of the army and enhancing his own reputation.

PASSOVER WILL BEGIN MONDAY

Observance Will Continue Eight Days By the Faithful Everywhere.

The Pesach, or Passover, one of the major holidays of the Jewish church, will begin Monday evening, April 17, and will continue eight days.

It is the first festival of emancipation in the history of civilization. Its commemoration is based on the Biblical narrative, which tells how the people of Israel enslaved in Egypt were led from bondage to freedom by the great leader Moses.

The Passover festival speaks for the sanctity of the home as well as for self-respect and liberty. The Jews accordingly assemble in their homes on this festival, and signalize it by a solemn service in which the story of the ancient struggle foor emancipation is recounted with pious fervor. This Seder, as it is called, is unique in spirit and form. It is earnest and yet happy, and its ritual, though archaic, symbolizes the facts of human experience in all conditions of life. The roasted bone reminiscent of the paschal lamb of the first Passover; the bitter herbs calling to mind the hard labor of the Israelitish slaves; the unleavened bread, known as the "bread of affliction," symbolizing the hasty departure from Egypt; the roasted egg, recalling the individual sacrifice which was offered in the temple; the mixture of grated apple, nuts and wine, suggesting the clay from which bricks were made by the enslaved people, and the parsley and salt water, symbolic of growth and the fertilizing freshness of spring, invest the domestic ceremony with a real and forceful meaning. A beautiful and most suggestive part of the service is the Open Door, through which the Messianic prophet Elijah enters every home that night, a splendid expression of the great ideal which thep rophets of Israel announced will become real some day when men will cease to hate and begin to do justice.

It is customary to remove all leaven out of the household in preparation for the feast. Leaven is the symbol of the sordid, and refers to those who are unemancipated from the commonplace things. During the feast, only matzoth and not bread, are eaten, This distinctive spirit of the feast finds expression even in the specific food.

The Haggadah, the order of the domestic service, read on the night when the family gathers about the common table, comprises the narrative of the exodus from Egypt, the account of the oppression, which the ancient Israelites endured, and is not without its covert allusions to the pathetic story of Israel in more recent times in the midst of the unkind nations. The Haggadah also includes a special group of psalms (CXIII-CXVIII) and a number of mediaeval poems.

The Passover is them ost ancient of the Jewish holidays, and, perhaps the most ancient of all holidays in the history of religion, and no holiday is so near to the truth of human life as it is.

The favorite book for reading during the Passover week is the "Song of Songs." It is the most classical song of love in canonized literature and is read on this festival because, according to the traditional view, it bespeaks the love between God and Israel.

BORDER TOWNS FEAR MEXICAN UPRISING

Los Angeles—The Los Angeles Tribune today prints a story, declaring it has information to the effect that the forces of General Carranza will make an attack on General ershing's American expedition next Sunday morning. The first step in the attack, the Tribune declares, will be to cut the line of communication between General Pershing's headquarters and the base at Columbus.

The Tribune says the story is based on information received in Los Angeles yesterday by an American who stands high in Carranza's secret service work.

4 UNDER ARREST IN BOMB PLOT

New York—Four more men were arrested yesterday in the German plot to manufacture and place bombs aboard steamships carrying sugar and other cargoes to allied ports. They fourth engineers of the North German Lloyd steamship Friedrich der Grosse, aboard which, it is said, some of the eight men now in custoay had a special workshop for making incendiary bomb casings.

For two hours James Coy, Patrick Walsh and other investigators of the loeal Bureau of the Department of Justice questioned men and officers of the Friedrich der Gosse, which has been lying at her pier since the European war started. A fifth man—Dr. W. T. Sheele—still was being sought late last night in connection with the wdie plot which has so many ends in this city.

It was reported late last night that twelve checks, signed by Captain von Papen and made payable to the order of Dr. Sheele, for a total amount of between $15,000 and $20,000 were deposited in a Hoboken bank.

The federal government took charge of the case after the evidence had been outlined to James C. Cropsey, District Attorney of Brooklyn. It was in that borough that the bomb is supposed to have been placed aboard the Kirkoswald. The infernal machine was found when the ship arrived in a French port. It had failed to explode.

The Germans arrested in the plot plainly showed fear of the United States government. It was through the diligent efforts of Captain Tunney and Lieutenants Bushy and Barnitz that the first four were arrested on Wednesday night, having been decoyed from their Hoboken haunts.

Federal Agents Seeking Dr. Sheele

Three of the men arrested yesterday wereb rought from Hoboken. It was fully two hours afterward that the fourth was captured. Dr. Sheele, who is alleged to have been the head and brains of the New Jersey Agricultural Chemical Company, Twelfth and Clinton streets, Hoboken, where the bomb casings, said to have been manufactured by Ernest Becker, an electrician, aboard the Friedrich der Grosse, were filled was believed to be in Hackensack, N. J., and federal agents were watching a house where he was supposed to be.

School children should be interested in this great Clean-up Movement and we sincerely hope that the teachers in the different schools will cooperate with us in requesting the children to assist in making FULTON the CLEANEST city in the STATE of NEW YORK.

When you get up in the morning, one of the first things you do is to WASH and CLEAN yourself. Why should then that back yard be forgotten? It takes only a few minutes to fix it every day and you will be an asset to the community instead of a liability.

Our clothes on the outside may be looking very clean and neat, but who knows what's under them? The front of a house may look all right, but how different that back yard sometimes looks.

Have you planted some seeds? Have you looked that little vacant lot up? Have you told your wife and children to get lots of flowers and plants for this summer? You know what it means to a city when flowers and plants can be seen from all sides?

Have you seen some of the eyesores in the city? Ashes, tin cans, garbage of all kinds can be found at certain places in the city of FULTON and we herewith announce that we don't think a great deal of the fellow who allows such conditions to exist.

* * *

Don't forget that whenever you do something good for FULTON you are doing something good for yourself and for all others.

* * *

Please remember, that there are more people living in FULTON than you; that these people have a right to live and to express their thoughts as they see fit along certain lines. And also remember that you cannot force an individual to BELIEVE in everything you may say. Some people seem to think that certain things that may be good for them, should for that reason only, be good for everybody. And how mistaken they often are?

* * *

The hall of happiness and contentment; the hall of education; the hall of all the good things in FULTON, will be the QUIRK THEATRE on May 2nd, 1916, when the SECOND CONCERT of the FULTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will be given.

Have you ever given thought to that famous saying: "AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?" You always will be your Brother's keeper, if you back up all CIVIC UNDERTAKINGS like the second concert of the FULTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

No Cessation in Villa Pursuit as Carranza's Demand is Debated

Washington—After one of the most important Cabinet meetings of the Wilson administration it was announced at the State Department that the administration is prepared to "treat" with General Carranza upon the subject of the withdrawals of the American troops from Mexico.

At the same time, however, it was stated authoritatively at the War Department that no orders had been issued in anyway changing the statue of the expeditionary force that is seeking Villa, and that for the present none was contemplated.

Keen anxiety is felt here over the fate of the American troopers engaged at Parral. No word has reached Washington through official army channels regarding the outcome of the fight. Nothing whatever has been heard of the fate of the gallant cavalrymen who withstood the attack from the garrison and civilian population of Parral. Yet the fight occurred two days ago.

The Carranzista reports of the engagement have stated that the losses were heavy "on both sides." It is still feared that this Mexican crisis may hold for the American people a shocking calamity.

The Americans were vastly outnumbered. They are far from a base, travelling with light equipment, probably with a comparatively small quantity of ammunition and in ad istrict where a particularly bitter anti-American sentiment prevails.

Major General Funston telegraphed Mr. Baker, Secretary of War, that he was doing everything possible to obtain direct information of the outcome of the fight at Parral.

The American troops will for the present remain in Mexico and carry out their orders to seek for Villa, and meanwhile an effort will be made by the State Department to draw General Carranza into a discussion as to terms for their withdrawal

Any other steps taken will depend upon future developments in Mexico. If the flames of hatred spread from Parral or if General Carranza refuses to be drawn into a ducission the withdrawal of the troops is likely to be "sooner" or intervention on a general scale will be necessary.

U. S. TROOPS IDLE AS RIOTERS DESTROYED FINE BUILDINGS

El Paso—Following the fight between the gallant little cavalry column under Major Frank Tompkins and the enraged people of the city of Parral Wednesday afternoon, in which more than a hundred Mexicans are known to have been killed and scores wounded, the populace rose in its wrath and the fiercest anti-American demonstration in the history of Northern Mexico took place.

Property worth millions of dollars is known to have been destroyed. At last accounts the people had got beyond all control of the military and were wreaking their vengeance for the death of their countrymen where they could.

The great plant of the Alvarado Mining and Milling company, which was erected at a cost of two million dollars, has been wrecked. Mobs were clamoring for the destruction of all the properties of the American Smelting and Refining Company in and near the city, El Refugio Mining Company and the mines of the San Francisco Del Oro Company, a British concern.

Representatives of foreign owned properties in and contiguous to Parral gave up all hope tonight that their plants might be spared when A. J. McQuatters, of Boston, president and general manager of the Alvarado company and sole owner of El Refugio company, received a telegram from Parral, sent at noon today. It gave startling details of the work of the mobs.

This telegram is the very latest word received by an American from Parral, although at Juarez the Mexican officials have been receiving code messages all day which even their own operators cannot understand and the contents of which they refuse to divulge. From the telegram to Mr. McQuatters much has been cut, but the main news his representative at Parral was trying to convey was allowed to pass. In its deleted form the telegram is as follows:

"In retaliation of recent troubles armed men yesterday (Thursday) at noon assaulted the mill, breaking in doors and windows of residences, offices, warehouses and mill, robbing and destroying practically everything. They repeated the assault at midnight, again robbing and destroying, andwi ll probably repeat the incident. Military authorities know everything connected with the same."

Holland Stands Ready At All Cost to Fight Against An Invasion

The Hague—Holland, believing there will be a sensational development of the war, which I understand, was her intelligent and prudent anticipation of the big pust forward, in fact the approach of the turning point in the great struggle, two weeks ago suspended all army furloughs, and her sword will be drawn against any or all invaders, as the Dutch government, backed by the whole people, is determined that Holland's neutrality will be absolute, which is the only attitude, in the language of Dr. J. Loudon, Minister of Foreign Affairs, that can be taken by any nation proud of and ready to prove itself worthy of independence.

Dr. Loudon, who absorbed American ideas during five years of service in the Netherlands Legation at Washington, would not say more than that Holland, with malice toward none and friendship for all the belligerents and neutrals, stands ever ready to offer up her last man and her last dollar to maintain her integrity as a truly independent State.

To appreciate the patriotism of this attitude of the business men of Holland, one should understand that for nearly two years the industry of the country has been disrupted, the whole of the young manhood is with the colors and the prices of foodstuffs and all necessaries of life are constantly rising.

Observations in Rotterdam, The Hague, Delft, Flushing and other cities have led to the belief that seventy-five per cent of the people of Holland are pro-Ally; that outside of Rotterdam, which is suffering heavily as a result of the British blockade, with her large trade with Germany cut off, with 100,000 unemployed in her streets and the great Holland-America line of steamships Rotterdam and Nieuw Amsterdam soon to be lying idle there through fear of their destruction in the mine sowed seas, pro-German sentiment is negligible. It is the increasing severity of the blockade which is responsible for the slight growth of anti-British feeling in Rotterdam.

To sum up, of all the Allies France has completely won the heart of Holland, which beats in sympathy with General Joffre's gallant army. I have met all kinds of antis here, German, Russian, and British, but everybody, including even the army of spies with which this kingdom is surrounded and infested, is pro-French.

Premier's Speech Indicates Offer of a Way to Peace

London—Two weekly newspapers, the Economist and the Nation, both of which have shown a tendency favorable to a compromise of the war, believe that the recent speech of the Premier, Mr. Asquith, smooths a way toward peace.

The Economist says: "If all the reasonable hopes of new territory entertained by all the belligerents could be realized few persons will be bold enough to say that the realization of these hopes would compensate for the agony and misery, present and to come, of six months' prolongation of the war. Nor must it be forgotten that every month that passes increases the risk of public insolvency on the Continent, which would assuredly plunge thousands of firms into

FOR FULTONIANS

Sometimes in our city expressions are heard derogatory to certain of the simpler steps in community building. Some persons would question the worth as a community builder of the formation of a symphony orchestra, of clean-up campaigns, of anything in fact that does not indicate a vigorous lambasting of the "sure-nuff" dollar into the community's till.

There is so much back of such an attitude that needs correcting. Community building, the cultivation of a civic spirit, would in an individual correspond to character training. Count the seemingly unimportant tasks, separately viewed, that go in the training to make a strong character. We cannot lay important stress upon any one particular stone in the completed structure, neither upon the mortar holding the stones together, yet each if good, having its part in the perfected whole.

Then upon the same principle whenever a body of people learn, even in the simplest measures, to work together, sharing equally in their trials and pleasures, out of this grows a spirit of unity strong enough to build whatsoever it chooses.

Nowadays the word cooperative is much used. Its real meaning is not always understood. A recent writer has interpreted cooperation in this way:

"Cooperation means more than working together to one end; it implies clear sighted vision of complete and perfect expression of thought, whether it result in the rythm and harmony of a symphony, in the form and color of a beautiful painting, or in the fitness and dignity of noble architecture. More than this, one must have an understanding of perfected details, a comprehension of their relations to one another, and this should be governed by a spirit of active and timely interest in the fulfilment of the idea."

This should be the kind of cooperation Fultonians aim for. An opportunity to work together with the right purpose in mind may prove to our triumph the greatest stone in our structure of community building.

SPRING IS HERE

(Contributed)

Among many other things, spring brings housecleaning, street cleaning and general cleaning. Annual campaigns for cleaning up have been very beneficial in the past and are expected to be this year. The signal has already been given, the ranks are being filled, and the date of the charge has been set. There are, however, deserters, shirkers and backsliders. It is for the good of the individual even more than the city to clean up, paint up and repair; yet there are some who either refuse to do this or postpone it.

This year the ranks of these are in danger of becoming very full—too full for the good of themselves and the city. There is much talk, "crabbing" and discontent afloat. There must be a reason. In answer to inquiries, these shirkers, these "crabbers," say something like this: "We clean up, paint up and repair? Nix on it, I don't fall for such stuff. Every coat of paint adds $100 to our assessment; every pile of ashes removed adds $50; every item of repair adds from two to ten times its cost; every tin can removed adds $1.00 to our assessment. I'm going to wait 'till after the assessors make their rounds." This answer, repeated so often in so many places, reveals a sad state of affairs. The oft-heard statement that a moderately salaried man can not afford to own a home is made truer and more reasonable by this condition. Furthermore, it reveals some trouble in our assessment system.

Many other complaints are heard such as these: "My assessment was raised $350 last year and there were no improvements." Mr. So and So sold a house to Mr. So and So and he in turn sold it to another. Both the first two were assessed for the property but not the present owner, and others to the same effect. Now our assessors are far from infallible. Of course, since they are human and they are not paid enough to do a finished, detailed job, and they hold office so shortly, and change so often, that there is no uniformity, no consistency. One assessor might keep a place low for his tenure of office and the next set of assessors would consider it necessary to raise the assessment, where it should be in proportion to the others of its class. Hence arise the complaints and they are partially just.

Many remedies are of course offered, the most practical one, however, is this:

Let there be a chief assessor, a capable and experienced man, and one who knows real estate values and judgment; let him be given a respectable salary, large enough so that he can afford to do complete and detailed work. In order to conform to the requirement and to help thec hief assessor, let him have two assessars as assistants. Let the chief assessoor hold office permanently, and the other two as they are now. Oswego has such a chief assessor and other cities have some such system. It would remove many causes for grievances; would make the assessments and taxes uniform and consistent; and would be of untold benefit to the city as well as the individual citizen.

IRISH STEW

Philadelphia is to have a large part in the order of the British government for 600,000,000 one-pound tins of Irish stew for the men at the front, calling for prodigious quantities of beef, rice, onions, carrots and beans. Though dietetic experts habitually dis agree, and one man's meat is another's anathema, Tommy in the field is likely to agree with some laboratorians at home that this is a good fighting diet, calculated to hold the scurvy at arm's length and easy to prepare under the arduous conditions of field service, where the resources of genteel cookery are not at hand. The Japanese waged war against the Russians upon rice, but Tommy requires something more sub stantial. This Irish stew concocted for his behoof appears to be enriched by several ingredients that do not belong to the usual definition. One of the dictionaries says it is "a palatable dish of mutton, onions and potatoes, seasoned and stewed in water mixed with flour." Probably in this country beef is much commoner than mutton and it is a theme for a sophomore debate or a commencement essay whether it is fair to admit carrots and still call it an orthodox receipe. In any event this lowly dish, first aid to the landlady and not despised by the connoisseur when properly prepared, will be appreciated in the trenches and on shipboard if our culinary artists made it as appetizing as they can. There will be no repetition of the "embalmed beef" scandal. —Philadelphia Ledger.

USING SENOR VILLA TO POINT A MORAL

Up to date Villa has been thrown by his horse and his leg crushed; has been shot through the knee; has been shot through the hip; has been shot through both legs and in the stomach; has been carried into the mountains in a carriage; has been carried into another range in a litter; has ridden far into Durango on a huge black steed stolen from an Englishman he murdered; has held up a railroad train in Chilhuahua and talked with a trusty Mexican merchant; has been killed in battle; has gone mad and died of gangrene; has died of later wounds and been buried in Guerrero; has been defeated four times by herioc Carranza soldiers; has been trapped and captured; has threatened Chilhuahua City; has been in the neighborhood of Torreon, and is still on his way somewhere, and presumably going some.

From the remarkable concert and reliability of the "war dispatches" coming from a scene of operations no farther from the American border than Boston is from New York, people who have any sense of humor and proportion can judge of the value of most of the "war news" which comes from the distant and vast war fronts in France, Russia, Italy, Turkey, Persia, Greece and Serbia.

Don't run away with the notion that newspapers manufacture this sort of war news. If you knew anything about making a newspaper, that notion would make you grin.

The newspapers print the dispatches which dull and arbitrary censors permit to pass. If the newspapers were ollawed to use their own correspondents, under proper restrictions as to revealing facts of military value, you would have been kept very accurately informed as to the real conditions in Europe. —N. Y. American.

The Sultan of Egypt, according to an interview in a French paper, is an up-to-date feminist. He thinks that the woman question outranks any other and that the East will never be happy till Mohammedanism releases its strangle hold on women. He already counts it as one of the greatest results of the war.

Yucatan may prove to Mexico to be the radiating point for woman suffrage just as Wyoming has been in America. Just the other day Yucatan had the first woman's rights convention, now the military government of Sonora, the province adjoining, has come out for votes for women. Surely Mexico is one country where woman suffrage couldn't make things worse.

That the war might leave Europe too exhausted emotionally to write poetry, John Masterfield admitted in an interview on the eve of his return to England after a two month's lecture tour in this country, but he added that he believed that English women would in all justice be given the vote and have a hand in the reconstruction which must follow.

This week in New York was celebrated the 50th anniversary of the graduation of Dr. Anna Comfort at the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women. Dr. Comfort is the only surviving member of the first class which graduated from this woman's college and was at the time the youngest medical graduate in the world. She was also the first woman to practice medicine in the State of Connecticut and, like practically all women who blazed the trail for women in the professions, she has always been an ardent suffragist.

Kalem Masterpiece At The Quirk

The great Kalem Biblical masterpiece. "From the Manger to the Cross," at Quirk Theatre Tuesday, April 18th, seven complete presentations starting at 2, 3:15, 4:30, 5:45, 7, 8:15 and 9:30 p. m.

This great film story of the life of Jesus of Nazareth contains about eighty thousand photographs, requiring eight months of artistic industry, the employment of specialists is authoritative research, forty actors, hundreds of supernumeries, droves of sheep and a caravan of camels.

The entire company was taken to Palestine and Egypt, and the location of the scenes was the same as that in which the incidents portrayed actually took place.

The furniture used in the various scenes was especially made to resemble, as far as possible, that used at the start of the Christian era, while the apparel of the various actors was designed by and made under the direction of a tailor of Cario, who is considered the greatest expert on ancient Eastern dress.

The setting of the Temple scenes was built according to the details given in Dr. Schlick's famous works, and it is typical of the thoroughness with which this film was taken, that a building, which had taken a month to erect, wa spulled down after a scene lasting ten minutes has been pictured therein.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

When one is considering the subject of thrift, he must realize that he cannot have every little thing he wants and still have money for something big. He must consider the relative value of the things he desires and know that in order to have one thing worth while he must do without others not worth while. He must sacrifice little things for the big.

Each day now we are confronted with new problems which if they do not teach us economy and thrift, at least will open up new avenues for study on how to make the best of our own resources. It is true that there is not as much encouragement in this country for scientists to devote their lives to solving the problems of food values, chemicals and the utilization of all waste, as in the older countries where the man of science is the protege of the government, and its pensioner when his work-days are over, but through colleges, schools and the great medium of the press, national interest has been awakened, thriftless people and thriftless communities are being aroused and good results are sure to follow.

The time is coming when shoes may be considered among the luxuries. Leather not only is scarcer, but there is a greater demand for it now, and the cost of tanning has increased during the war. The supply of leather depends on the supply of hides and the number of cattle have decreased twenty per cent in the last ten years, while the population has increased correspondingly. Millions of pairs of shoes have been and are being made for the European armies as well as knapsacks, saddles, harness, etc. These are the reasons shoes have increased in price twenty per cent and why, it is said, the increase will be greater by next fall. We have the remedy right here in the raising of more cattle for their hides, as well as for consumption. Some rural clubs have been foresighted enough to help meet this demand, through their stock raising campaigns in which they urge every farmer to give his boy or girl a calf or a pig to raise for market. This movement is spreading so that we need fear no shortage in leather should the war continue for several years. And the young people of the rural communities are in this way learning how to be thrifty.

Uncle Sam now asks us to be saving with paper and cardboard. In fact federal buildings throughout the United States have posted notices, received recently from the Secretary of the Department of Commerce at Washington, to this effect. There are fifteen thousand tons of paper and cardboard made every day in this country, which when it has served a purpose, is burned or thrown in the ash heap. Now the Department of Commerce asks the people to save all waste paper and cardboard for there is a scarcity of materials from which to make paper.

Here are two fine avenues for thrift among the young, the raising of stock and the collecting of paper, which will not only bring material results, but will relieve two great industries of a threatened shortage.

AN ATTACK ON HUMAN WELFARE

Attempt of a Congressman to Lengthen Day of Toil.

SPIRIT OF RETROGRESSION.

Increasing the Hours of Labor Would Result in Decreased Efficiency and Consequent Economic Loss—Congress Has Too Long Neglected the Interest of Government Employees.

After a brief and ill advised existence the Borland amendment has been fittingly interred. At the last minute, when the legislative and judicial appropriations bill for 1917 was under consideration by the house committee on appropriations, Congressman William P. Borland of Missouri offered an amendment the purpose of which was to increase the minimum number of hours of work of government employees in the District of Columbia from seven to eight hours.

Mr. Borland offered the amendment purely upon his own responsibility and avowed that his purpose was in the interest of economy and efficiency. But the congressman who proposes to promote either economy or efficiency by increasing the hours for clerical work is in complete variance with the results of experience in all lines of work. Concentration of thought, sustained effort, accuracy and all the other qualities that are necessary for clerical work are secured in the best degree when the hours of work are short. These qualities require tension of nervous and physical energy. Fatigue resulting in decreasing efficiency invariably accompanies lengthening of hours of work.

A greater quantity and better quality of work can be accomplished by brain workers in short hours that permit ample time for recuperation, rest, recreation, leisure and other diversions. In proposing to lengthen the hours of work for government employees Mr. Borland represented a spirit of retrogression, the spirit of the old task driving employer who is willing to grind his employees lest any particle of energy should not be exhausted in the day's work.

Mr. Borland's proposal runs counter to a movement whose members have evolved out of their own struggles and experiences the philosophy of a shorter workday. These workers have learned that shortening the hours of work is the fundamental step in protection and betterment.

If Mr. Borland really desired to further efficiency and economy in government work he ought to have recommended a very different policy. He should have recommended ways and means for developing initiative, for bringing out the best ability of all employees and for enabling each to do the work best adapted to his ability and training. He ought to have recommended a retirement system with pensions for those no longer able to render adequate service to the government.

There ought also to be agencies for adjusting difficulties that arise in the course of work between clerks and their chiefs, to provide for discussion of conflicting claims and conflicting purposes and to furnish a permanent means whereby those who are working can express their ideas and their demands in regard to things that concern themselves as well as the service.

Efficiency and economy in government service, as in all other kinds of work, will result only from organization—organization of the work, organization of employees, so as to bring out the best that is in them and for the development of a spirit of humanity, co-operation and democracy. The tendency in all government work has been toward the establishment of a bureaucratic system and all of the evils and pernicious effects of a bureaucratic system. Sooner or later the spirit of autocracy that is inherent in such a system crushes out the ambition, the individuality, the spontaneous spirit of work, that ought to be fostered in all employees as invaluable for the attainment of highest efficiency.

The attack upon their best interests and their rights aroused the government clerks to protest. When they manifested a desire to do something for their own protection a mass meeting was called and formal protest made against the Borland amendment. In this meeting the way for securing permanent betterment and protection of government employees was discussed. Government employees present manifested their desire and determination to organize and to affiliate themselves to the American Federation of Labor. Their action was in recognition of their need and in recognition of the fact that there had been but one agency to which they could turn in time of danger, an agency that proved itself an effective source of help.

It was the power and the influence of the American Federation of Labor that defeated the Borland amendment. To prevent recurrence of future Borland amendments and of similar dangers the course indicated by common sense is the promotion of such organization by government employees as to afford them protection.

The government, particularly a republican government, ought to establish relations with its employees that are in accord with the best concepts of human welfare and that assure justice and human rights. The government of the United States ought to be the model employer.—American Federationist.

HOPE OF LABOR.

In this labor movement we gather as the representatives and by direction of our organized fellow workers, and it is upon the labor movement that the toilers and the lovers of human freedom have set their hearts and hopes. They realize that the trade union movement of America is the historically developed potential force which bears the brunt and scars of battle and which makes sacrifices for right and justice for all, for all time. There is not a wrong against which we fail to protest or seek to remedy; there is not a right to which any of our fellows are entitled which it is not our duty, mission and work and struggle to attain. So long as there shall remain a wrong unrighted or a right denied there will be ample work for the labor movement to do.—Samuel Gompers.

LABOR'S PEACE CONGRESS

President Gompers of A. F. of L. Issues Call to World's Workers.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has issued an address to world labor in pursuance of the resolution adopted in the convention of the federation in November, 1914. He said in part:

The workers can refuse to be victims of the blunderers, the evil plans, the ambitions, of those responsible for this war. In their struggle against oppression have been born yearnings for human freedom, for better opportunities, for justice in life and work. During the centuries they have made progress—sometimes slow, it is true, but always progress. It has been a long fight from slavery to the present degree of freedom.

There is great opportunity in the immediate future for democracy and freedom. A century ago the feudal system died in the Napoleonic wars that convulsed Europe, and the third estate established their right to freedom and participation in the affairs of government and society.

Slowly but surely the workers have been making demands for recognition of their rights as human beings and as members of society and have established many of them.

Since the outbreak of war their economic importance, their political and military power have been tacitly and often officially recognized. Statesmen have recognized that organizations of wage earners are an integral part of organized society—part of the vitals of the nation.

In appreciation of their dignity and value it is the duty of the wage earners to make demands upon the world assembled in the next world congress that nothing touching the lives of the workers shall be determined without taking counsel with them. Such a demand made by the personal representatives of the world's wage earners assembled in the same time and at the same place as the world peace conference would have a tremendous effect upon the spirit of that congress.

Such a demand would set high standards of democracy and would give prominence to principles of human welfare that could not be ignored.

The labor movement is the great humanizing, democratizing influence in the affairs of nations, and it must have a place wherever the welfare of wage earners is concerned. The problem is to have the fullest and the best representation in the labor congress, and through it a voice and influence in the world congress.

BONUS FOR WORKERS.

General Electric Company to Distribute Millions to Employees.

The General Electric company of Schenectady, N. Y., and the plants of the company in other cities, have announced that all employees in the service of the company for five years or more would receive a bonus of 5 per cent of a year's salary, payable in two installments. It is estimated the company will distribute between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 in this way. According to the bulletin, the first installment will be payable on or before Aug. 1 and will be 5 per cent of the individual earnings for the six months ending June 30; the second on Feb. 1, 1917, on earnings for the six months ending Dec. 31. The announcement is made by E. W. Rice, Jr., president. By the two payment plan many who would not participate in the first distribution will share in the second, having completed the five years' service between June 30 and Dec. 31.

Urge Larger Compensation.

The executive committee of the Michigan State Federation of Labor has decided to submit to the referendum eleven amendments to the workmen's compensation law. These include increasing rates from 50 to 66 2-3 per cent; providing for earlier and longer medical attendance; providing for dependents; compensation for disfigurements and injuries not specified in the present law and increased compensation for permanent disabilities.

A Compensation Decision.

W. B. Scott of the Pennsylvania workmen's compensation board has decided that any wages paid by an employer to an employee for the first two weeks after the latter's injury are not to be included in the compensation the employee receives. The law provides that compensation starts two weeks after injury.

Miniature Zeppelin Dropping Bombs on England One of Former Sea Raiders Amusements—Party Finds Everything Spick and Span.

Norfolk, Va.—Many people would be surprised to learn that in neutral America a German Zeppelin is flying around dropping bombs on English soil, or at least English cliffs, and being in return bombarded by anti-air craft guns.

Time hangs heavy on the hands of the crew of the interned cruiser Eitel Friedrich, which is tied up at the navy yard here. Since the sailors took to escaping last summer the restrictions have been rigidly enforced, and any one sailing past the big boat before and since would be struck by the change in the appearance of the brass and wood work, which is now immaculately polished and scraped in an effort to kill time. German sailors can do many wonderful things, but even they are hard put to it to invent occupations for hundreds of active men, and Commander Thierichens asked the representative of a society in New York last autumn to send Christmas presents of games and puzzles and indoor sports rather than handkerchiefs and cakes and clothing. And lately a new diversion has been attempted.

From the clinkers of the furnace room the cliffs of Dover have been constructed at one end of the big dining saloon. They have been built in accurate imitation of the real ones and colored white with salt. On top is a lighthouse with air guns mounted at the base. At the farther end of the room rises a miniature Zeppelin numbered 1820, which flies around the room by electricity several times. It hovers for a moment over the lighthouse, drops several miniature bombs and makes its escape while the guns go off automatically and bombard the enemy craft with missiles.

After hearing of these performances a correspondent and some friends visited the German encampment. Landing at the navy yard, they passed the huge drydocks in which ships of tremendous tonnage looked like pygmies, and soon their attention was called to a sturdy, high bow ship, flying the fisheries flag. Her sides looked of enormous strength, being rounded away from a sharp bow in an unusual way. This was the famous Roosevelt, Peary's arctic ship, now in government employment to protect the seal fisheries.

One of the most interesting sights at Norfolk is the model village built by the German sailors.

At first sight the village resembled an arid waste of slag heaps, with piles of condemned material scattered all over, cinders, beaten earth and rubbish everywhere—not a tree, not a spear of grass, the acme of desolation. As they advanced they saw a pygmy village built in close formation—curious little houses in miniature yards, carved and painted in fantastic ways. This is the village the interned sailors are building out of waste material.

Before visiting it they went aboard the Eitel Friedrich, which is tied up at the dock and on which the sailors of both cruisers are now living.

As they were leaving the boat Captain Thierfelder of the Kronprinz Wilhelm joined them and escorted them to the village. Everything was found in spick and span shape, and resemblances of home scenes were many.

HOW

To Plan the Vegetable Garden and Plant It

CAREFUL planning while the frost is still in the ground is a test of the successful gardener. The garden planned a month or more in advance of first real spring days is the one from which the best results are usually obtained. In fact, many of the most desirable products of the garden are those which demand a week or two gentle nursing indoors or under the glass of the hotbed. Then, too, the man with a limited amount of garden space will find it well worth his while to lay his plans well in advance.

By consulting the garden manuals and giving attention to seasons of maturity he will be able to lay out his garden so as to be able to utilize every inch of space during almost the entire season. If he does not draw up his plans before he begins to cultivate he will undoubtedly find that much valuable space has been lost through lack of forethought.

Certain vegetables grow best during the spring and early summer, while from others the best results are gained by late plantings. In many cases the soil used for the early vegetables can be resown later in the season with later, or warm weather, vegetables. The gardener should acquaint himself with these conditions.

Beans and corn, for example, will flourish during almost the entire spring and summer. The first planting of these vegetables should be made about the beginning of May. Peas may be planted in April. From then until the 1st of August plantings should be made about every two or three weeks. This will insure the gardener a seasonable supply of these vegetables throughout the season.

A SPRING TIP.

How to Plan and Win Success In Your Gardening.

There are few things more fascinating than the development of a well planned garden. True, it will mean many hours' manual labor to prevent the weeds and insects from ruining your early spring labors, and the watering can or the garden hose will have to be called into use frequently, but labor will pay large dividends in benefits to the gardener, to say nothing of the reduction in the weekly budget of the household.

The tomato vines will need to be tied up and watched for cut worms, the corn will have to be hoed and so will the beans; the lettuce will have to be transplanted and the beets thinned out, and there will be a hundred and one other precautions that will have to be taken to insure the proper results, but each operation will have its special benefits and lessons that will more than repay for the trouble.

And during the development of his garden the wise gardener will note his successes and defeats and store that information away for use the following year. Every failure will be an experience to be avoided the following year and every success an experience to be enlarged upon. He will learn things for himself, and every bit of knowledge gained in that way will be worth a whole chapter written for his benefit by some one else.

HOW TO PROTECT YOUR PIANO.—Half the pianos of this country catch colds exactly as we do. They get hoarse or have a cough or a stiff note or some similar complaint, which cannot be cured by home remedies, but which requires tedious and expensive doctoring. In order to prevent these avoidable ailments a piano should be kept in a moderately warm room, where the temperature is even, say 60 or 70 degrees, the year round, not cold one day and hot the next. The instrument should not, however, be too near the source of heat. It should be kept closed and covered with a felt cloth when not in use, particularly in frosty weather. Always place the piano close to but not against an inside wall.

How to Fix Tears in Bronze Kid Shoes When the Children Stub Them.

Often when bronze kid shoes are almost new a small piece of the kid will get torn off or turn up and still remain hanging to the shoe. Straighten out the wrinkles, moisten the glue side of a postage stamp or envelope flap, apply quickly to both raw sides of the kid, press into place and hold firmly for a few minutes. The glue of the stamp or envelope flap is so evenly spread that there is no surplus amount to run on to the outside of the kid, making it sticky. This can also be used to mend most any kind of soft kid shoes.

How to Treat a Bad Headache That Comes From Nerves.

In cases of violent headaches it frequently acts as a great relief to bathe the forehead with a sponge wrung out of very hot water. Repeat this as often as the sponge cools. When the head feels rested dash on cold water, wipe dry and lie down for awhile, keeping the eyes closed. Next sit up and turn the head around from side to side slowly until tired. This will have a wonderfully beneficial effect on the circulation and will ward off headache if persisted in.

During Course of Evening Generals, Colonels, Majors, Captains and Lieutenants Exchange Greetings—New York Hotel Made Over to Represent Military Reservation on the Hudson.

New York.—From the Atlantic to the Pacific West Pointers recently celebrated the one hundred and fourteenth anniversary of the founding of the Military academy at West Point. In New York more than 300 dined at the Hotel Astor, as many more dined in San Francisco, while about 200 sat about the tables in Chicago. In lesser numbers the sons of the Point gathered in St. Louis, in New Orleans, in Galveston, in San Antonio, while in far away Honolulu and Manila other hundreds assembled and sang the anthem "Hail, Alma Mater, Dear," and yelled the famous "Rah! rah! rah!" of the "army."

Through the courtesy of the American Telephone company the diners in New York, Chicago and San Francisco were linked together, and in the course of the evening generals and colonels and majors and captains and lieutenants exchanged greetings and cracked jokes at one another's expense across the continent. For instance, Colonel John N. Bellinger of Governors Island sympathized with his old cadet chum Holabird in Chicago because of the latter's thinning locks, while Holabird retorted by asking the South Carolina colonel why it was that his forty odd summers did not make him "less noisy than was the case when you were the noisiest youngster at West Point."

Major General J. Franklin Bell, commanding the western department of the army, with headquarters in San Francisco, who was the ranking officer at the Pacific coast function, talked with Colonel J. C. F. Tillson in New York and was surprised to learn that the colonel was not one of the "lucky chaps" chasing Villa. Had the United States kept Vera Cruz and had Frederick Funston remained in command there, General Bell, who was relieved a year ago of the border command by the little Kansan, would probably be directing operations from San Antonio.

Brigadier General E. C. Young, who was also in San Francisco, asked Colonel W. H. Hart, who dined in New York, some very personal questions, while General Charles King, the famous army novelist, who dined with the crowd in Chicago, was overheard by the New Yorkers to tell Colonel W. H. Hunter, who was in Chicago, that he might write a story based on the pursuit of Pancho Villa. Lieutenant Phil Mathews of Fort Totten also got a word in and told Lieutenant A. J. Davis, who was in San Francisco, that West Point was sure to beat Annapolis again next fall.

The grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, in which the New York dinner was served, was made over to represent West Point.

Among those at the dinner were Colonel C. P. Townsley, the superintendent of the Military academy; Major General George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama canal zone; Colonel John L. Chamberlain, inspector general of the eastern department; Colonel Edwin F. Glenn, chief of staff on Governors Island; Captain Halstead Dorey, aid on the staff of Major General Leonard Wood; Colonels C. P. Echols, Samuel E. Tillman of the academic staff of West Point; Colonel O. B. Mitcham and Major W. I. (Texas) Westervelt, the ordnance experts from Sandy Hook; ex-Police Commissioners Theodore A. Bingham and Douglas I. McKay, Captain Matthew B. Hanna, Brigadier General H. F. Hodges, commanding the North Atlantic coast artillery district; Colonel John M. Carson, Captain George R. Goethals, Captain H. J. Koehler, Colonel C. M. Truitt, Colonel W. G. Haan, Colonel Beverly W. Dunn, Lloyd Farragut, Major W. J. Hawkins, Colonel Delamere Skerrett, Captain G. W. Beavers and William G. ## SEVEN VOCATIONS TO WHICH LIFE INSURANCE IS REFUSED

Actresses Too Temperamental, While Salesmen Are Best Risks.

Your life is not worth a dime, not even a battered up nickel, according to insurance companies, if you are listed among the "fatal seven," which consist of steeplejacks, aviators, soldiers, dynamite employees, jockeys, auto racers and grooms who ride to hounds.

Insurance companies keep a closer tab on deaths than anybody else in the world. Deaths cost them money, and to reduce the risks they have figured things out on a percentage basis.

They will not insure persons in some walks of life. They will take a chance on a soldier in time of peace, but a "rider" in his policy makes it void during war. The other chaps in the "fatal seven" they won't insure at all.

There are other "undesirables"—sailors, prison guards, bridge builders, ironworkers, players in the movies. Insurance companies charge high rates when insuring any persons in these occupations.

Actresses are too temperamental for traveling, and they have to travel, according to the risk firms. Distillery workers pay $20 per $1,000 for policies.

Doctors are not held good risks—too liable to accidents.

Best risks are commercial travelers, because they're so familiar with the perils of travel they seldom get hurt. Only 10 per cent of their accident policies are collected.

Schoolteachers also are good risks.

SAFETY FOR ENGINE FIREMEN

New Device Is Designed to Prevent Death Plunge.

A common form of railroad accident is that which often takes place when, by some accident to the coupling between them, the tender and the locomotive become separated. In such cases the air brakes are automatically applied and the runaway train brought to a stop. But if the fireman is at his post on the tender the sudden application of the brakes is sufficient to throw him off his feet, and he is hurled headlong under the wheels of his own train, which has not yet been brought to a complete standstill.

Matthew J. Slattery and Charles A. Diehm, two railroad men of Philadelphia, have been recently awarded a patent on a device which is designed to save the fireman's life in this emergency. The apparatus consists of a metal net, carried beneath the floor of the tender, which in case of a parting between the locomotive and tender will be released and drawn forward to provide a safety net to catch any one who may be standing on the tender at the time of the accident.

BATTLE ISLAND CASE CONTINUES

State's Expert Tells Why Ontario Company's Power Was More Valuable Than at Paper Mill.

Syracuse— John H. Cook, one of the best known hydraulic experts in the country, was put through a rigorous cross examination yesterday by attorneys for the Battle Island Paper Company, when the claim trial was continued before Justices Ackerson and Fennell in the Court of Claims.

Thew itness was asked how it was that, when ascertaining the value of the power rights and plant of the Battle Island Power Company he capitalized it at 11 per cent, while, when testifying in a similar suit of the Ontario Knitting Company, he capitalized the power development there at six per cent. He was asked to explain this apparent discrepancy by William Nottingham, counsel for the claimant, and ther eason he gave was that the Battle Island power was fluctuating and inconstant, while the power of the other firm was constant and more productive. His answers did not satisfy attorneys for the company, and the cross examination ended with little more gained from the witness. Both sides were equally certain that they had scored a victory in the cross examination.

Hypothetical valuations, set up by the witness when previously testifying upon assumptions, caused some confusion in cross-examination and a long and detailed process of questioning resulted.

Shortly before noon, Linwood B. Stuart, an expert on sulphite production, took the stand for the State, which hoped to prove through him that the Battle Island Paper company never paid profits, simply because foreign competitors were able to undersell them. The high price of wood, it is charged, also was a factor in causing the unprofitableness of the enterprise, and the State hoped to prove through the witness that because of this it cost the company more to produce sulphite than the other concerns were able to sell it for.

Deputy Attorney-Generals Edward J. Mone and Sanford W. Smith, representing the state marshaled o souad of experts to question the proof submitted by the company. Last week many of these experts were on the stand, and during most of next week others will offer testimony.

Mr. Cook said that conditions were entirely different at the plants. He explained that the Ontario Knitting Company's water power was the more valuable because the water head, or the level above the dam, was greater than that of the Battle Island company.

About Sulphite Market

L. B. Stuart of Watertown, an expert on sulphite production, was sworn by the state to show the condition of the sulphite market at the time the state appropriated the property of the Battle Island company. The witness said that at that time the tariff had been lowered, and that European competition seriously affected the business in this country.

Attorneys for the company, in cross examination, tried to show that the business has improved since, but the court would not admit it because the change transpired after the time of appropriation.

Six more cases against the state were settled in the Court of Claims before Judge Cunningham both sides agreeing to stipulations, which dispense with long and tedious trials where the amounts involved are comparatively small. So far the court has been able to settle more than 30 cases during its term here and the chances are that before the session is ended more than 100 will have been settled or dismissed.

Among those claims settled this morning was that of Horace E. Wilcox of Granby, who was suing for $620 for overflow damage. A stipulation of $40 was suggested by Deputy Attorney-General M. H. Quirk and this quickly ended this matter.

Elmer Bogardue, also of Granby, who asked $512 for overflow damage, agreed to accept $40 for his claim.

John F. Barker, also of Granby, asked $250 for overflow damage and settled his claim for $25.

J. Warren Tilden and Catherine Tilden of Volney, Oswego County, had a comparatively large claim against the state, asking $4 000 for leakage damoges. The claimants enumerated the property destroyed or depreciated by canal leakage, which included a well, and the court settled the case for $600.

Elmer E. Taylor, also of Volney, asked $3,400 for overflow damage, but a stipulation of $663 set this claim aside.

Judge Cunningham had an unusually busy morning and heard evidence in the trial of the $6,000 claim of Anna Slive of Syracuse who asks damages because while participating in one of the Karnival parades her foot was caught in the Salina st. bridge, when she was pushed into the opening by the crowds. Two witnesses testified for the claimant, who is suing through her guardian, relative to the conditions pertaining at the time of the accident. Anna Rooth and Mildred Krangle both gave evidence. Deputy Attorney General Henry P. Nevins appeared for the state while Ray B. Smith and James Setright appeared for the claimant.

Kansas prisoners working on the public roads are to have one day out of every three taken off their sentences for faithful and cheerful work, according to the National Committee on Prison Labor. The warden was instrumental in securing the passage of the bill providing the time allowance noted, and states that if is proposed to furnish 25 men and one of the penitentiary officers to superintend the work and establish the road camps. The municipalities for which the work is done are to pay the state $1 per day per prisoner. About one-half of this will be used for feeding and caring for the prisoners and the remainder will be paid to thep risoner or his family.

This news is encouraging by reason of the fact that the young harpist has only recently entered the Ohio college. # ABOUT GARNISHING

Some of the Sprigs That Make Food Attractive.

THEY APPEAL TO THE EYE.

There Are Two Sorts of Trimming, One For Flavor and One For Decoration—Garnishing Often Turns a Despised Dish Into a Favorite.

With spring spleeniness upon us, it is well for housewives to bait appetites. Very often a dish may be delicious to taste, but unattractive to the eye, and the eye judges it before the palate does. So make it attractive to the eye if you would have it a successful dish.

There are two sorts of garnishes—those that add flavor as well as decoration and those that are only decorative and do not add flavor. Mushrooms, for instance, served with a ragout of meat, add to both appearance and taste. A bright green leaf under half a muskmelon adds only to appearance. This second class of garnishes need not be served when they are used on the serving dish.

Parsley is perhaps the most useful garnish. In sprigs with cold meat, minced with soup and vegetables and salads, it is always fresh in color and tempting in taste.

Mushrooms are useful because, canned, they always can be kept on hand. And so can peas. A mound of canned peas served in the middle of an Irish stew makes it far daintier than a mound of plain boiled potatoes. Potatoes, however, can be used for garnishing. Scoop raw potatoes with a round scoop and boil them. Serve them with melted butter and parsley for a garnish, or force soft mashed potatoes through a stiff paper cone and brown in the oven, or fry brown small rounds of potatoes, or use French fried potatoes, and potato garnish is suitable with cold meat.

Green and red peppers, too, can be used to garnish vegetables, meats and salads. An egg salad is much improved if it is dotted with bits of red pepper. Minced green pepper or shredded green pepper adds both taste and looks to potato and cabbage salad.

Beets and carrots can be cut in rings or stars, cooked tender very carefully and then used to garnish substantial meat dishes.

Barberries are one of the purely ornamental garnishes. Holly, too, can be used in season, and bits of evergreen can often be called on to help make a simple dish attractive.

Remember that the garnishing of a dish will often change it from something not liked to a favorite with the family.

BEDROOM SLIPPERS.

Various Nether Comforts That May Also Be Good Looking.

It is possible to have attractive bedroom slippers which match your negligee, or at least are in accord with it. There are endless varieties of "mules" in gay colored silk or satin, edged with silk cord and decorated with tiny rosebuds. This is the kind of work that the expert needlewoman enjoys, but besides such dainty trifles more sensible everyday ones can be bought which do not clash with one's beauty loving ideas.

Kid slippers, with low, comfortable heels, may be bought in pinks, blues and browns. Very similar to them are the felt styles, whose instep is decorated with a cut out design of the felt over a contrasting color.

White kid well covered with a Japanese embossed design are shown. Most luxurious are the slippers of bright quilted satin, whose ribbon rosettes hold a tiny rhinestone.

Made with only a toe covering, but minus the heels attached to "mules," are other models, some covered with white flannel, decorated with a satin bow; others, to be used en route to the bath, are made of checked toweling, the edges bound with corduroy and the sole being very woolly.

FOR SPRING WEDDINGS.

One Attractive Way to Give the Bride a Shower.

With spring already upon us, the thought of spring weddings is now in the air. This is the ripe season for linen showers and other showers of household necessaries given to the bride by all her friends. The girl who is to be married in April will be the recipient of many an entertainment before she is safely wedded, but she will enjoy nothing more than a shower if her friends have any novel ideas on the subject.

The chief point in a shower must always be its surprise; otherwise it would not be a shower. If you are thinking of giving such an affair for some friend who is soon to be married be sure that every detail is kept a secret from her. That is half the fun.

A novel idea for a linen shower can be executed in the following way: Invite the bride to be to spend an evening at your home with a few old friends. See that she arrives the first and is comfortably seated and chatting when the other guests begin to arrive. Of course the latter are in the secret or else there would be no shower.

Each guest must come in carrying an umbrella. The bride may not notice the first one, but she will certainly remark before long that every one who enters carries an umbrella. She will probably ask before the last one arrives if it is raining, in which case the guest questioned should answer, "No, but it looks like a shower."

When all the guests have arrived each one must gain possession of her own umbrella in case it has been laid aside on her entrance. At a given signal, which should be some such remark from the hostess as "Did you say it looked like a shower?" the guests should all open their umbrellas with the answer, "It certainly does."

From the steel ribs of each umbrella should be suspended by a string the parcel holding the piece of linen which the guest intends to give the bride. Any big bundles, like a tablecloth, will make the umbrella a bit bulky when closed, but in such case the guest will have to smuggle her umbrella in unnoticed. But most linen pieces can be done up in such small parcels that they can easily be concealed in a closed umbrella.

At the signal to open the parcels will all hang down by their strings. The guests must then hold their umbrellas over the bride-to-be's head. The hostess provides her with scissors to cut down her various bundles, and the point of the shower is made apparent.

blackbird. The lines are good, and the tam effect is becoming to many types of women. The veil is a hexagonal mesh with a floral scroll pattern.

A Hygiene Note.

When a child begins with a cold isolate it from the other children in the house and do not let it attend school until it is better. Not only is a cold contagious in itself, but in children a cold is often the beginning of a contagious disease, and it is not fair to other children to let them come in contact with a cold until it is proved to be nothing serious.

There is no better gargle or nose douche for a beginning inflammation than salt and water. Of course the solution must be weaker for the nose. Nose douches should be taken only on a doctor's advice, as the membrane of the nose is very delicate and the treatment must necessarily vary with the child. Never let the child go out of doors after spraying nose and throat.

Roxbury Cakes.

One-fourth cupful of butter, one-half cupful sour milk, one teaspoonful cinnamon, two eggs, one-half cupful of raisins, one-half cupful brown sugar, one-half cupful corn sirup, one and one-half cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful of soda, one-half cupful English walnuts.

Cream butter, add sugar and beaten egg yolks. Mix and sift dry ingredients and add to first mixture alternately with the corn sirup and the sour milk. Add egg whites beaten dry, chopped raisins and nuts. Bake in small pans. This will make eighteen to twenty little cakes.

Two International Spies

By ETHEL HOLMES

Before the pan-European war we Americans supposed that our affairs did not interest other powers. Since then we have awakened to the fact that every government has a spy system within the territory of every other government. England, France, Italy and other powers keep secret service workers in other countries. Of all the Germans have the most perfect and extended organization. And yet some of the principal fields of the working of the German propaganda in America have originated with the British secret service men. While these systems may have been strengthened and enlarged since the opening of the war, there is reason to believe that they have always existed.

Austria and Russia have always been watching each other on account of the persistent encroachment of the two on the Balkans. Some years ago two Russian girls, sisters, went to Vienna as spies for the czar upon the intentions of the emperor of Austria regarding schemes to carve Austrian provinces out of Balkan territory. One of these girls, Maria, obtained a position as copyist in the Austrian foreign office. The other, Vera, kept house for the two in rooms in an apartment building. Since they were in the pay of the Russian government they did not want for anything.

Maria was under the orders of Caspar Grenthall, a man who conducted one of the bureaus of the department in which she worked. He was a handsome and otherwise attractive man, and when he made love to her she reciprocated. When they were not engaged in the office he took her out to the gardens and other places of amusement and by his kindness gradually won her heart.

It was not long before Grenthall proposed marriage to Maria. Though she loved him, she hesitated to accept him. Indeed, his being a spy complicated the affair, making her very unhappy.

Then suddenly Maria received a shock. One day when she was at work a girl occupying a desk beside her slipped a bit of paper among those before her. Maria unfolded it and read that she was suspected of purloining a certain document that had passed through her hands. Grenthall had won her in order to find out if she were stealing such documents. Her room would be searched that evening.

Maria was not only disturbed at discovering that Grenthall had deceived her, but in terror at the suspicion that existed against her. Either her life or a long imprisonment would pay the penalty. As soon as office hours were over she went to her room and told her sister what had occurred. She had stolen the paper in question, and it was concealed in their apartment. Taking it from its hiding place, she was thinking what to do with it when there was a sound of persons coming up the stairs without. She had only time to thrust the paper into her bosom when the door was thrown open and in walked Grenthall, accompanied by several men. He made no apology for his entrance or for having played the spy upon Maria. He and his men began a search of the rooms.

Evidently he had expected to surprise Maria and, if the missing paper was in her possession, to find it concealed in her apartments. Not finding it after a thorough search, it occurred to him that it might be on her person. He sent one of the men with him for a woman to make the search. When she arrived he told her to find out whether Maria had the paper.

Maria, when the man who had won her heart to betray her entered, gave him a look of anger, then, when the searching began, fell upon her sister's neck, sobbing piteously. While the two women were clasped in each other's arms, their bosoms close up against each other, Vera contrived to take the paper from her sister's bosom and slip it into her own.

Maria was the one suspected, but it was not to be expected that Vera would be let off without examination. Believing that she would be searched, she cast about for some means of getting rid of the paper. She started to leave the apartment, but Grenthall ordered her back. When the woman came she made the search in one of the bedrooms, the men remaining elsewhere. Vera was with her sister. Maria was required to take off her clothes, which were carefully examined by the searcher and laid upon a table. While her back was turned Vera contrived to slip the paper into a pocket of one of the garments that had been examined. Her sister saw her do this, and hope sprang up within her.

When the search was finished and nothing found the result was reported to Greathall. Having done all he could in the matter, he withdrew his assistants and went away while Maria was dressing.

The paper was a valuable one for the Russian government, and the sisters were anxious to save it. That night Vera, dressed as a boy, stepped out of the apartment and gained a lower suit without being noticed. The next morning, though a watch had been established, she got to the street and away without being recognized. Maria went to the foreign office, but was discharged. Had it been known instead of suspected that she was guilty she would have been arrested.

Vera succeeded in reaching Russia with the paper and was paid a large price for it. Her sister finally rejoined her there.

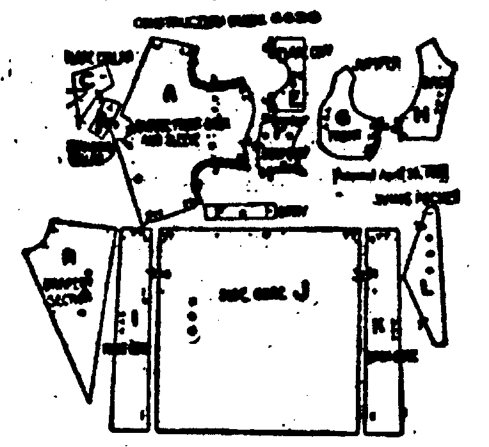
Wet sand is a new shade of gray that is becoming to youthful figures, especially when brightened with a touch of blue, rose or pink. In this instance, the belt is of green satin and the gauze collar is outlined with the narrowest band of green. To make the dress in medium size requires 4½ yards 40-inch taffeta and 2⅝ yards 36-inch chiffon for the blouse, cuffs and collar.

Begin the construction of the dress with the blouse. Close underarm and sleeve seams, then close center-back seam. Turn hem at notches, gather lower edge of blouse between double "TT" perforations, and 2 inches above. Adjust stay underneath gathers, center-backs even, large "O" perforation at upper edge at under-arm seam; and bring front edge to center-front. Sew square collar to neck edge, notches and center-backs even. If long sleeve is desired, gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of cuff as notched to large "O" perforation; sew to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve; and bring seam of cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve.

For the wing pocket on the skirt, upper edge of pocket being marked close the seam. Adjust on skirt, fold pocket, matching notches and by small "o" perforations. Turn under edges of front and back gores on slot perforations and baste. Gather upper edges of gores between double "TT" perforations. Form inverted plaits in drapery bringing the "o" perforation and tack. Adjust on



"T" perforations together on small side gore, small "o" perforations at "o" perforation and tack. Adjust on side edges; and the upper edges even; bring the edges of drapery together at the line of small "o" perforations in skirt.

Lap the folded edges of front and back gores on the side gore and drapery, notches and edges underneath even; stitch 1 inch from folded edges leaving edges to the left of center-front free above large "O" perforation in front gore for a placket. Adjust skirt stitching upper edge, over upper row of gathers in blouse; if made without drapery, bring large "O" perforation in skirt at under-arm seam.

To make the jumper, plait underarm edge of front placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Close right under-arm seam as notched; finish left edges for a closing. Lap the upper pointed end of front, on the back matching small "o" perforations and close with buttons and buttonholes.

Trim the deep cuffs with tiny buttons from top to wrist.

ORANGE VARIATIONS.

ORANGE SALAD.—Cut off the tops of large oranges. Carefully remove pulp. Mix pulp with an equal quantity of sliced bananas and one-half the quantity of walnut meats. Marinate with French dressing. Place in orange shells. Chill thoroughly and serve with toasted crackers.

Orange Delight.—Soak half a box of gelatin in one gill of cold water fifteen minutes; now add three gills of boiling water, stir until dissolved, put into it half a pint of granulated sugar, three gills of sour orange juice and the strained juice of one lemon. Stand in a cool place. Harden in the refrigerator. Place a couple of rounds of sliced orange in each individual dish, cover with the jelly, then a layer of soft custard or whipped cream as a mask. Serve ice cold with lady fingers.

Orange Icing.—Put one running over tablespoonful of strained orange juice in a bowl, one teaspoonful of lemon juice and one teaspoonful of sherry wine or brandy, with the grated yellow rind of one small sour orange; let it stand for twenty minutes; then stir in half a teacupful of confectioner's sugar, then the slightly beaten yolk of one egg and stir. Now add sufficient confectioners' sugar to make it the consistency to spread easily over the cake. It should not run. Spread evenly, then put in a cool, dry place to stiffen.

Orange Pudding.—Take two eggs, two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, grated rind and juice of one large orange, one pint of milk, one tablespoonful of butter and four tablespoonfuls of breadcrumbs. Beat the eggs until light and add sugar and orange juice. Scald milk and add butter and pour over the crumbs and add to the eggs, sugar and orange juice. Mix well, bake slowly and serve very cold.

To Make the Garden a Livable Place

TO make the garden livable it must be furnished. Nature may provide the setting and the color scheme, but man's ingenuity is required to supply the seats and summer houses, the bird baths and pools, the pergolas and sun dials or as many of these things as it may seem expedient and wise to have. Garden furniture is less expensive than it used to be—less expensive and better. Moreover, there is a great variety. Good rustic pieces may be made at home, or, time and skill being lacking, they may be bought. So also may delightful old English seats and tables, while pergolas and arbors of artistic design and good workmanship may be obtained ready made and set up in the garden with but very little labor. In fact, every sort of garden furniture from summer house down to bird houses is now on the market. There are even artistic bird baths and pedestals made of wood and much cheaper than those of marble or even of composition.

Of course cement has come to take a prominent place in the garden and is used in making pedestals for sun dials, bird baths and pools as well as for benches and seats. To many minds no garden has really been brought to date until it has been equipped with a pool in which water lilies may be grown, with the glistening sides of goldfish flashing among them. Such pools need not be at all expensive and are not difficult to construct when good Portland cement is the material used.

Made a Social Outcast.

In court circles in England it is a serious matter to incur royal displeasure. The man or woman who does so intentionally ceases to be recognized by his majesty, which means social extinction. The offender's name is struck out of the visiting list of every person who is anybody in society, and should the offender be a man he is politely informed that his resignation from his club or clubs would not be out of place. No man or woman of social repute will in future know him, and if he be in the army or navy he has no option but to resign, for he will find himself cut dead by every one of his brother officers.—London M. ## A Sleepy Time Story That Will Amuse the Little Folks.

Polly Ann and Little Ned were all ears when Uncle Ben began to tell a sleepy time story. He told about

BUNNY RABBIT'S WORKSHOP.

There was a great deal of bustle and stir in the Bunny Rabbit's workshop.

Just then a lively little rabbit with inquisitive ears came in carrying a basket of eggs dyed beautiful bright colors. "Everything is going along finely," he said briskly. "My eggs are really gorgeous this year, speckled and spotted and brilliant as well. How goes it with you, old pal? Is the chocolate right? Really, chocolate eggs are so popular these days that they must be made especially fine to please all the little ones!"

"Oh, right enough, right enough!" answered the Bunny Rabbit wearily as he dipped the creamy cocoanut eggs into the shiny chocolate and laid them out to dry. "I can't complain of my work, but I do complain of the grass!"

"What's wrong with the grass?" replied the inquisitive rabbit as he deftly decorated the eggs with white sugar.

"Oh, there's nothing the matter with the grass, nothing at all, except that a week ago there wasn't any to be seen."

"Now, now, Bunny Rabbit, don't you borrow trouble," said his little friend as he flourished his sugar cone. "I'm sure the grass is doing bravely. Just you have a little faith in it. If we all love the children, as we do, then each one of us is working just as hard as we can to please them Easter morning. Be sure of this, and be sure that the sun and rain and balmy wind are helping the grass to grow, just as I am helping you to make bushels and bushels of eggs, just to please the little ones. When we work with love nothing can really go wrong, you know."

Now, when Bunny Rabbit heard this he stopped getting angry and began to work harder than ever. "I suppose you are right, little friend. I'll just live up to my part of the bargain and leave the grass to do the same. At least I can hide the eggs in straw nests if the worst comes to the worst."

So love and peace reigned in the workshop all the rest of that Easter Saturday. That night when Bunny Rabbit and his little pal stole quietly about the earth, laden with lovely eggs and gifts for the children, they saw that what seemed a miracle had happened. There in the light of the Easter moon the grass was waving, long and green and sparkling with dew, as though with happy tears.

The Camel's Coat.

Did you ever see a two hump camel at the zoo or at a circus? In winter it has a long, shaggy coat, and in summer the shaggy hair comes off the back, just as if he threw off his heavy coat as father does when warm weather comes.

the chestnut, walnut and hickories of the northern woods, but in southern Florida the cocoanut may be had at any time of year, for the nut ripens at all seasons. This nut is the fruit of a species of palm that grows from sixty to 100 feet tall. The nut is protected by a coarse husk, about two inches in thickness. The young gentleman who has been so successful as a nut gatherer is Master Leveritt S. Shaw, son of Mrs. Quincy Adams Shaw 2d of Boston.

HOMEMADE BREAD.

How to Make the Staff of Life Quickly and Well.

Break two cakes of yeast into a cupful of water at blood temperature. Put a tablespoonful of sugar on the yeast to stimulate its quick growth. While this soaks, warm two cupfuls of milk with a cupful of water. This, with the water over the yeast, makes a quart of wetting sufficient for four loaves.

In a large mixing bowl put several sieves of flour and make a depression in the middle of the flour, in which put a level tablespoonful of salt and a heaping tablespoonful of lard. Pour the liquid and the yeast upon the flour and mix with the hands, working the flour from the outside into the liquid in the middle of the mass. Make a stiff dough and lift the ball out, putting away any remaining flour for future use. If the flour is granular let the dough lie on the board for ten minutes, covered with a warm bowl, that the flour may properly absorb the moisture. If the flour is not granular this wait is not necessary.

Now shape the dough without kneading, lay the ball in a buttered bowl and butter the surface of the dough to keep it soft. Cover and let it double in a warm place, an hour to an hour and a half. If you wish still further to hurry it set the bowl in warm water and place a smaller bowl of warm water on the lid of the large bowl containing the dough.

When doubled shape quickly into the baking pans for the second rising and bake when again light. This recipe is excellent for use when one must have bread in a hurry. Half of the dough may be made into crusty rolls.

Shampoo For White Hair.

The very best shampoo for white hair is the white of an egg beaten into a pint of soft, cool water. Rub the hair with the egg, making a soft lather, after wetting the hair with cold water and finish the same as with other shampoo, except in the last rinsing water, which should be cold. A few drops of the best indigo, not ordinary bluing, should be added to tinge the water. This acts exactly as does bluing on white goods, leaving the hair a pure white and not in the least tinged with yellow.

Pale eyebrows and lashes make a face expressionless. They can be coaxed into a better growth by rubbing the eyebrows nightly with vaseline and applying to the roots of both the eyebrows and eyelashes a tonic made by mixing five grains of sulphate of quinine with one ounce of sweet almond oil. Apply this with a fine sable brush which comes for the purpose.

Cheap Fruit Cake.

Cream one cupful of sugar and one half cupful of butter; then add three tablespoonfuls of molasses and one beaten egg, one small tablespoonful of cinnamon, one teaspoonful of mixed spices, one cupful of sour milk, with one teaspoonful of salt to foam; one half teaspoonful of salt, one cupful of chopped raisins, and you may add citron and chopped figs, which will make it much nicer; two cupfuls of flour, adding alternately with the milk till all is used. Beat thoroughly. Flour the fruit and bake in a moderate oven.

Free Muscles.

Garters are, happily, being relegated to the errors of the past. It stands to reason that any tightening on such a busy and important part of the leg is dangerous, and many men and women owe varicose veins to the garters of their youth.

CLAIM TO HAVE FOUND SCARLET FEVER GERM

Boston Pathologists Report Discovery of Bacillus—New York Physician Skeptical.

Boston.—Dr. F. B. Mallory, pathologist of the Boston City hospital, and his assistant, Dr. E. M. Medlar, have discovered the bacillus that causes scarlet fever, and it is believed it will not be very difficult to work out an antitoxin or vaccine for its prevention and cure.

This important discovery is laconically described by Dr. Mallory and Dr. Medlar in a thousand word article in the current issue of the Journal of Medical Research entitled "The Etiology of Scarlet Fever."

It is largely owing to the short life of the actual germ that it has evaded discovery so long. The germs are found soon after the skin eruption appears and usually find lodgment first in the tonsils or at the root of the tongue. The germ is less virulent than the diphtheria bacillus, although it infects practically the same localities. Dr. Mallory says it is a "grampositive bacilli."

"A vaccine for the disease would be the more important," says Dr. Mallory, "so as to render nurses immune to the disease. Scarlet fever is not conveyed, as many suppose, from the scaling of the patient. When that takes place all the germs in the body are dead."

It was said by a New York physician that a number of doctors have claimed the discovery of the bacillus of scarlet fever, but have failed to substantiate their claims.

FINDS BURIED GOLD.

Mrs. Grey Dug It Up, but Mrs. Judkins Buried It, Is Belief.

Chico, Cal.—Fifty dollars in gold, believed to have been buried more than twenty-five years ago, was discovered here recently by Mrs. John Grey, wife of a shoe merchant of this city, while digging in her yard. Mrs. Grey, while seeking lily bulbs, turned up an old can and found in it, wrapped up in the remains of a handkerchief, the gold.
